VOLUME III

(Pages 999 to 1498)

12116 Mrs. Bereniece Baldwin called as a witness on behalf of Petitioner, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

DIRECT EXAMINATION

By MR. DENUNZIO:

12143 Q. Mrs. Baldwin, did you have a membership card for the years of 1949, 1950, and 1951? A. No, I did not.

Q. Why did you not have membership cards for those years? A. None were issued for those years.

Q. Do you know why membership cards were not issued for the years 1949, 1950, and 1951? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who told you the reason?

12144 THE WITNESS: Helen Allison Winter, Phil Schatz.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. What were you told specifically in connection with the non-issuance of cards for that year?

MR. ABT: May we have the time and place, Mr. Chairman?

MR. BROWN: The time and place? Will you give that, Mrs. Baldwin?

THE WITNESS: Yes. It was in the District Office headquarters the latter part of 1948 when we would usually get ready for registration in the fall of the year preceding, and I was told at that time, in the morning by Helen Allison, and in the afternoon by Phil Schatz, that there would be no cards issued for security reasons.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. For security reasons. You have testified previously that in 1947 you assisted in the registration of membership and the collection of dues both for the District headquarters and the 14th Congressional Club. Where were those membership dues records kept? A. To which do you mean? The 14th or the complete State of Michigan?

Q. The 14th and the State of Michigan. A. They were both kept in my home.

Q. Kept in your home? A. In my home.

12145 Q. Why were they kept in your home?

MR. ABT: I object.

MR. BROWN: I will allow it. The witness may answer.

THE WITNESS: Helen Allison had told me that they did not wish records, membership records, dues records, kept at the district office because they might be searched.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. When did she tell you that? A. She told me that just prior to my activity in registration. That would be about September of 1947.

Q. Do you know what was happening during that period of time whereby she thought it would be not safe to keep those records in the district party headquarters?

* * * * * * * * * * *

12146 THE WITNESS: I was told that that would be a security reason, in case the office was searched, because the Mundt-Nixon bill was up at that time and they were frightened that the office might be searched.

MR. BROWN: Who told you this?

THE WITNESS: Helen Allison told me that.

MR. BROWN: When did she tell you that?

THE WITNESS: At the Party headquarters sometime in September of 1947.

MR. BROWN: Very well.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. Did these records remain in your home? A. For a short period until some of them were taken out.

Q. By whom and when were some of these records taken out, and under what circumstances? A. In Novem-

12147 ber, about the middle of November 1947, Phil Schatz came to my home, went through the files that I was keeping there, destroyed all trade union cards and any lists of clubs that I had, except those which I had not tabulated as yet. He asked that I put those untabulated after they had been recorded in an envelope and keep them for him personally.

Q. Will you tell us who Phil Schatz was? A: Phil Schatz was the organizational secretary in 1947.

Q. At the time of that visit from Phil Schatz did he destroy or take away all of the cards in your possession? A. No. About a week later, ten days at the most, he came back to my home and destroyed all of the registration cards, that is, the individual card which gives the full status of an individual member. He destroyed those, and he also destroyed other records that I had, that is, membership names by the club.

Q. Did any records remain in your possession which had the names of Communists on them, the names of members of the Communist Party? A. No.

Q. Did Phil Schatz at that time tell you the reason for destroying the cards? A. He didn't for those particular people—12148 Q. Give me the conversation. Did he tell you why he was destroying the records? A. Yes, he did. The number one reason was because they had received a membership card through the mail and the envelope had been opened. He said for security reasons he didn't want any data lying around.

Q. Mrs. Baldwin, during your membership in the Communist Party did you know a person by the name of Bill Allan? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is Bill Allan? A. He is a correspondent for the Daily Worker, and he was also Chairman or organizer for the Lower East Side Section of the Communist Party.

Q. Of what district? A. District 7.

Q. Did you attend a meeting in the early part of 1948 where he spoke? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where was the meeting held? A. It was held at the Civic Center, Detroit.

Q. When was it held? A. About April.

Q. Did you attend that meeting? A. Yes, I did.

12149 Q. What was the purpose of that meeting? A. He outlined security measures for the Party.

Q. Tell us what he said at that meeting. A. He told us that all clubs should prepare to call emergency meetings and that the section itself should be supplied with mimeograph machines, mimeograph papers, and office supplies, and that no records were to be kept of members within the club or within the section, no telephone calls were to be made.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did he state anything as to what was to be done about dues collected, and so forth? A. Yes, he did. He said all moneys collected from the clubs or moneys raised 12150 by the section should be put in the bank under an individual's name, not under an organizational name.

Q. To your knowledge, pursuant to the advice given by Bill Allan, were any steps taken to secure machines and supplies, and so forth? A. Yes, there were.

Q. Tell us what steps were taken. I mean steps that have come to your knowledge, now.

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, about June or July of 1948 there was an emergency meeting called at the civic center by the lower East Side Executive Board. It didn't materialize into such a meeting. However, there were several people presented themselves there, and Oscar Rodes gave different members portable or collapsible mimeograph machines.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. What kind of machines? A. Mimeograph machines.

Q. How many machines did you see there at that time? A. At that time I counted eight.

12151 Q. Eight. Do you know what was done with those machines? A. To those who were present it was given, mainly, in the auto workers.

Q. There were more than eight people present at that meeting, weren't there? A. No. Something happened. It didn't materialize.

Q. Can you give us the names of any persons, members of the Communist Party, who at that time received mimeograph machines and supplies?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Sven Falk, Ernie Sorensen, Harry Boskey. That is all I recall at this time.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. Did you receive a machine? A. No, I did not.

Q. Were you told what use was to be made of these portable machines and supplies? A. The members get-12152 ting them were told that—

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Were you present when they were told? A. Yes.

Q. You were present? A. Yes.

Q. Very well. Will you tell us what was told to these members receiving these machines as to what use they should make of them? A. Yes. They were to be put away and forgotten until they would be needed at any time that we would not be able to operate in the open, to be used for leaflets.

Q. After this meeting in April where Bill Allan spoke, did you attend any other meeting shortly thereafter concerning security measures? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What meeting? Tell us where and when it was held. A. In May of 1948 I attended a lower East Side executive board meeting at the Civic Center at which James Jackson gave us a security outline.

Q. All right. Before you tell us about that, what was the lower East Side section? A. It was a divisional section taking in all of the lower East Side and part of the northeast side membership of the Party.

Q. You state that James Jackson spoke at this 12153 meeting? A. Yes, I did.

Q. You were present? A. I was.

Q. Tell us what position James Jackson had in the district party? A. He was the educational director for District 7.

Q. What was the substance of his speech at that meeting? A. He stated that for security reasons the section itself was to be broken down into 50 groups, and that each group would function as a separate club.

Q. Approximately how many clubs did this east side section have? Can you tell us that? Do you know? Did it have many? A. Yes, it had quite a few.

Q. About how many would you estimate? A. About 12 or 14 at that time.

Q. Did you attend any other meetings shortly thereafter concerning security measures? A. Yes, the very next night.

Q. You attended another meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Where was that meeting held? A. That was the 14th Congressional Executive Board, which was held at 12154 4110 Haverhill, Detroit.

Q. Who spoke at this meeting? A. Peggy Wellman.

Q. What was Peggy Wellman's position in the district party? A. She was educational director for the 14th Club.

Q. Can you give us the substance of her talk that evening? A. Yes. She said for security reasons the lower east side section council had authorized the breaking up of each club into groups of five, and that was done that night.

Q. Mrs. Baldwin, you testified previously that in July 1950 the auto miscellaneous section was dissolved, isn't that so? A. That is right.

Q. Do you know the reason why it was dissolved?

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Were you told by any member or functionary of District 7 why— A. Yes, I was.

Q. —why the miscellaneous auto section was dissolved? Were you told by anyone why? A. Yes, I was.

12155 Q. Who told you? A. Oscar Rodes.

Q. What was Oscar Rodes' position in the Party at that time? A. He was organizational secretary at that time.

Q. What did he tell you? A. He told me that it was being dissolved for security reasons so that the auto workers could go into the community sections and clubs and lose their identity.

Q. Mrs. Baldwin, as a member of the Communist Party, District No. 7, did you know a member of the Communist Party by the name of Nat Ganley? I think you have already answered that previously. Tell us what position Nat Ganley had in the Party. A. In 1948, in the early spring when the auto miscellaneous was constituted, he became organizer for that section.

Q. Which section is that, please? A. Auto Miscellaneous Section. He also was a correspondent for the Michigan Worker and the Daily Worker.

Q. Shortly after the dissolution of the auto miscellaneous section did you attend a meeting where Nat Ganley presided? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where was the meeting held and when?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

12156 A. Yes, it was in 1950, the summer, about August of 1950.

Q. Where was that meeting held? A. At Peggy Wellman's home.

Q. Did you attend the meeting? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was the purpose of this meeting? A. Nat Ganley said that it was called for the purpose of organizing a completely new section called the Upper East Side Section, which would take in part of the Auto clubs of the Auto Miscellaneous Section, which had been dissolved, and would include the community club in that section, within that territory.

Q. Was he to hold any position in this new sec-12157 tion? A. Yes, he was to be regional director and we were to have an organizational secretary.

Q. How was the section to be divided? A. All community clubs within that section would carry groups, not over five people, and in the shop branches they would have three members to each group, and no more.

Q. Did he state at that time the reason why there would be such small groups of individuals? A. Yes, it was a security measure so that too many people would not be gathered at one place.

Q. At this meeting were you assigned any position? A. Yes, I was assigned a leader of the group within my immediate territory.

Q. How many members did your group consist of? A. Four; five, with myself, I believe.

* * * * * * * * * * *

12158 Q. Did you thereafter function as the head of your group? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What were your duties as leader of the group? A. I contacted each individual member because I had been told at that meeting that we couldn't have group meetings. So I contacted the individuals and discussed their problems.

Q. Shortly after your appointment as a group leader, did you attend any meetings concerning the leadership of the Party district? A. Yes, I did.

Q. When and where was the meeting held? A. It was October, I believe the 18th, 1950, Oscar Rodes called me to his home.

Q. Who is Oscar Rodes? Tell us, please, again. A. He was the organizational secretary for this new section, upper east side section.

12159 Q. What transpired at this meeting? A. He told me that the Communist Party was establishing an underground apparatus and would have a reserve leadership, and I was to be one of those reserves, that I was bound to the decision that I must not contact any Communist Party members, attend any Communist meetings, or to contact anyone whi might be labeled a Communist, and that I should wait further orders and directives from some Party leadership.

Q. What was the date that you were told this by Oscar Rodes? A. October, I am sure it was the 18th, 1950.

Q. Have you since that date functioned as a part of the reserve leadership by staying away from Communist Party functions and Party members? A. With one exception, I have.

Q. This last meeting was held in October 1950. Have your since attended any functions or meeting when other members of the Communist Party were also in attendance? A. No, with one exception.

Q. What is that exception? A. That I attended a baby shower for Stephanie Allen in March 1951.

Q. Where was that baby shower held? A. It was 12160 held at Ike Greenberg's home on the West Side of the city.

Q. Were there other members of the Communist Party present there? A. Yes, there were.

Q. As a result of your attendance in March 1951 at this baby shower did anything happen? A. Just a few days later I was sharply criticized by Oscar.

Q. When you say sharply criticized, tell us exactly what happened? A. He telephoned me and said he was surprised that a person of my integrity had not abided by Party decisions by remaining away from Communist gatherings. He said that he hoped in the future I would abide by that decision.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. After this incident of the baby shower has any member or functionary of the Communist Party contacted you? A. Yes. Immediately following my meeting with Oscar in his home the latter part of October, I was contacted.
12161 Q. October, what year is that? A. That would be in 1940, immediately following my meeting with Oscar.

Q. But before the shower? A. Yes.

Q. You said the baby shower was held in March. A. 1951.

Q. This incident is in April, did you say? A. No, the latter part of October.

Q. 1950? A. Yes.

Q. Now tell us what happened.

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Did I misunderstand you?

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. Yes, you did misunderstand, but give us this incident that took place in October 1950. A. The latter part 12162 of October 1950 I was called by a member of the Civil Rights Congress to participate in some typing.

Q. Who was this member of the Civil Rights Congress? A. Esther Boskey.

Q. Spell that name, please. A. B-o-s-k-e-y.

Q. Were you a member of the Civil Rights Congress? A. I was.

Q. When did you join the Civil Rights Congress? A. Some time of 1947.

Q. Will you give us the circumstances under which you joined the Civil Rights Congress? A. Yes. I was approached by Faye Gingold Grossman, the office secretary for district 7, to join this organization, and she gave me an application at that time.

12163 Q. Let's clear up the record. By whom were you asked to join the Civil Rights Congress? A. By Faye Gingold Grossman, the District 7 secretary.

Q. When were you asked to join the Civil Rights Congress? A. Some time in 1947.

Q. As a result of that request did you join the Civil Rights Congress? A. I did.

Q. Did you attend any meetings of the Civil Rights Congress? A. Yes, I did.

Q. On the occasion of your attendance at these 12164 meetings did you see other members of the Communist Party there?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I did.

Q. Directing your attention to the phone call made by Esther Boskey in October of 1950, will you please tell us the substance of your telephone conversation with her? A. Yes. She asked that I assist at the Civil Rights Congress office doing some typing for George Crockett.

Q. As a result of that request did you do any typing for George Crockett? A. No, I told her I would let her know later, and I checked with Oscar Rodes.

Q. When you say checked, what did you do, actually? A. I went and called him.

Q. Oscar Rodes? A. Yes.

Q. What did you say to Oscar Rodes? A. I asked him if I could assist with this typing, and he absolutely forbade me.

Q. He told you not to? A. Yes.

12165 Q. Did you? A. No.

Q. At this time you were underground? A. That is right.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. After the incident of the baby shower which was held in March of 1951 did any official or leader of the Communist Party contact you? A. Yes, in about June of 1951.

12166 Q. Who contacted you? A. Oscar Rodes contacted me.

Q. What was his position in the Party at that time? A. He was still to my knowledge organizational secretary for the upper east side.

Q. You were still a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. Where did he contact you? A. At my home.

Q. What was the substance of the conversation between you and Oscar Rodes? A. He said that he was being forced to move and that he had a large box of Communist Party material and asked that I keep it in my home if I had a safe place to keep it.

Q. He said he had material, a large box of material. A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you what kind of material it was? A. No, he didn't.

Q. Did he state why he wanted to put this box of material in your home? A. To keep it safe.

Q. To keep it safe. What did you say to him? A. I told him the only logical place I could think of would be in my attic. He said that would be fine.

Q. Did he state to you why it was necessary to 12167 keep this package of material safe.

Q. Did he tell you what the contents of the material was? A. He wanted it reserved. That is what he said. He wanted it kept safe and reserved in case the home should be searched.

Q. What kind of records were these? Do you know what kind of records they were? A. No, he didn't tell me.

Q. Did he put those records in your home? A. He started to.

Q. What happened? Tell us exactly what happened. A. He went to the car and struggled with this large box and walked a couple of feet and returned to the car and came in very agitated. He said that a big black car had gone by with two gentlemen sitting in it, and he didn't wish to leave the box. It looked suspicious.

Q. So he did not store that package of material your house, is that so? A. That is right.

Q. Now, Mrs. Baldwin, I direct your attention to the period of time between 1946-1949, when you assisted 12168 district headquarters in registering members and collecting dues. During that period of time were any changes made in the method of recording membership and dues? A. Yes, there were.

Q. What changes were made, and when? A. Beginning with 1948 we were told that no records were to be kept of individual members—

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: And that club payments, dues payments, were recorded and handed in to the District 7 headquarters as a whole. In other words, we turned the money in for the number of members paying and the months they were paying for. Once in a while when we would have a recruit we would hand in pertinent information as to the race, the type of work he did, and the age.

BY MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. Was a record kept of the membership by names? A. No. We used a score card.

Q. How long was that procedure for keeping records continued? A. Until now, to my knowledge.

* * * * * * * * * * *

12186 Q. Did you attend a meeting where there was a discussion in regard to the dissolution of the Communist Political Association? A. I did.

Q. Approximately when was that meeting held? A. It was approximately June 1, 1945.

Q. Who was the main speaker at that meeting? A. Carl Winter.

12187 Q. What was the subject of his talk? A. He said that we had been assembled for the purpose of discussing the Duclos article, Jacques Duclos' article, the French Communist Party.

Q. Was there a discussion of the Duclos article at that meeting? A. Yes, there was.

Q. Will you give us the substance of the discussion at that meeting that you attended? A. He wanted the membership to go on the theory that it was not Jack Duclos' own viewpoint—

* * * * * * * * * * *

12188 Q. Tell us as near as possible what was said at that meeting in regard to the Duclos article. A. Carl Winter said that the words of Jack Duclos in that article were not his own viewpoint but—

Q. When you say "his own"— A. Jacques Duclos' own viewpoint.

Q. But what? A. But it was rather the European Communists' viewpoint of the American Communist Party, and that the Daily Worker in several days hence would carry a resolution on the task of the Communist Party Political Association.

Q. Thereafter did an article appear in the Daily Worker concerning the Duclos article and the next tasks of the Communist Political Association? A. Yes.

• • • • • • • • • • •

12213 Q. Mrs. Baldwin, I show you Government's Exhibit which has been identified as No. 395, which purports to be a discussion outline of the history of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and the Exhibit 395(a), which appears to be a handwritten note addressed to Toby dated 6-20—the other numeral is obliterated—49. I ask you whether or not you have ever seen that discussion outline and this note. Can you identify those two documents for us? A. Yes, I can.

Q. First, what purports to be the discussion outline, where did you see that? A. The stencils were brought in to the District 7 headquarters and left with this note from Ann Cook giving me instructions as to running this off on the mimeograph machine.

Q. So you ran this outline on the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union on the mimeograph machine, is that right? A. Yes, I did.

• • • • • • • • • • •

12214 Q. What use was made of this outline? A. I ran several copies off, and they were to be used in the course on the history of the CPSU. They are instructors' guides and questions.

Q. Instructors' questions? A. Yes.

Q. What use was to be made by the instructors of these questions?

• • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: They were used in the discussion of the course.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. During the time that you attended classes in which this course was taught did your instructor use this outline? A. She did.

12215 By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. I don't know whether you have testified to this already or not. When was this outline mimeographed by you? A. This was mimeographed by me some time in June of 1949.

Q. For use in class? A. Prior to the starting of the fall term, yes.

12229 Q. Did you use any textbooks while you attended the last two schools? A. Yes.

Q. Will you please tell us what textbooks you used? A. We used the main textbook, which was the "History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union." We also used Foundations of Leninism by Stalin. We used Leninism by Stalin and "What is to be Done."

. . . . . .

12244 Q. Mrs. Baldwin, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit which has been identified as No. 398, which purports to be a pamphlet, booklet entitled "Background of the Berlin Crisis, a Speakers' Guide, Issued by National Educational Department, Communist Party, 35 East 12th Street, New York City," and I ask you whether or not you can identify that booklet for us. A. Yes, I can.

Q. When did you last see that booklet? A. District 7 headquarters.

Q. Did you have a copy of it? A. I did.

12245 Q. Where did you get it? A. It was in my mail box at the headquarters office.

Q. Who put it in your mail box? A. The office receptionist.

Q. For what purpose was it put in your box?

• • • • • • • • • • • •

12246 sonnel and all club functionaries, all the leadership.

By MR. DENUNZIO:

Q. What use did you make of this pamphlet? A. This pamphlet was left so that I would have the correct answers for any question that might arise under the Berlin crisis.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

12283 Q. Mrs. Baldwin, as a result of your membership in the Communist Party and as a result of your attendance at Party Schools and various meetings and lectures held by the Communist Party in District No. 7, what is your understanding of the aims and objectives of the 12284 Communist Party of the United States?

• • • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: During the period I was in the Communist Party, the schools I attended, through those I was taught that socialism was the ultimate goal of the Communist Party of America, and that imperialism must be overruled, and since the American imperialists were the leading imperialists, they must be liquidated.

12296 CROSS EXAMINATION

• • • • • • • • • • • •

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

12440 Q. After October 18, 1950, you stopped being active in the Communist Party, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. That was a result of a conversation you say you had with Oscar Rodes? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us again just what that conversation was, what you said and what he said? A. He told me that the Party was establishing a reserve leadership. In other words, it was an underground apparatus. That they would want a reserve leadership in case the present leaders would be picked up or jailed, and that this reserve leadership would become inactive, and I was one. I was not to contact Party members, not to associate with Party members or to attend any meetings or to associate myself with any one who could be labeled a communist, and that I was to wait further word from the leadership as to my activity.

* * * * * * * * * * *

12521 Q. All right, coming back to the June meeting, how long did Carl Winter speak? A. I couldn't tell you exactly in minutes.

Q. Do you recall what he said. A. Yes.

Q. Would you say he spoke an hour or a half hour? Can you give us any idea at all? A. Oh, I would say 15 or 20 minutes.

Q. All right. Will you tell us what he said? A. During that period he touched lightly on the Yalta and Teheran agreements, and then he went into the Duclos article, stating that this was not the viewpoint of the French Party, it was not Duclos' own viewpoint of the French Party of the American Party, but it was European Communists' viewpoint of the American Communist Party.

12690 John Edward Janowitz called as a witness for Petitioner, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. PAISLEY:

12727 Q. Mr. Janowitz, during your membership in the Communist Party Reliance Club did you pay dues? A. I have paid dues.

Q. How were they collected? A. They were collected by the Secretary of the Club.

Q. When? At the club meetings? A. At the club meetings at different intervals. They were supposed to be collected at every meeting, but sometimes they wouldn't be collected at one meeting and they would be collected at another meeting.

Q. Is this method still in use? A. The method is still in use, except that it is modified from what it was before, where we received a stamp years ago to show our membership paid up. Then in 1949 we did not receive any stamps or anything, or did not receive any books. All we did was receive a receipt for our membership. Later on in 1950 we did not even receive a receipt for our dues.

Q. Do you remember a meeting in the home of Charlie Eimer, secretary of the club, some time around 1949 12728 when the subject of membership dues was discussed? A. That is correct.

Q. Did anybody make any statement about it? A. I believe it was 1949 the discussion was that for security reasons there wouldn't be any stamps given out, that all we would do was pay dues and get a receipt, and when we received the receipt we tore it up. Then later on in 1950 we got away from that, and then it was decided that we would not pay dues even in that manner, we would be paying dues and each member was assigned a number, and the dues would be credited to that number.

Q. Were you given a number? A. I was given a number then. I was given No. 4, I believe.

Q. To whom did you pay your dues after you were assigned a number? A. To Charles Eimer, the secretary of the club.

Q. What kind of record would he keep of your membership? A. That I don't know. All I know is that when we paid our dues, I think it was 20 cents would be reverted back to the club and from that 20 cents material would be bought, that is, party material would be bought and distributed.

Q. When was the last time you paid your dues? A. I think in September 1951.

12729 Q. For what period of time would that cover?

A. We have always paid—I paid most of my dues on a three-month basis. That would probably cover—well, let's say, August, September, and October, probably. I don't remember what it would cover, but I know I paid my dues then.

• • • • • • • • • • •

12731 Q. Mr. Janowitz, I hand you a document a photostat of which has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit 412, which purports to be an issue of For a Lasting Peace for a People's Democracy, Friday, March 10, 1950. Have you ever seen it before? A. This was given to me by Martin Chancey at Charley Eimer's house at a meeting in April 1950.

Q. You say in April. A. In April, yes.

Q. Did you receive any other document at that time? A. Yes, there was another pamphlet I received at that time.

Q. Do you remember what it was? A. I believe it 12732 was New—I can't remember the name right offhand.

Q. Do you remember seeing the document I place before you? A. Yes, I received that New Times at the same time.

MR. PAISLEY: Mark that please.

(Document produced and marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit 413.)

MR. PAISLEY: The issue of New Times has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit 413.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Is that your handwriting up there or whose handwriting is that? A. That is my handwriting.

Q. What, if anything, did Chancey say about these documents? A. Just what he always said: Read it, study it, and pass it on.

Q. Did he say that just to you or to others? A. No, everybody. Every time we got any literature that was what was said.

12755 Q. Mr. Janowitz, do you know a man by the name of Sam Reed? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did he have any position in the Communist Party out there in Cleveland? A. He attended all the meetings and to me he was known as the labor party chairman of Cuyahoga County, the labor representative of the party in Cuyahoga County.

Q. Of the Communist Party? A. Of the Commun-

12756 ist Party.

Q. Do you recall when your last saw Sam Reed? A. The last I saw Sam Reed was June 22, 1951.

Q. Can you recall where it was and the circumstances? A. That was at James Marino's home.

Q. In Cleveland? A. In Cleveland.

Q. Do you recall who were present? A. Present at that meeting was Charles Eimer, myself, James Marino, and Sam Reed.

Q. Was it a party meeting? A. It was a party meeting.

Q. Who was in charge? Who acted as the chairman? A. Sam Reed took charge of that meeting.

Q. Did he make any statements to you men assembled there? A. Yes. He said that the Party was going underground and that any books lying around loose should be put away and stored in storehouses, warehouses if there were too many of them, and that nobody was to call any Party functionaries on the telephone at any time and that no more than two of the group shall meet at any time. He said that if he was to be arrested, somebody else was being groomed to take his position.

Q. Did he say anything about the Daily Worker?

12757 A. Yes. He said that there would be no subscriptions taken or anything, and that the Party members should get active in church groups and everything and just carry on from there as such and not meet more than two at a time, and not to meet at any Party member's homes at all.

12758 Q. Mr. Janowitz, in view of that objection do you recall whether or not Reed gave you men any reason for this action that was contemplated? A. He said for security reasons the Party was going underground. Those were the reasons that were given.

Q. Have you attended any Communist Party conventions? A. Yes. I attended one in 1950, state convention.

Q. Do you remember about what time of the year?

12759 A. I believe it was about the 17th of December.

Q. 1950? A. 1950.

Q. You say it was a state convention. A. That is right.

* * * * * * * * * *

12760 Q. Do you recall any statements made at that time or speeches by Lumer? A. Some reports were given and Lumer gave a report on getting people to subscribe to the magazine, March of Labor. That was to be the number one job to be pushed through the unions and through the plants. There was more action taken there. I and Fred Haug were to represent the Party in going out and getting new members, and that was to be done by the other Party members giving us the names of people who were either interested or sympathetic to the Communist Party, and to go out and speak to them and try to convince them to join into the Party.

Q. You mean that they were wanting you to get new members for the Party or for the labor organization? A. That is right.

Q. For the Party? A. That is right.

12763 Q. You attended this convention as the alternate in the place of Helen Gallo, did you? A. That is correct.

Q. How did you know how to get to the place where it was held?

* * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: At this meeting on Saturday, the day before the convention, no one was given the address of that meeting and no one knew where that meeting was to be held. It was said that for security reasons the address would not be given, that the address would be given only at the time that the delegate was ready to go to the meeting and he would be taken there. The address was not given where this meeting was to be held.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you recall where it was actually held? A. It was held at 112th and Buckeye at the Hungarian Work-12764 men's Home.

Q. Were you given any instructions at that meeting as to how you were to learn where the place was and how you would get there? A. Saturday night after this meeting I was called by Sam Reed and he said that Helen Gallo, who was the delegate, could not attend, and that I was to meet him Sunday morning at 105th and Superior and he would take me to the meeting.

Q. Was it held on a Sunday? A. It was held on a Sunday.

Q. How long did it last? A. It lasted all day.

Q. About how many delegates were there? A. I would say about 60 delegates were there.

12789 Q. Do you know a person by the name of Sid Stein? A. Yes, I have met Sid Stein.

Q. When and where did you meet him? A. I met him in the spring of 1951 at James Marino's home.

Q. In Cleveland? A. In Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. What were the circumstances? A. The circumstances were a party meeting was called at Marino's home, and Sid Stein came into that meeting with Phil Frankfeld.

Q. What position did Frankfeld hold in the Party, if any? A. He was the chairman of the Party in Ohio at that time.

Q. Were others present? A. Present were myself, Herbert Hirschberg, James Marino, Sid Stein, Phil Frankfeld. There were others that I don't remember now offhand.

Q. What transpired on this occasion? A. Sid 12790 Stein told us the part that labor had to do as leaders in labor organizations, that we, regardless of what happened, had our job to do, to go out there and do the job that was given us. He also raised the question that if the locals go what they call the right wing of the IUE we should do everything in our power to go ahead and get into the leadership of these locals; wherever IUE comes in, to strive and try to be elected to the elective offices in these locals in the IUE. He said he had already met some of the locals who had gone to the IUE and talked to these people, and that that was the number one job for the Party.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. What position, if any, did Stein hold in the Communist Party when he was telling you people that? A. Stein was the National Labor Organizer for the Communist Party.

Q. Where did he live, do you know? A. I don't know where he lived.

12791 Q. Was he a Cleveland man? A. To my knowledge, no.

Q. Mr. Janowitz, tell the Panel what the situation was at that time with reference to the IUE and the UE.

* * * * * * * * * *

12792 A. There were some locals who had seceded from the UE and went to the IUE, and Sid Stein said that these Party members who were in the UE when the local had gone IUE should strive for positions of leadership in that local to carry out the Party's duties in those locals.

* * * * * * * * * *

12799 Q. Have you ever seen Gerhard Eisler in this country? A. I have heard Gerhard Eisler speak once at a Civil Rights Congress in Cleveland.

Q. In Cleveland? A. At Cleveland Music Hall.

12800 Q. Was it in 1950? A. It could be 1949 or '50.

12812 Q. Mr. Janowitz, the question was, from your experience in the Party during this period of approximately eight years, what did you learn were the objectives of the Communist Party in the United States of America?

THE WITNESS: My observations were that the Communist Party is the vanguard and that Communism and capitalism can not live in this world, that capitalism must go, that the Communists who are the vanguards of the masses must take advantage of every opportunity that arises to lead the masses, whether it be through depressions or strikes or anything else, to be the leaders of any movement that 12813 unites the masses for that purpose.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. For what? A. For the purpose of getting rid of the capitalist system in America.

12818 Q. Mr. Janowitz, what did the Communists teach you that they would do when they were successful 12819 doing away with capitalism in this country? A. The answer is, to replace capitalism it would be replaced with communism.

CROSS EXAMINATION

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

12837 Q. The UE at that time was a CIO union, was it not? A. That is right.

Q. At that time it was the firm policy of the UE and the CIO to promote the winning of the war, wasn't it? A. That is true.

Q. As a matter of fact, the UE and the CIO had subscribed to the non-strike pledge for the duration of the war, had they not? A. And that was adhered to.

Q. At the time you became organizer you had no way of knowing whether or not you would ever be invited to join the Communist Party, did you? A. No.

Q. As a matter of fact, you did not join the Communist Party until August 1943, months afterwards? A. That is correct.

* * * * * * * * * *

12992 Harvey M. Matusow called as a witness for Petitioner, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

By MR. SHEEHAN

12993 Q. Can you tell the Panel under what circumstances you first became interested in the Communist Party? A. Through my contacts in the American Youth for Democracy, which I joined in 1946 there was some Communist Party members in that club Roosevelt, the American Youth for Democracy, which I was a member of. One Jules Sheik was a member of the Party, and during the late spring and summer of 1947 invited me to join the Communist Party. However, I didn't do so at the time.

* * * * * * * * * *

13005 Q. Mr. Matusow, did you have any part in the arranging of meeting places for Party meetings during the time you were a member?

* * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, I did. When I was operating the switchboard at the New York County headquarters of the Communist Party, 35 East 12th Street, on more than one occasion either Ernie Parent, Joe Bucholt, B-u-c-h-o-l-t, who was then one of the State officers of the New York County Youth Commission of the Communist Party, would ask me to contact one of two people, either Art Saha, S-a-h-a, or Jack Walkenstein, W-a-l-k-e-n-s-t-e-i-n, contact either of those two people for the purpose of obtaining their apartment on the East Side of New York for meetings to be held by the Communist Party Youth Commission, and I 13006 complied with that. As I say, on more than one occasion I received the key to either one of those apartments and made arrangements for certain members of the Youth Commission to get to the meeting place. I was also instructed to tell either Mr. Saha or Walkenstein that they were not to be present in their homes during a specified period of time.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Will you tell us who Mr. Saha was? A. At that time Mr. Saha was the section organizer for the East Side section of the Communist Party, Youth Section of the Communist Party.

Q. Who was Mr. Walkenstein? A. He was the Chairman of the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party.

Q. Do you know how long these meetings took place in this manner while you were a member of the Communist Party?

13007 THE WITNESS: During the period 1949 and as late as December 1950.

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. How do you know that the meetings took place during that period? A. I was at Mr. Saha's place in December of 1950 just after the adjournment of one of these meetings. I was told by Mr. Saha that the meeting had just concluded.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Mr. Matúsow, were you told the reason for keeping these meetings secret?

* * * * * * * * * * *

13008 Q. Were you told the reason for keeping these meetings secret?

MR. ABT: I object.

MR. BROWN: Overruled. You may answer.

13009 THE WITNESS: Yes. There were certain people who were in youth organizations that were not Communist youth organizations whose identity was to be kept secret, that is, their party membership was to be kept secret. Also, the purpose of the meetings away from Communist Party headquarters was that they did not want to hold these meetings because they felt that there was wire tapping and other means of surveillance on the meetings and that by holding the meeting away from Communist Party headquarters they could keep their business and the identities of those present unknown, in that one case it was told to me, to the FBI.

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Mr. Matusow, did you arrange for meetings in any other manner than the manner which you have described? A. Yes. When I was working for the Communist Party County Headquarters as switchboard operator on more than one occasion I was informed by Mr. Parent, whom I have mentioned before, and Mr. Buchold, to obtain a meeting hall in one of the many places where you could rent meeting halls, such as the Malan Studios, in New York City, for the purpose of a Communist Party meeting, but I was to tell them that it was for some group which never existed, to use some name that we just made up at the time rather than Communist Party Youth Commission or Communist Party leadership meeting.

* * * * * * * * * *

13010 Q. When you were working in the New York County office of the Communist Party did you have any knowledge of how correspondence was kept there? A. In 1949 when I was working there a system of burning messages was instituted, in that on every desk in the County office a tin can was kept and any messages that had names, addresses or phone numbers on it were burned right after they were read.

Q. Do you know how long this took place while you were a member of the Party? A. In January 1951 during the hearings for my expulsion from the Communist Party I observed Joe Buchold, who was one of the people conducting the interrogation, burning messages by the same procedure that I have just mentioned. He had a tin can on his desk, and he kept burning them.

Q. Do you know Clara March Lester? A. Yes, I do. She was county membership director of the New York County Communist Party when I worked there in 1949.

Q. Did you have any official contact with her? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you recall any specific contact you had with her?

A. It wasn't specific. In April 1949 I was at the 13011 switchboard at the County Headquarters. She came down to the office and told me if I had any address books, any names, phone numbers, personal stuff, that I was to burn it or destroy it right then and there, and that we would not carry any names or addresses around with us at Communist Party national headquarters or county headquarters.

Q. Did she tell you why these instructions were given? A. Just that in case I was ever picked up by the police or anybody I would not be in a position to jeopardize any of the other members of the Party and let their names and addresses be known.

Q. Now, I would like to direct your attention back to the year 1948. Was there any change in the organizational setup of your Communist Party clubs at that time? A. Yes, there was. In September 1948 at the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party instructions came down from the county office that we were to establish a group system in the club rather than hold meetings of—I believe our membership was then 36 people, of all 36 people. We would hold group meetings of between three and five people. Each member of the executive committee plus a few designated group leaders would head specific groups, and people in the group would know only their group leader or the other group leaders, but were not to know who the other members of the Party were who were not serving in the capacity of 13012 group leader.

* * * * * * * * * *

13013 Q. Regarding the Labor Youth League, do you know when it was organized and the circumstances surrounding the organization?

* * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: The Labor Youth League was organized in Chicago on Memorial Day week-end in 1949.

13014 By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. How did you know about the organization? A. I was a charter member of the Labor Youth League. I joined it in June 1949. Prior to that in meetings of the Communist Party Youth Clubs and Youth Sections in New York County we discussed the necessity for building a new Marxist-Leninist youth group along the lines of the old Young Communist League, and the decision we discussed on the basis of an article that had appeared, a report given to the 14th Convention of the Communist Party in 1948. For a period of months from December 1948 to May 1949 we discussed the setting up of a new Marxist-Leninist Youth Organization, which was the Labor Youth League.

Q. Were you told by any officials anything about how the name Labor Youth League was chosen for the organization?

* * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes. When I was on the New York State Executive Committee of the Labor Youth League, serving as a literature director, in meetings with Leon Wofsy, who was Chairman of the Labor Youth League, and Chairman of the National Youth Commission of the Communist Party, Julian Lowitt, Lou Diskin, and Joe Buchold, I was told in these meetings that the reason Labor Youth League was chosen as the name rather than Young Communist League because they said if we left the name Communist 13015 out of the name of the organization we would be less subject to prosecution under the Smith Act or any future legislation. They told me at these meetings that the reason we left the name Communist out of it was that we wanted to avoid any prosecution in the future.

By Mr. Sheehan:

Q. Did you hold any offices in the Labor Youth League? A. Yes. I was the first state literature director of the New York State Labor Youth League and served as acting national literature director because they didn't have one, and at that time was on the New York State Educational Committee of the Labor Youth League and the New York State Executive Committee of the Labor Youth League. That was from September 1949 to January 1950.

Q. What were your duties as literature director? A. To disseminate literature put out, distributed by the Labor Youth League to the membership in conjunction with the educational program.

Q. Do you know where the literature came from that you disseminated? A. Yes. The Communist Party Wholesale Book Corporation, its distributing house, at 35 East 12th Street, gave us a $500 credit for literature to be purchased from them, literature from International and New Century Publishers.

13016 Q. Did you have any duties on the educational committee of the Labor Youth League? A. Yes, I did. That was in the preparation of study outlines for the dissemination of Marxist-Leninist study outlines to 13017 the membership, and my specific duty was to prepare bibliographies of reading material, such as we set up a program of a book of the month in the League. In October 1949 our book of the month was the "Twilight of World Capitalism," by William Z. Foster. In November of 1949 our book was "The Tasks of Youth," by Stalin. In December it was "The Young Generation," by Lenin. Those are the only three titles I remember at this time, but that book of the month was carried forward.

Q. Did your duties there have any connection with labor youth league rallies that were held from time to time, if there were any such rallies? A. One in particular was on November 19, 1949, at the Hotel Capitol, in New York, where it was a general membership meeting of the League. We set up a literature table there and sold a great deal of literature to the membership, the three books I have mentioned plus others. At all county and state affairs of the Labor Youth League literature tables were set up ahead of the meeting for distribution.

Q. Mr. Matusow, you testified you were a member of several Communist Party Youth Clubs. You were also a member of the Labor Youth League. Did you hold membership in these clubs and the Labor Youth League at the same time? A. Well, I maintained membership in the Communist Party until January 1951, but when the Labor Youth 13018 League was formed the plan was, and it was carried out, to disband all the Communist Party youth clubs, transfer all the members of the Communist Party Youth clubs into the Labor Youth League in that same area. The members who were transferred to the Labor Youth League would be assigned to Communist Party community clubs for administrative purposes, that is, dues paying purposes. Their Communist Party leadership and Marxist education was obtained in the Labor Youth League.

Q. Did you in your position on the educational committee receive any orders to carry out policies of the Communist Party?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, we did. At meetings of the executive committee of the Labor Youth League. Sam Engler, E-n-g-l-e-r, for instance, who was the New York State Educational Director of the Labor Youth League, was also a member of the New York State Educational Committee of the Communist Party, and would receive material and information at the New York State Educational Committee of the Communist Party meetings, and disseminate those to the Educational Directors of the Labor Youth League, who in turn would set up the Educational program as it was set up at the Communist Party. For certain political action Joe Buchold and Lou Diskin, who were the two state leaders of the Labor Youth League, who I worked with, at-13019 tended meetings of the New York State Executive Committee of the Communist Party, and would receive instructions as to political action to be taken by the Labor Youth League. They would in turn disseminate these instructions to use at the Executive Committee meetings and to the various county organizations.

By Mr. Sheehan:

Q. Do you know if there was any relation between the labor youth League and the Communist Party of the United States?

* * * * * * * * * *

The Witness: Yes, there was. The leaders of the Labor Youth League that I have just mentioned, Leon Wofsy, the Chairman of the Communist Party Youth Commission, was chairman of the Labor Youth League. Lou Diskin, who was Chairman of the New York State Communist Party Youth movement, was Chairman of the New York State Labor Youth League. Ernie Parent, who was New York County Youth Organizer for the Communist Party, became the first county organizer of the Labor Youth League. Art Saha, who was New York County Educational Director of the Communist Party Youth group, became the New York County Educational Director of the Labor Youth League. At its inception in 1949 all the leaders of the Communist Party Youth movement in New York just trans-13020 ferred to the Labor Youth League and held corresponding positions and did receive their instructions from the Communist Party. I also was a member of the Communist Party and just moved to the Labor Youth League. There was no divorcement.

By Mr. Sheehan:

Q. You mentioned the World Federation of Democratic Youth previously in your testimony. What relation, if any, did the Labor Youth League have to this organization?

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Witness: The Labor Youth League was one of the organizations in the United States that was part of the World Federation of Democratic Youth. When I was literature director of the Labor Youth League in New York State we published material that we received from the World Federation of Democratic Youth. We stated that we were affiliated with that organization. Our members wore their buttons—

* * * * * * * * * * *

13021 The Witness: I believe the members of the League did wear the membership button of the World Federation of Democratic Youth.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13022 Q. The question is: Do you know if the World Federation of Democratic Youth had any relations with the Communist Information Bureau? A. In 1949 at a meeting of the New York State Executive Committee of the Labor Youth League Lou Diskin gave a report on the meetings he had held in Budapest, Hungary, with certain people in the World Federation of Democratic Youth, and also of meetings he held with J. Peters in Budapest in 1949. He had gone there to attend the World Youth Festival, conducted by the World Federation of Democratic Youth, and stayed in Budapest to deliver some reports on the American Youth Movement to that group, to the Cominform representatives, he stated, and later reported back to us that he had held these meetings.

13023 Q. Did you have anything to do with the sales of the Sunday Worker during your period in the Party, Mr. Matusow? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Will you tell us what your work consisted of in this regard? A. In 1949, from September 1949 I became the press director of the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party, and in that job processed subscriptions to the Sunday Worker that were obtained by members of the club. On many occasions there were members who had bought subscriptions to the Sunday Worker, which were processed by me, who did not want the paper going to their homes. They received the paper by having the subscription sent to the section headquarters of the Communist Party, and on Sunday morning those papers were hand delivered to these individuals.

Q. How do you know the papers were hand delivered to the individuals? A. On more than one occasion I took part in the delivery.

Q. Do you know why they did not want their iden-13024 tity known? A. The reason for it was that they stated that in the event of the passage of the Mundt bill or any legislation against the Communist Party it would be better if their identity were not known, so they could continue to work as Communists.

Q. Do you know how long this method of delivery prevailed while you were in the Party? A. My last personal contact with that method of delivery was in December 1950.

Q. I direct your attention to July of 1949. Will you tell the Panel what your job in the Party was at that time? A. In July of 1949 I was the manager of the Camp Unity bookshop at Camp Unity, in Wingdale, New York.

Q. Were there any Communist Party meetings held there? A. Yes, there were.

Q. Did you attend these meetings? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Were these meetings open to all the personnel at the camp? A. All Communist Party members who were employed at the camp.

Q. Were they open to persons other than Communist Party members? A. No, they were not.

13025 Q. Were any other people besides the guests of the camp present on the camp grounds at any time? A. No.

Q. Were any measures taken to see that no other people were present on the grounds? A. Yes, there were. There was a security setup initiated in the summer of 1949 whereby the male Communist Party members at the camp throughout the night toured regular shifts of guard duty at various places in the camp to see that nobody obtained entrance to the grounds who was not a guest at the camp. The reasons given were that we did not want anybody present who might identify certain people as having been at the camp and obtaining license plate numbers of cars, and the like.

Q. I would like to call your attention to the summer of 1950. Did you at this time contemplate a transfer of your membership between clubs of the Communist Party? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What transfer did you contemplate? A. I had obtained a job in Los Angeles, California, and contemplated transfer from New York to Los Angeles. I had contacted Joe Buchold, who was the acting state chairman of the Labor Youth League at the time, and told him about it, and he informed me that I would have to make arrangements for my transfer at the County Headquarters of the Communist 13026 Party. He accompanied me to the County Headquarters, where I was given a serial number from a dollar bill which I had, and gave that serial number to the security officer there. I didn't know his name at that time. I was told that when I got to California I would contact a certain person, and that serial number would match with one which that person had received and that would identify me as the correct person being transferred.

Q. Do you recall the last time that you had any contact with this procedure for transferring membership?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes. In December and January 1950 I had returned from New Mexico. I had never gotten to California. While in New Mexico, I requested that my membership be transferred to New Mexico. I contacted Joe Buchold and asked him whether or not I was to use that same number in getting my transfer to New Mexico. He stated that they were investigating some discrepancies, as he put it, in my activities, and I would just hold on to it.

Q. Did he give any indication that this procedure was still being used at this time? A. He stated it was, but that the number I had, just hold on to the number, and if I were cleared, continue to use it, and if I were expelled 13027 from the Party, as he intimated, forget about it.

13029 Q. Do you know Mr. Ben Bordofsky? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is he? A. He was the manager of Wholesale Book Corporation at 48 East 13th Street. When I knew him he was state literature director of the Communist Party, New York State.

Q. Did you have any business contact with him? A. Yes, I did, when I was an employee of the Jefferson Bookshop and Workers Bookshop and the Camp Unity Bookshop, I was employed by Mr. Bordofsky.

Q. What relations, if any, did the bookshops that you have referred to have to the Wholesale Book Corporation? A. They were run by the Wholesale Book Corporation, and all checks and finance transactions that the bookshops conducted had to be approved and signed by Mr. Bordofsky.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Before the recess you identified, Mr. Matusow, 13030 a Mr. Ben Bordofsky. Did you ever have any business contacts with him? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did he ever talk with you regarding how he received books from the Wholesale Book Corporation? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Will you tell us what he said and when and where? A. At the office of Wholesale Book Corporation on more than one occasion Mr. Bordofsky stated he had received copies of the newspaper For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy; New Times, a weekly news magazine published in the Soviet Union; copies of Soviet Literature, a cultural publication published in the Soviet Union.

Q. What I am getting at is how they were received, that is, by what means they were transported, how they were paid for, if they were, or what.

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Mr. Bordofsky stated that these publications were received without cost except for certain duties that had to be paid when they came through customs.

MR. MARCANTONIO: May we have when and where that conversation was held, Mr. Chairman?

MR. BROWN: Yes, surely. When and where was 13031 this held?

THE WITNESS: The conversation was held in the fall of 1949 when I was an employee of the Workers Bookshop and of Mr. Bordofsky. It was held on the fourth floor of the Communist Party headquarters in New York, which was the office of the Wholesale Book Corporation, of which Mr. Bordofsky was the head.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Did you discuss the receipt of books from the Soviet Union with any other officials whose duties had to do with the receipt of books? A. Yes, I did.

Q. With whom did you discuss it? A. During the same period of time at the same office, the Wholesale Book Corporation, I discussed the question of books being received from the Soviet Union with Mr. Alexander Trachtenberg, who at that time was head of International Publishers and the over-all boss of the Wholesale Book Corporation and the book shops. He told me that for certain books they had received plates, book plates and English translations of books from the Soviet Union, as well as on more 13032 than one occasion they had received the actual page proofs for the pages for a book, which International Publishers only put the binding on. One he referred to in particular was the Selected Works of Lenin, one edition of the Selected Works of Lenin.

Q. You said they received the plates and translations, I believe. A. That is correct.

Q. I didn't get this. Did he mention how these were paid for, if they were? A. There again any duties that had to be paid through customs were the only cost for these translations and plates.

MR. ABT: Mr. Chairman, I move to strike that conversation on the grounds again it is complete hearsay.

MR. BROWN: Motion denied.

MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Is this the same Alexander Trachtenberg who is now under indictment in New York under the Smith Act? A. It is.

Q. I direct your attention to the year 1949. Do you recall discussing any trips abroad with any Party officers at that time? A. Yes, when I was an employee of the Workers Bookshop I discussed with Miss Elizabeth Gurley Flynn the trip she had just taken to France to attend the 80th Birthday Party for Marcel Cachin, I believe it is C-a-c-h-i-n, 13033 a French Communist leader. In the course of conversation at the bookshop she told of a meeting she had held with other Communist Party members of European countries at this affair in Paris.

Q. Did she say what was discussed at this affair, in meeting with other members? A. The question of Party organization and the question of, again I use the quote, the imperialist war being started by the United States, unquote, and what to do about it, what the role of the American Communist Party is in that question.

Q. Did you discuss with any other officers of the Party any trips abroad? A. I have mentioned previously having heard a report by Lou Diskin, the State Chairman of the Labor Youth League on his meeting in Budapest, Hungary, with various Communist Party people, one J. Peters, and leaders of the Communist Youth movement in Hungary and other European countries.

Q. Do you recall when you heard about this trip? A. Upon Mr. Diskin's return to the United States in the fall of 1949.

Q. Where did that conversation take place? A. At a meeting held in the office of the Labor Youth League at 799 Broadway, New York City.

Q. Did Mr. Diskin state what was the purpose for 13034 his going abroad at that time? A. The purpose of his going abroad was to attend the World Youth Festival held in Budapest, Hungary, in 1949 after the festival to have certain discussions with Party leaders over there as to the role of the American Communist movement.

Q. Do you recall discussing the attendance at Communist Party schools abroad with fellow Party members?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes. With one Art Saha, who had been very active in the Finnish movement of the Communist Party. He told me he had been recommended to attend a Communist Party leadership school in Helsinki, Finland. This was in September 1948, and he said he had been recommended—I didn't get the last name, but it was Carl, the head of the Finnish movement in the New York area of the Communist Party. In 1950 again Mr. Saha said he had been recommended to go to that school. That was in December 1950.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did he tell you in your discussions with him what was the purpose of the school operated in Finland? A.
13035. He stated that it was a leadership training school for Communist Party members, a Finnish Communist Party school, but the purpose of the attendance of an American Communist was to prepare them for work in Finnish Concentrations, organizational work in the Party among the Finnish nationals in the United States.

Q. I direct your attention to the summer of 1950. Will you tell the Panel what you were doing at that time? A. In July of 1950 I left New York and established residence in New Mexico, Taos, New Mexico, and in July was a guest at the San Cristobal Valley ranch at Taos, New Mexico.

Q. Do you recall any of the activities that went on at the ranch? Did you take part in any meetings there? A. Yes, I did. While in Taos, New Mexico, I was a member of what was called AMNA, American Mexican National Association, as well as the Communist Party, and the San Cristobal Valley Ranch was the center of these activities. I had been invited to go to the ranch by Mrs. Jennie Wells Vincent, who I had met in New York the preceding years.

Q. Can you tell us about any of the meetings, any discussions that were held at this ranch? A. Yes. One in particular on August 7, 8, 1950, conducted by Clint Jencks, who was an officer in the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers 13036 Union.

Q. Do you know anything more about Mr. Jencks? A. Mr. Jencks was identified to me as a member of the Communist Party—I attended meetings with him at the ranch—and as an officer in the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union, out of Silver City, New Mexico.

Q. You say that he gave lectures at the ranch, is that right? A. He did lecture on the dates of August 7 and 8.

Q. What was the subject of his lectures, if you recall? A. The question of what would be the role of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union in the event of any conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union or any—again quote—imperialist war, unquote, and that the role of the union would be, where possible, to slow down production of basic metals and slow down the smelter plants processing copper and zinc ore that came out of the area down there, that they were making plans for just such an eventuality.

13046 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you a copy of Political Affairs for September 1948, specifically the article entitled "For a Fighting Party Rooted Among the Industrial Workers," by Henry Winston, commencing on page 834 and ending on page 856. This has been marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 418. This is stated to be a report to the convention on the organizational and ideological tasks of the CPUSA. I ask you if you have ever seen that article before. A. I have.

Q. Have you read that article? A. I have.

Q. Did you have a copy of it in your possession at any time? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was it used in any Communist Party discussions? A. It was used in discussions at the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party in October and November of 1949. It was the basis for discussion of the tasks of the Party.

Q. You say that was used in October 1949? A. Pardon me, 1948, I am sorry.

MR. SHEEHAN: Mr. Chairman, we would like at this time to offer this exhibit in evidence as Petitioner's Ex-13047 hibit No. 418.

MR. ABT: What is the number?

MR. SHEEHAN: Exhibit 418.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to emphasize certain parts of this article, specifically page 839, in the right-hand column the first sentence of the third full paragraph, which reads: "The central task before the Party is the fight for shifting the main base of our party to the working class. This can not be done unless we turn the face of the entire party to workers in the factories."

Again, on page 840, under the heading, "How to Apply the Concentration Policy," the first sentence of the second paragraph on that page: "First of all, it requires a fundamental understanding of the role of the workers in the basic industries in relation to the working class and life of the country as a whole."

Again, skipping one sentence, the third sentence in that paragraph: "One can not conceive of successfully building the Progressive Party, of organizing an effective fight against the Draft, or in defense of civil liberties, a successful fight against war and fascism, unless this section of the working class is fully mobilized."

The next two sentences I want to emphasize are the first two sentences of the next paragraph: "Secondly, 13048 such a policy requires the selection of the points of concentration where a base must be secured, if we are to set in motion the entire labor movement. This means knowing which districts must be given major national attention, which industries are key and what plants are decisive."

The right-hand column on the same page, the first full sentence in that column: "While we must strengthen the Party in all basic industries, we must particularly select for major concentration such industries as steel, auto, mining, maritime, electrical, and railroad."

Finally on page 841 in the third full paragraph, the second sentence: "In practice we concerned ourselves much more with specific policy and tactical questions of the Unions, of relationship to top bodies, rather than to questions of building a base below to insure correct policies and tactics."

I would like to emphasize those portions of that article.

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Mr. Matusow, did you ever discuss this article with its author, Henry Winston? A. I did.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13049 Q. Did you ever discuss this article with its author, Mr. Henry Winston? A. I did.

Q. Will you tell us when and where? A. In December 1948 I had gone to Philadelphia to attend a meeting on press building, the question of subscriptions to the Sunday Worker. The main speaker at that meeting was Henry Winston. After the meeting Mr. Ben Simonowsky and Mr. Winston and myself returned to New York. In the course of 13050 the trip back to New York on the Pennsylvania Railroad, we discussed the article in question here.

Q. Will you tell us what he said about the article? A. He said that the question of industrial concentration and the movement of young people, members of the Communist Party youth movement, to basic industries was important at this time because in the event of any, again quote, imperialist war, unquote, it would be necessary to have people in basic industries to mobilize the workers against this war in an effort to slow down production and to do whatever possible to see that such a, quote, unjust war, unquote, is not successful.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13052 Q. Mr. Matusow, are you acquainted with the non-Communist provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act? A. I am.

Q. Did you discuss these requirements with members of the Party? A. I did.

Q. Will you tell us with whom, where and when? A. In the spring of 1948 and in the fall of 1949 I discussed the question of the non-Communist affidavit of the Taft-Hartley Act with one Aaron Kramer, an employee and officer of the United Office and Professional Workers Union, one Jack Greenspan, a business agent for one of the United Office and Professional Workers locals, one Ethel Beech, who was in charge of the union hiring hall of the United Office and Professional Workers Union on 29th Street, New York City.

Q. I believe it is clear. I asked you before if you discussed this with members of the Party. I want to make sure. Are these people members of the Party? A. Yes, they are.

13053 Q. Will you tell us what you were told in your discussions?

* * * * * * * * * * *

A. The Party decision that was discussed by the Party members that I have just mentioned was that in order to get around the provisions of the Taft-Hartley—

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: The first meeting was with Mr. Kramer at the office of the United Office and Professional Workers Union in May and early June of 1949, and with the same Mr.

Kramer when he was vacationing at Camp Unity
13054 in July of 1949. So the question of getting around, as he stated, the non-Communist provisions in the Taft-Hartley Act was that we could resign and the orders were to resign from the Communist Party; in the case of some of the very well known Communists who were in trade unions to have a public resignation, that is, published in the Daily Worker, but the only thing, as he stated, that ceased to be in existence was formal recognition of our membership in the Communist Party. We were still members of the Communist Party, but as I stated, a letter would be published saying you had resigned from the Communist Party. They still attended meetings, as he stated, with other members of the Communist Party.

13055 THE WITNESS: The question of Miss Ethel Beck, who was in charge of the union hiring hall or the placement center, the office of the United Office and Professional Workers Union, I had been instructed to see her by the New York County office of the Communist Party in April of 1949. I was instructed to see her in relation to obtaining a job in one of the direct mail houses, as they call it, that were under contract to the union, and also I was instructed to see at the same time a Mr. Jack Greenspan, who was business agent for the direct mail houses. As I say, it was a meeting of the Communist Party, instructions of the Communist Party. We discussed the question of the Taft-Hartley law and the non-Communist affidavit because at that time they were attempting to get employment for me in one of the direct mail houses where they felt the union was weak and the Party said we have to have a Party member in that direct mail house. I raised the question at that time,
13056 if I went into the shop and got a job, for instance, as shop steward and would have to comply with the non-Communist affidavit of the Taft-Hartley law, would I be required to sign that non-Communist affidavit. At that time on the question of resignation from the Communist Party, I was told that resignation from the Communist Party, but continuing to function as a Communist, was the correct procedure.

Q. You mentioned that you worked for Communist Party bookshops. How long did you work in bookshops for the Communist Party during your membership? A. Over a period of 1948 and 1949, ten months of full time employment, and approximately six months of part-time employment.

Q. Will you tell us where you worked and at just what times? A. In June of 1948 I worked at the Jefferson School bookshop, the Jefferson School of Social Science, 575 Sixth Avenue, New York City. In July and August and part of the month of September I worked at their summer camp, Camp Sherwood, Monticello, New York. In the 13057 period from September 1948 through approximately March of 1949 I worked at the Jefferson School Bookshop on Sunday evenings, where I kept the bookshop open in conjunction with a lecture series that was held at the school. In May over the Memorial Day week-end in 1949 I worked for the Jefferson School Bookshop at their camp, that year Camp Arrowhead at Ellinville, New York.

The third week in June 1949 I went to work at Camp Unity, and I worked as manager of the bookshop there from that week in June until the first week in September 1949. From the second week in September 1949 until approximately the first week in December 1949 I worked at the Workers Bookshop in New York City.

Q. Will you tell us what connection the Workers Bookshop had with the Communist Party, if any? A. It was part of the Wholesale Book Corporation and Communist Party literature distribution center, part of the New York State literature department of the Communist Party.

Q. What was the principal function of these bookshops? A. To sell Communist Party literature, Marxist-Leninist literature.

Q. Did you attend any Communist Party schools? A. Yes, I did.

13058 Q. What schools did you attend? A. I attended new members classes of the Communist Party in the Joe York Youth Club of the Communist Party in the Bronx. I attended leadership classes given by the Tompkins Square Youth Section of the Communist Party. That was in 1948 and '49, running from about December 1948 through March 1949. I attended the Jefferson School of Social Science and studied Marxism I on Science and Society, for a period of ten weeks in the spring of 1948. In the fall of 1948, starting in October and running for 40 weeks, I received a scholarship for the Institute of Marxist Studies at the Jefferson School of Social Science.

Q. Regarding your course in Science and Society, how often did that class or course meet? A. For ten weeks, one and a half hours a week.

Q. I will ask you the same question about the course at the Institute of Marxist Studies. A. That ran for 40 weeks, three hours a week.

Q. What courses did you study specifically in the Institute of Marxist Studies? A. Marxism II, which was Political Economy, Marxism and Labor, Capitalism and the Class Struggle, Imperialism, What Is Philosophy, The Negro Question. There were three courses, but I wouldn't venture to go to my memory to give you the exact titles of those three courses.

13060 Q. Mr. Matusow, I would like to show you Government's Exhibit No. 121 in evidence which is the book "Foundations of Leninism," by Joseph Stalin, and ask you if you are familiar with this book. A. I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with that book? A. When I was an employee of the Jefferson School and the Workers Bookshop in my capacity as State Literature Director of the Labor Youth League and in relation to educational and reading material for educational programs in the various Communist Party clubs that I was a member of. Also, it was used as part of the selected reading for some of the courses in the Institute of Marxist studies at the Jefferson School.

13061 Q. Now I show you Government Exhibit No. 138 in evidence, which is the book "Problems of Leninism," by Joseph Stalin; and ask you if you are familiar with that book. A. I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with that book? A. Again it was used as part of the selected reading in the courses in the Institute of Marxist studies at the Jefferson School. It was also sold—I sold it at the bookshops at the Jefferson School and Workers Bookshop. I also distributed this book when I was state literature director of the Labor Youth League and used it in relation to selected readings for study in the Communist Party Youth Clubs of which I was a member.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 139 in evidence, which is the book "State and Revolution" by V. I. Lenin. Are you familiar with that book? A. I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with that book? A. Again in relation to my work at the Jefferson School and Workers Bookshops. I sold the book. In connection with the Institute of Marxist Studies at the Jefferson School for selected readings and the Communist Party study groups in the Communist Party Clubs that I was a member of.

13062 Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 149 in evidence, "The United Front," by Georgi Dimitrov, and ask you if you are familiar with that book. A. I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with that book? A. It was used as a text in the course Marxism and Labor, a part of the Institute of Marxist studies at the Jefferson School. It was also used and sold in the Workers and Jefferson School Bookshops, and used for reading material in specific study work in relation to industrial concentration in the Communist Party Clubs that I was a member of.

Q. I show you Government Exhibit No. 140, which is the book, "Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism," by V. I. Lenin, and ask you if you are familiar with that book. A. I am. There again the book was sold and used in the Jefferson School and Workers Bookshops. It was used in the courses at the Institute of Marxist Studies, in the Communist Party Youth Clubs of which I was a member, and we distributed this book through the State Literature Department of the Labor Youth League.

Q. Are you familiar with the book, "Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution"? A. I am.

Q. Will you tell us how you became familiar with 13063 that book? A. I first became familiar with the book when I was employed at the Jefferson School Bookshop in 1948. I sold the book at the Jefferson School Bookshop, at the workers bookshop. I distributed the book in the literature department of the Labor Youth League in New York State, and used "State and Revolution" as part of the text in the new members' classes of the Communist Party at the Ray Friedlander Youth Club.

Q. Are you familiar with the book "Mastering Bolshevism," by Joseph Stalin? A. Yes, I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with that book? A. "Mastering Bolshevism" was used as a text in the new members' classes at the Ray Friedlander Youth Club, of the Communist Party in 1949. We also sold the book at the Jefferson School and Workers Bookshops, and distributed the book through the state literature department of the Labor Youth League.

Q. I show you Government's Exhibit No. 330, which is the book, "History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union," and ask you if you are familiar with that book. A. I am.

Q. How did you become familiar with it? A. It was used as a basic text for new members' classes in the 13064 Communist Party, and part of the book was used for selected readings in some of the courses in the Institute of Marxist Studies. It was also distributed by the state literature department of the Labor Youth League and by the workers and Jefferson School Bookshops when I was employed there.

Q. Do you know of the Zhdanov report on "The International Situation" given at the conference of a number of Communist Parties in Poland in 1947? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Will you tell us where you first became familiar with the Zhadnov report? A. I first became familiar with the Zhadnov report at the Jefferson School Bookshop where we sold the Zhadnov report.

Q. Can you tell us what you know about the Zhadnov report?

THE WITNESS: It was used in a number of courses again in the Institute of Marxist Studies. The first copy 13065 of the report that I saw was one that was printed by Foreign Language Publishing House, Moscow. It had been obtained through the Four Continents Bookshop. The Wholesale Book Corporation had obtained it there. It was then out of print for a few weeks, and the Jefferson School reproduced the Zhadnov report in mimeograph form and used it as a basic text in a number of their courses.

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Was this report used in any discussions, in any clubs at which you were present? A. Yes, it was. It was used in relation to the study outline on the question of China. I forget the exact title of the study outline. It was put out by the Communist Party of New York State Educational Committee. The general idea was new people's democracy in China and the war dangers facing it through American imperialism. That was the general context of it. It was mainly dealing with the role of the American Communist Party in relation to establishing recognition of Communist China. The Zhadnov report was one of the selected readings in that.

Q. Do you recall when you had the last contact with the various books and reports that you have just described here?

A. Yes. It was in December 1950. I was in New York. I had just returned from New Mexico. I went up to the 13066 Jefferson School Bookshop to make arrangements with the manager, one Sid Ballinger to have him send certain Communist Party literature to me. I was planning on going back to New Mexico. While there we discussed a number of publications, that is the question of the Little Lenin Library, of which this is a part, still in stock there. I was trying to make arrangements to get a number of each of those and some of the basic texts such as history of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The books were still carried in stock there, and while I was there we discussed and referred to them as well as others.

By Mr. Sheehan:

Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you what is marked Government's Exhibit No. 419 for identification, which purports to be a bibliography of the Jefferson School of Social Science for the course Marxism V, The Struggle for Socialism, and I ask you if you have seen that document before. A. Yes, I have.

Q. Where did you see it? A. This was a study outline which was given me when I was taking the course, Struggle for Socialism, Marxism V, a part of the Institute of Marxist Studies. We used this outline as our basis for study, that is, the reading materials to be used in the course.

13067 Mr. Sheehan: Mr. Chairman, we wish to offer at this time this document as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 419 in evidence.

Miss McHale: Is this dated?

The Witness: This was used over a number of years. It was used in 1949. "It might have been used later."

13068 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you what has been marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No.

420, which purports to be a bibliography of the Jefferson School of Social Science for the course Marxism and Labor, and ask you if you have seen that before. A. I have.

Q. Where did you first see that? A. It was a study outline given to me for the course, Marxism and Labor, in the series of Marxist studies over the years 1948 and 1949.

13069 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you what is marked as Petitioner's Exhibit for identification No. 421, an article from Political Affairs of July 1950, entitled "For a United-Front Policy Among the Jewish People—Sharpen the Struggle Against Bourgeois Nationalism," beginning on page 55 and running through page 70. I want to call your attention to page 58, the right-hand column, beginning with section (b) at the end of that column, continuing through to page 61, the portion beginning with the heading "The Struggle Against Bourgeois Nationalism." I ask you if you have ever read that. A. Yes, I have.

Q. Will you tell us where and when you have had occasion to read that? A. In July of 1950 in New York City we discussed this at a meeting of the West Side Club of the Labor Youth League.

Q. Do you know who Ilya Ehrenburg is? A. He is a Soviet author, novelist and writer.

Q. Can you tell us anything more about him? A. I have sold a number of his books and articles and read them, one Novel called "The Storm. I read a speech of his that was delivered before an international gathering, a cultural gathering in Warsaw, Poland, in 1949.

13073 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you what has been marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 422, the book "The Theory of the Proletarian Revolution" published by International Publishers, and ask you if you have ever seen that book before? A. I have.

Q. Will you tell us where you saw that book? A. I saw this book at the Workers and Jefferson School Bookshops where it was sold. It was also sold through the state literature department of the Labor Youth League and used as a basic text for study in the new members' classes conducted in the Ray Friedlander Club of the Communist Party.

13079 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you what has been marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 423 the book, "The Dictatorship of the Proletariat," published by International Publishers, and ask you if you have ever seen that book before. A. I have.

Q. Where did you see that book? A. At the Workers Bookshop and the Jefferson School Bookshop. It was sold there. It was sold also and distributed by the State Literature Department of the Labor Youth League. It was also used as a basic text and reading for new members and leadership classes in the various Youth club of the Communist Party to which I belonged.

13088 Q. I believe you testified before the recess that you had instructions to arrange for the trip of the Communist Party delegate to the World Youth Festival in Budapest. Can you tell us what arrangements, if any, you made for this trip. A. Yes. When we got—that is, when Ted Bassett and I got to Puerto Rico, we conferred with Juan Santo Rivera, the Chairman of the Party there, and Caesar Andreau, A-n-d-r-e-a-u, the general secretary of the Communist Party. On the basis of that we selected Eugene Cuebues Arbona, the head of the Communist Party Youth Movement in Puerto Rico, as a delegate to go to the Budapest World Youth Festival meeting. I had instructions to give Mr. Ceubues, which I did, which were that he was to apply for his passport to go to Europe and in his application state that he was going to France, Italy, and England as a tourist. I also had instructions to pick up before I left

Puerto Rico the biographical information necessary
13089 for a Hungarian visa. I received from Cuebues photographs, his date of birth, signature, and other material that was necessary. I was instructed to and complied with the instructions to bring that material back to New York. I did turn them over to a Lou Diskin, the Chairman of the Communist Party Youth Movement in New York State, and Mr. Diskin and myself brought the information down to the office of the American Youth for a Free World at 144 Bleeker Street. While in Puerto Rico I was also instructed to tell Mr. Cuebues when he arrived in Paris, France, he was to go to the office of the World Federation of Democratic Youth and there he was to pick up his visa to Hungary.

Q. Were you told why your instructions were to tell him in his application to state that he was going to France, England, Italy and not to Hungary where he actually intended to go?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: I was told that the reason for his application stating that he was going to France, England, et cetera, was because the State Department had a ban on issuing passports to Hungary, and that the only way he could get there would be by applying for the passport to a western European country.

13090 By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Did you again see this Mr. Cuebues after you left Puerto Rico? A. I did.

Q. When and where did you see him again? A. I met Mr. Cuebues two days after he returned from Budapest, Hungary, in New York City, and there conducted him on a tour of the Communist Party Youth clubs in New York City, where he lectured.

Q. Did you have any conversations with him at this time? A. Yes, I did. He told me that he had complied with the instructions that I had given him about picking up a visa in Paris, and he said he had been to Hungary.

13092 Q. Mr. Matusow, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit No. 314 in evidence, which is the constitution of the Communist Party of the United States, and I ask you if you have seen that document before. A. I have.

13093 Q. Where did you see this constitution? A. I saw this constitution distributed at the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party, as well as Communist Party New York County Headquarters, New York City.

Q. Have you read it? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Did you discuss it in any of your classes in the Party? A. Yes, I did.

Q. I would like to direct your attention to the first sentence of the preamble of the constitution on page 3, which reads: "The Communist Party of the United States is the political party of the American working class, basing itself upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism." Were you given any explanation of this sentence in your discussions in your classes on the constitution?

Q. You may specify the time and place and the circumstances. A. The discussion of the constitution of the Communist Party of the United States was made at the Ray 13094 Friedlander Club of the Communist Party in Sunday afternoon classes held at the home of Mr. Ira Wallach, also known as Ted Tinsley. His wife, Mrs. Wallach, was conducting a class in leadership for members of the Ray Friedlander Youth Club of the Communist Party. I could not give you now the exact date. It was in that period of weeks of late 1948 or early 1949. For a period of weeks we had Sunday afternoon classes at that home on 14th Street.

In one of the first classes the question of the constitution of the Communist Party of the United States was raised, and it was discussed. The question of "Principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism" were interpreted at these classes by the instructor, Mrs. Wallach, and through the discussion, as meaning the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat, the establishment of socialism in the United States.

Q. Was it explained just how the dictatorship of the proletariat would be brought about? A. How the dictatorship of the proletariat would be brought about would be socialism through evolution or revolution.

Q. I would like to direct your attention to the first sentence of the second paragraph of the preamble, which reads: "The Communist Party upholds achievements of American democracy and defends the United States Consti-13095 tution and its Bill of Rights against its reactionary enemies who would destroy democracy and popular liberties."

On the basis of your study and your classes in which the Constitution was discussed, in your opinion can the two sentences that I have pointed out be reconciled?

13096 THE WITNESS: I started by saying that the class was set up by the New York County Educational Department of the Communist Party. It was an official class of the County Educational Department. On the 13097 question of the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism, the question of tolerance to minority groups in the society, the dictatorship of the proletariat, it was very strongly emphasized in the class that we will not and can not maintain the dictatorship of the proletariat and tolerate any minority group, any opposition to our dictatorship as a proletariat. On the basis of Mr. Sheehan's question, the question of reconciling the two paragraphs could not be gotten because the Constitution and the Bill of Rights do uphold the recognition of minority groups.

As we were taught in the first paragraph, there was no tolerance or recognizing of minority groups under the dictatorship of the proletariat.

13098 Q. As a result of your membership in the Communist Party and your attendance at Party Schools and meetings, what was your understanding of the aims and objectives of the Communist Party of the United States. A. That we will defend the interests, the quote that was used this morning, of the American working class and in terms of event of a show down, as it was put in the class, of a war with the Soviet Union, we would not support the American imperialists, unquote; and on the question of establishing a dictatorship of the proletariat in the United States it would be gotten through the means of revolution because they state, quote, the ruling class will not give up its power, unquote, and therefore we must use violent means.

Q. During the time of your membership in the Party did you hear from any spokesman for the Party or did you read in any literature of the Communist Party that there was ever any change in the ultimate aims and objectives of the Part as you stated them?

13099 THE WITNESS: No, there was never anything that I read showing changes in the aims of the Communist Party, in the time I was in the Party.

By MR. SHEEHAN:

Q. Did you ever hear any leaders of the Communist Party criticize any foreign or domestic policies of the Soviet Union?

THE WITNESS: I did not.

Q. Did you ever hear any leaders of the Party praise or approve the domestic or foreign policies of the United States? A. In context I would like to qualify the question, Mr. Sheehan.

Q. You may answer the question and explain your answer. A. In the question when the United States and the Soviet Union agreed, I have heard certain Party officials praise or recognize that the United States took a good position, but on a question where the United States and the Soviet Union disagreed on a certain question I have never seen the Communist Party come to the defense of the United States Government as opposed to that of the Soviet Union.

13100 MR. ABT: May we have the time and place of all these discussions and who said what, Mr. Chairman?

MR. BROWN: I believe the witness testified over his entire period of membership.

MR. ABT: That is my point, Mr. Chairman.

MR. MARCANTONIO: We are entitled to know when and where and who said it.

MR. BROWN: If you remember, and the circumstances when what you just testified to was said.

THE WITNESS: I didn't say that was stated. I think the question was "when you were a member of the Communist Party from October 1947 to January 19, 1951, did any leader of the Communist Party to your knowledge criticize the Soviet Union on their internal or domestic policy?" and the answer was no. I think you heard the other question.

Specific examples can be given. In the summer of 1948 when I was working for the Jefferson School at their summer camp we had a discussion given by Dave Goldway, the director of the Jefferson School, on the question of Yugoslavia and Tito. It was early in the summer. The discussion said that we agree with Tito, we agree with Yugoslavia and all the things they are trying to do. A few weeks later the news was published in the Cominform Bulletin, For a Lasting Peace, For a People's Democracy, that Marshal Tito and the Yugoslav Communist Party had been expelled

by the Cominform. The same Mr. Dave Goldway 13101 lectured at the Jefferson School Camp taking the reverse position, though it had been only a matter of a few weeks and he only read about it in the Cominform journal, according to his own admission to me at the camp.

13102 Miss McHale: From your profile of activities I got the impression that you were very active over that period in either operating bookshops or the sales of their products. Did you ever have anyone say to 13103 you, "Oh, I am not going to buy that. It is 30 years old. It is stale stuff"?

The Witness: No, I never did.

Miss McHale: They just accepted it as something that they should have because it appeared in the bibliographies?

The Witness: That is correct.

Miss McHale: Was there a lot of sales talk in promoting those periodicals?

The Witness: I may give an example for you. In 1948 a great to-do was made about the fact that the Communist Manifesto was 100 years old, but it is just as important today and lives on. It is just as relevant today as it was in 1848 when it was written. That is just one example of the other pieces of Marxist literature. In "The Young Generation," by Lenin, a publication which was dated 1905, there is a chapter called "Organizing the Youths" which was used quite extensively in the Labor Youth League in 1949 and recommended setting up certain basic principles for youth organizations.

. . . . . .

By Mr. Marcantonio:

13144 Q. You testified that in this discussion, this October meeting, late in October, the discussion centered around an article in the September issue of Political Affairs, isn't that right? A. Correct.

Q. You said it was said there at this meeting that it was the policy of the Communist Party not to support the United States in an imperialist war against the Soviet Union. A. Correct.

13229 Daniel Scarletto called as a witness for Petitioner, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. After you started in this school were any security measures taken to protect the identity of the students attending this school?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes. The first security measure that was taken, we were all given numbers and not names. We were told, "If you know any of these people before you 13246 started this class, never to call them by their first name or last name during this course."

* * * * * * * * * * * *

MR. BROWN: Do you remember the persons who were present?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. BROWN: And where this conversation took place?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. BROWN: And what time?

THE WITNESS: Yes. In the latter part of November when we first started the classes, the instructor was Gunther Michel, and there were only two people at that time I had been acquainted with before the classes started. One was Arthur Schaffer and the other was Silvia Freeman and her husband.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Was it Michel who asked you not to address anyone by his first name? A. Yes. He was the instructor.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. After these instructions were given by Gunther 13247 Michel, were you given a number? A. Yes, I was.

Q. What number were you given? A. I was No. 13.

Q. Do you recall the names of any of the textbooks that were used in connection with this school? A. Yes, I recall a few. One was the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. One was State and Revolution, and Imperialism by Marx. The Communist Manifesto. That is all I can remember offhand, right now.

Q. Were you given these books or did you have to buy them? A. No, we had to pay for every one we got.

Q. Were you given any other material in connection with the Marxist Institute? A. Oh, yes. They gave us our outlines.

MR. STORY: Mr. Clark, will you mark this document Petitioner's Exhibit 424.

13248 By Mr. Story:

Q. Mr. Scarletto, I hand you a document and ask you if you can identify this document. A. Yes. This is a copy of the first outline of the Marxist Institute, the first quarter.

Q. When did you receive a copy of this outline, Mr. Scarletto? A. At the first class we had in the Marxist Institute.

Q. Were you given other outlines in addition to this one while you were connected with the Marxist Institute? A. Yes, I was.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13255 Q. Mr. Scarletto, I hand you a document which has been marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit 425, and ask you if you can identify that document. A. Yes, I can.

Q. What is that document? A. This was one of our study outlines on Imperialism.

Q. When, during the course of time you attended the Marxist Institute, did you receive that outline? A. I received this one here—after we had completed this study outline on Marxism-Leninism, we received Imperialism.

Q. Was that outline used during the course of instruction at the Marxist Institute? A. Yes, it was.

13256 Q. Mr. Scarletto, I refer you to page 4 of session 1 of Government Exhibit for identification 425, and at the top of the page, page 4, where it says "Required reading." While you attended the Marxist Institute as a student did you read the material which is listed in this outline under the heading "Required reading" and "Supplemental reading"?

Mr. Abt: What page is that you are referring to?

Mr. Story: Page 4 of session 1.

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Story:

Q. Would you look through the outline which is government's exhibit for identification 425 and tell the Panel whether or not it was required for the students attending this Marxist Institute to read the assignments in the outline under the heading "Required reading"? A. Sometimes there were a couple, some of the books that we didn't have to bother with, but he always told us which ones he wanted us to get in the outline at the schools.

Q. I see. Did that pertain to all the sessions or just to session 1 which you are looking at here? A. It seems as though throughout the whole study there were certain books that were not necessary for us to have. He would just tell us which ones to get.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13257 Q. Mr. Scarletto, did you complete the full course that you were told that you were to take when you started at the Marxist Institute? A. No, we didn't.

13258 Q. How long did you continue in the Marxist Institute? A. We continued to the spring of '50, until shortly after the Korean War started.

Q. What happened to the Marxist Institute after the Korean war started? A. When the Korean war started, we moved it and had a couple of meetings, and then it was cancelled and we were told by the instructor that we were cancelling it for security reasons and that we would be notified when it would start up again.

Q. Were you ever notified that the institute would start up again? A. Yes, I was.

Q. Tell the Panel what happened. A. I received instructions from the section organizer of the 45th AD, Mim Schaffer, that I was to go to the home of Ada Dobbs on a certain date, at a certain time there—The following week it was—and that she would instruct me where to go to continue my Marxist Institute.

Q. Did you go to the home of Ada Dobbs? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What information did you receive there? A. She told me she couldn't give me any information on where to go, but I would have to wait there and that a man would come who knew where it was and would go with me.

13259 Q. Mr. Scarletto, where had the Marxist Institute classes been held prior to this time? A. They were held at a hall, some classrooms they had over there at the Jewish Cultural Center in the City Terrace.

MR. ABT: What is that?

THE WITNESS: At the Jewish Cultural Center in City Terrace.

* * * * * * * * * *

By MR. STORY:

Q. Did this man ever come to Ada Dobbs' house? A. Yes, he did. His name was Lym, L-y-m.

Q. What took place after Lym arrived at Ada Dobbs' house? A. She introduced me to Lym. I had never met him before. And said that he would be our instructor. He told me to follow him in my automobile and he would take me over to the home. He said we are having it in a private home for security reasons. To park my car a couple 13260 of blocks away from the house. As he went by he pointed to the house and drove on, and so did I, and I walked back and met him there.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, were you told by your instructor or any of your superiors why the Marxist Institute was being discontinued?

* * * * * * * * * *

13261 THE WITNESS: I will answer the question, yes. It was for security reasons, and we were told that the Korean war was getting pretty hot and that they thought they would call it off.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Who told you that, Mr. Scarletto? A. The section organizer told me that.

Q. What was the name? A. Mim Schaffer.

13262 Q. When did she tell you that? A. That was in the late summer of 1950.

Q. The later summer of 1950. A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, did you attend any Communist Party conventions at any time during your membership in the Party? A. Yes, I attended one convention.

Q. Where and when did you attend this convention, and what was the convention? A. In 1948, in July, I attended a convention—it was a sectional convention—and it was in Los Angeles on Echo Park, the name of the Street, at the Echo Park Women's Club.

Q. Do you remember when in 1948 you attended this convention? A. I think it was in June.

Q. Did you attend this convention as a delegate? A. Yes. I was voted as a delegate from my club to go to this 13263 convention.

Q. About how many delegates attended this convention? A. There were about 60 of them there.

Q. How were you selected as a delegate for this convention? A. I was selected and voted by the club to go.

Q. At the time you were selected as a delegate for this convention, were you told where the convention was to be held? A. No, I wasn't told where the convention was to be held, but I was told the day it was to be held.

Q. How did you find out where the convention was to be held? A. I had to go to the home of the section organizer. She gave me the address on El Sereno Avenue and told me to go there Saturday morning about a quarter of eight and pick up a load of delegates in my car, and that there would be one member there that would know where the convention was to take place. She also told me to bring my lunch.

Q. Who was the section organizer who gave you these instructions? A. Mim Schaffer.

Q. Did you go to the address she had given you on the date that she told you to be there? A. Yes, I was there right on time when I was supposed to be.

13264 Q. What took place after you arrived at this address? A. The people were there that I was to pick up. They were all there, and Jim Forest was there, and he told me he was the one who knew where the convention was to take place. We all got in my car.

Q. What took place after you got into your car? A. He told me to drive to Echo Park and I drove there, and he showed me where it would be but he said, "Don't stop here. Keep on going." He had me drive a couple of blocks down the street and we stopped and let the women out of the car, which left only him and me. Then he had me turn left and park down a side street. He said, "Be careful never to park near a building where there is a meeting going on."

Q. What type of building was this convention held in? A. It was a one-story wooden building there, about the size of this room.

Q. What was the building called? A. The Echo Park Women's Club was the name of the building. That is the only name they had on the front of it.

Q. After you and Jim Forest had parked the car, tell the Panel what happened next. A. He and I walked back to the building, and as we stepped in the door we had to be identified by a Panel. We had to state our club, our position in the club, and our name. That was all recorded. Then they had a master-at-arms which when the Panel gave 10265 him the nod, he allowed us in.

Q. How long did this convention last, Mr. Scarlato? A. Counting our half-hour lunch period—we weren't allowed to leave the building for lunch—we were in there for approximately 8½ hours.

Q. Did any of the delegates attempt to leave the building during this convention? A. No one was allowed to leave the building during the convention. They had those instructions before they came in.

Q. What took place at this convention? A. All the delegates of different clubs had something to say about the work they were doing in the clubs. It so happened that the delegate who was from the same club that I knew, talked from our club. I didn't do any speaking that day.

Q. What happened when the convention was over at the end of the day? A. When the convention was over we were instructed to leave in intervals of five or six people, and the master-at-arms would let five or six people out at a time.

Then we would close the door and wait a while and he would let a few more out.

Q. Did you leave with the same group that you brought to the convention? A. Yes.

13266 Q. After you had gathered the delegates into your car, what did you do then? A. I took them all home.

Mr. Abt: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move to strike all of this witness' testimony with reference to so-called secret practices engaged in at this convention on the grounds that I have urged previously, and that is that the secrecy which this witness claims was practiced at this convention is not secrecy of the character defined in and required by the act and therefore the witness' testimony on that question is entirely irrelevant and immaterial to any issue in this proceeding.

By Mr. Story:

Q. Mr. Scarletto, was the organizational structure of your Communist Party club changed at any time? A. If the Mexican Concentration Club? It was changed, yes.

Q. How was it changed? A. At a chairman's meeting in the spring of 1949 we had orders from our section organizer, Mim Schaffer, to break our club, which had gained a few members. We had orders to split it in two and make two groups out of it.

Q. About how many members did you have in the Mexican Concentration Club at that time? A. There were 15 members, but there were always a couple of them 13267 who couldn't make the meetings regularly. We had 15 members.

Q. After you received these instructions from Mim Schaffer was the Mexican Concentration Club broken down into two groups? A. Oh, yes, we split it in two.

Q. Did you hold any position in either of the groups after it was broken down? A. I was still Org. Sec. for both groups.

Q. Did Mim Schaffer tell you the reason for this breakdown? A. Yes.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What did she tell you? A. She said it was for security reasons, and she also said, she told the chairman of the meeting for the Org. Sec. not ever to collect any dues in the presence of other members, that it would all be done in private. Take a member into the next room then to collect any dues or sustainers from them, so the other members wouldn't know what another member's standing is in the club as far as dues were concerned. That I did.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13268 Q. In connection with these dues that were to be collected in privacy, did you have any official functions or duties in connection with the collection of dues in the Mexican Concentration Club? A. That was one of the official duties of the organization secretary to handle the finances.

Q. And you were the organizational secretary after the breakdown? A. Yes. I used to go to both meetings at times.

Q. Tell the Panel just how you would collect the dues after these instructions from the section organizer. A. I would take a person, each individual, into the next room of whatever home we were holding the meeting in, and I would tell them how much they owed me and where they stood, and they would pay me in private. There were no re-13269 ceipts or anything.

Q. Did you keep a record of the dues payments, Mr. Scarletto? A. I was not allowed to keep a record. I had to do it in my head. I had to know what every one owed me.

Q. After this reorganization or breakdown in the summer of 1949 did you have any further reorganization at any time during your membership? A. Will you ask that question again, please?

Q. After the reorganization of your club in the summer of 1949, did you have any further reorganization during your membership in the Mexican Concentration club? A. Yes.

Q. When did this reorganization take place? A. Towards the end of the year of 1949, late in the year.

Q. Tell the Panel what happened during this reorganization. A. We had a chairman's meeting, and we were instructed by Miss Schaffer, our section organizer. She said that the clubs had to be broken down again, reshuffled. We were to take these two groups which we had and split them again, which left us with, on the average, about four people to the group.

13270 Q. Were you told why this breakdown was to take place?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, we were told that we were to have this breakdown so in case any one group was picked up, they would get only three or four people, which wouldn't prove too much.

By MR. STORY:

Q. How were these groups reorganized, Mr. Scarletto, when they were reorganized in the fall of 1949? A. We broke them down into small groups, which were four on the average, and we appointed someone as group leader for each of these small groups. Then the Chairman and I would go to a chairman's meeting and we would take notes on all that was to be done. Then we would have a group leader's meeting, and we would pass the information on to them so they could relay it to their smaller groups.

Q. After this reorganization in the latter part of 1949 did the entire Mexican Concentration Club meet in one group at any time? A. No, they continued on through 1950 in small groups.

Q. Where did these groups hold meetings after they were organized? A. Our instructions were to hold the meeting at a different place every week. We held them in automobiles, too, seeing that there would be only four people. We would hold meetings in automobiles. Then we would change 13271 around. We would use different houses at different times.

Q. At this meeting where you received instructions for the reorganization in late 1949 did you as an official of the Mexican Concentration Club receive any other instructions concerning the security of your groups? A. Yes.

Q. What instructions did you receive? A. We were supposed to change our names and use only nicknames from then on, which we did, and to use code, to make up our own code for telephone conversations.

Q. Would you tell the Panel what type of code you would use in connection with telephone conversations? A. We were all given nicknames, and but for one person we weren't supposed to know where the meeting was to be held, and then I would get a phone call, for instance, which would say, "Hello, Chips, come by and pick up that book tonight." And I would know just where the meeting was going to be by such a statement.

Q. During what period of time, Mr. Scarletto, was this system used? A. It was used from late 1949 through 1950.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, did you receive a Communist Party membership card or book in the year 1949? A. I received the constitution of the Party.

13272 Q. I mean a membership card. Did you receive a membership card? A. Oh, no, I never received a membership card for 1949.

Q. Were any membership cards issued for the year 1949? A. No, they were not.

Q. Were you as an official of the Mexican Concentration Club told why they wouldn't issue membership cards?

THE WITNESS: Yes.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What were you told?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: At a chairman's meeting at Mim Schaffer's house we received the orders that there would be no more cards put out because if a person was ever searched and cards were found, it would prove embarrassing.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

13273 THE WITNESS: That I would say was in the early part of 1949.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Who told you that, Mr. Scarletto? A. Mim Schaffer, our section organizer.

Q. You have testified, Mr. Scarletto, that you had a membership card for the year 1948. A. That is correct.

Q. What happened to that membership card? A. We were given orders to destroy our 1948 cards.

Q. Would you tell us who told you, when you were told, and where you were told? A. We were told that at the home of Mim Schaffer at the first of 1949, when we were told there would be no 1949 cards issued.

Q. Did you destroy your membership card? A. No.

Q. What did you do with it? A. It was turned in with reports to the FBI.

13274 Q. Mr. Scarletto, you have testified that you were assigned to the Communist Party underground in January 1951. Will you tell the Panel when you received the instructions for this assignment, who told you, and what you were told? A. I was told by my chairman, Gertrude Stoughton, right around the first of 1951, that I was to get in contact—

Q. That was 1951, is that correct? A. Yes, right around the first of January 1951, yes.

—that I was to contact Arthur Schaffer, and that I did.

Q. When did you contact Art Schaffer? A. She told me on a Tuesday night, and on a Wednesday night I had to go over there, and I went over and caught him home about seven o'clock.

Q. Caught who home? A. Art Schaffer. At the time she said for me to be there.

Q. What happened after you went to the home of Art Schaffer? A. I knocked on the door, and he was home alone. He answered the door and said "Come on in." I went on in and he stepped outside and looked around first and then he locked the door from the inside.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Schaffer after he had locked the door? A. Yes, I did.

13275 Q. What did Schaffer say to you? A. He said, "You have been chosen to go into a new kind of work." He said, "From now on you will be severed from your club and you will be responsible only to the county."

Q. Only responsible to whom? A. The county.

Q. What did he mean, responsible to the county? A. That means the Party, the County functionaries.

Q. The county office of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. What county is that? A. Los Angeles County.

Q. Did Schaffer give you any other instructions about that time? A. He said, "I am sorry I can't tell you what your duties will be, but I can only give you a couple of lines." He said that he was in the same kind of work and the other hint was that I would be running a machine. That was all that he could tell me, and that in a couple of weeks he asked what was the best time to catch me home at night and I said about six-thirty. He said, "Fine, within about two weeks there will be a Man contact you at your house." He said "You have never seen him before and he will say that he is a friend of Ernie's." He told me that being that we are not allowed to keep a 13276 record of our members or dues standing, "I want you to make a list of all the members and their dues standing, and take it over to your club chairman and tell her that you will not be with the club. Turn these names and dues standings over to her and let her handle them from there."

Q. Did you take the dues standing and the names of the members of your club to the section organizer? A. No, to the chairman of the club, of the Mexican Concentration Club.

Q. What did you tell the chairman of the Mexican Concentration Club at that time? A. From Artie's house I went straight over there, and she was home. I gave her the list. I made it up at Artie's house and took it over and told her that I was no longer in the club, that I had been severed by Arthur, and that here were the names and all the dues standings.

Q. Did Schaffer tell you what type of machine you would be running after you got into this new work? A. No, he didn't tell me whatsoever. He just said a machine.

Q. This man who was to contact you and tell you that he was a friend of Ernie—did you know anyone in the Communist Party by the name of Ernie? A. No, I didn't know at the time.

Q. What were you doing for a living during this period of time, Mr. Scarletto? A. I was working over at 13277 Lockheed at that time, Lockheed Aircraft.

Q. Working as what? A. As an aircraft sheet-metal man.

Q. At the time you had this conversation with Art Schaffer were you engaged in any other Communist Party activities as of that time? A. I was just engaged in my club duties as organization secretary.

Q. Were you engaged in any campaigns for the Communist Party? A. No, not at that time, not that I recall.

Q. After the conversation with Art Schaffer were you contacted by the man who he told you would contact you? A. Yes. It was more than two weeks, though. It was about two and one-half. The man came to my house at approximately 6:30 at night and knocked on the door, and when I answered he said, "I am a friend of Ernie's." I said, "Oh, yes, I have been expecting you."

Q. What took place after that? A. He said, "Where can we talk?" and I said, "We can go out in my car." We went out to my car parked at the curb, and there we talked.

Q. What did he tell you after you got in your automobile?

A. He said, he asked me, "How long have you been 13278 in the movement?" and I told him. He asked me what schools I had attended. He asked me what club I was in, what was my position in the club and who was my section organizer.

Q. Did you give the man who identified himself as a friend of Ernie's all this information? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Were any arrangements made for further contact after this meeting? A. Yes. He told me that he would contact me again in two or three weeks, at the same time.

Q. Did he at this first meeting tell you anything about the type of work you would be doing? A. Yes, he said something about I would be running a No. 40 printing press.

Q. Did he tell you where this printing press was located? A. No.

Q. Did he tell you anything further about what you were to accomplish with the printing press or what your duties would be? A. Yes. He said that we were going to set up a printing press and that it was to be used to move masses of people in time of crisis.

Q. After this first contact with this man who identified himself as a friend of Ernie's, were you later contacted by the same man? A. Yes. He came back in about, I 13279 say, February, about the middle of February. He came back again.

Q. What year, Mr. Scarletto? A. 1951.

Q. What took place at this second meeting? A. He knocked on the door and he said, "Can we go out to the car and talk?" and I said, "Oh, yes." So we went back out to the car. He said, "Say, can you operate a typewriter?" I said, "No, I have never used a typewriter." He said, "Well, that is all right." He told me that the following Saturday he wanted me to meet him in Downey, California on the corner of Firestone and Lakewood Boulevard. That is about 30 miles from my home.

Q. Did you meet this contact or this man in Downey, California? A. Yes. On Saturday morning I drove my car down and parked it in a parking lot, and I walked down to the corner where I was to meet him at nine o'clock.

Q. Approximately what date was this that you met this contact? A. I would say it was in the middle of February of 1951.

Q. What took place after you arrived at Downey, California? A. As I walked down to the corner, to my surprise I ran into an old friend of mine from the Marxist 13280 Institute, Irving Ritkes. I was surprised to see any one else there besides the man I was to meet, and I said, "What are you doing here?" and he smiled and said, "The same thing you are." We both waited until our contact came there.

Q. What happened after the contact arrived? A. He drove up in his automobile and he said, "You two fellows get your cars and follow me," and that we did. We followed him over to the next town, which is named Norwalk.

Q. What happened after you arrived at Norwalk, California? A. He circled around the neighborhood there off the main highway, and he pulled up on a side road at the home which I later learned was Dick Morton's, pulled up there and parked his car.

Q. What happened after you got out of the car? A. He introduced me to Dick, and he said, "Dick, you and Irving and Danny will be working together."

Q. When you say he introduced you, who are you talking about? A. This man who said he was a friend of Ernie's. I didn't know his name until they called him by the name of Kinney. He answered to the name of Kinney, by Ritkes and Dick.

Q. Did you know this man by any other name other than Kinney? A. No, I didn't, not until that time, until 13281 he was identified. I got his license number and later identified him by a picture at the FBI.

Q. After you were introduced to Dick Morton, what took place then? A. We all went out to the garage, which was closed up and we went in the side door. The big double door was down and locked. We went in the little side door. There all four of us uncrated and set up this printing press.

Q. Name the four people who were uncrating the printing press. A. Irving Ritkes, Dick Morton, and this Kinney, and myself.

Q. When you say uncrating this printing press, was it a new or used printing press? A. It was a new printing press, still in the crate.

Q. Do you know the type of printing press that was? A. I think it was a Chandler & Price, if I am not mistaken. It was a hand-operated printing press.

Q. After you had uncrated the printing press, what took place? A. We set it up to see if it would work all right.

Q. Did the machine work all right? A. Yes, it worked.

Q. After you had ascertained that this machine worked all right, did anything else happen during the day 13282 that you were there? A. After we got the machine to working we didn't run off any prints because we didn't have the proper ink. We just made sure the mechanism was all right, and Dick Morton and Irving Ritkes stated that they were both expert printers and were both employed in the printing industry. Then Kinney said that those two men were to teach me how to operate the machine and that I would take instructions on whatever date we would set up. That is what he told us.

Q. Did you receive any instructions that first day that you were out there, out at Dick Morton's garage? A. Yes. He showed me some of the working operations of the machine and told me how to care for the rollers. He told me never to lay the rolls down because they might get a flat side on them. It was the general operation of the machine that day.

Q. Did the three other men remain in the garage with you all the time that you were at Morton's house that day? A. Yes, we all remained in the garage.

Q. After this first trip out in the garage did you return to that garage at any other time? A. Yes. Kinney shook hands with me, and he left. He said that I would never see him again, that I would be responsible to these other two men. They told me to come out on Tuesday nights 13283 for my instructions on the machine.

Q. Did you go out on Tuesday nights thereafter? A. Yes, and I complained to Ritkes that the machine was too far away from my house, and there was a lot of traffic getting out there and back, about 60 miles. He told me to quit the griping, that there were three other machines and they were farther yet.

Q. You were employed during this time, were you not? A. Yes.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Story: What were you doing? A. I was working out at the Lockheed Aircraft.

Q. How many hours a day were you working? A. I was working eight hours a day.

Q. After you had complained to Ritkes did you go to this garage at Dick Morton's house any other time? A. Yes,
I was there seven or eight times, I think, once a 13284 week.

Q. Did anyone go there with you? A. Irving went with me a couple of times.

Q. Was Dick Morton present on these occasions? A. Yes, he was always home because he left the garage locked.

Q. In addition to this printing press, were there any other supplies in this garage? A. Yes. When I first started taking my instructions there was a large supply of paper in the garage, but Irving Ritkes when I first started going out there had me meet him on San Fernando Road, and we transferred more paper and ink and fluid to clean up the machine, to clean the rolls with. He gave me a form. He wanted to see if I could set up the machine with this form that he made up.

Q. Where did he give you this form that you mentioned? A. On the San Fernando Road. It was taken from his car and put into my car.

Q. Will you describe to the Panel what this form looked like? A. It was a frame of iron, and in the center all the print was put in. It was just a practice form. It was just for a beginner to learn how to set up a machine. Then it had the pins around the edges, and blocks to hold the print in this form. It was wrapped up in cardboard about that big (indicating).

13285 Q. What did Ritkes tell you to do with this form after he gave it to you? A. He wanted me to run off some prints and see how I could run the machine. That was after I had had a couple of instructions. He said that after he saw how I could run the machine, if I proved all right, he wanted to have a practice run. He said he wanted to see how long it would take him to make up the form, get it to me, and have me go out and run off the number of leaflets which they would want and get them to the distribution points.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

13286 Q. Mr. Scarletto, I hand you a document and ask you if you can identify that document. A. Yes, I can.

Q. What is that document? A. That is a picture of the form which I used.

Q. Are there any initials or is there any identification appearing on the document which causes you to identify it? A. Yes, there are my initials and the date that I got it.

Q. This is a photograph of the form that you were given by Ritkes, is that correct? A. Yes, it is.

Q. How many copies of this form did you print when you took it out to the printing press? A. Oh, I would say I might have printed about 60 or 80. After I got it to working I ran off about 60 or 80. The ones that weren't any good I just threw away.

Q. What did you do with these prints? A. Irving wanted to see them. Some of them I turned over with my reports to the FBI, and the rest I took over and showed them to Irving, and he was very pleased at the progress I had made.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

13287 Q. Mr. Scarletto, you have stated that there was a supply of paper in this garage at one time. A. Yes.

Q. Can you give the Panel any indication as to the amount of paper that was stored in the garage?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: It was on a large box, larger than this table. I would say about one-half times larger than this table, and it was stacked about that high with paper all over the top.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What other material was stored in the garage? A. There was a large can of paste ink which is used in 13288 that type of printing, and cleaning fluid for the machine, and a bunch of clean rags. We always had to have rags.

Q. At Approximately when was the last time you went to the garage at Dick Morton's house? A. I would say about May of '41. I would say, rather around the first part of May or the end of April, somewhere in there I stopped going out.

By MR. STORY:

Q. During the time that you were in the Communist Party underground as you have described it, did you have any association whatsoever with other Communist Party units? A. I was told that I was never—I was told by Irv. Irving told me when we first started in this work that I was severed from the club, of course, and that I was never to be seen in public again at any function. I was never supposed to go out with any leaflets, never to go to meetings, no leaflets, and never to be seen at any picket lines or any mass meetings. I wasn't supposed to associate too much with my former Communist Party friends.

Q. Did you pay Communist Party dues during this time? A. Yes. He told me that I was to go by and pay all my dues and sustainers and drive money which they would be asking for, by quotas—he said I still had to fulfill my quotas—to Mim Schaffer.

13289 Q. Did you pay your dues to Mim Schaffer? A. I paid my dues, my sustainers, and every time there was a quota or fund raising campaign I had to pay that all to her.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, were you given a security examination at any time in connection with this underground work?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Yes. I would say about the second week in May I received a phone call—

MR. ABT: May we have the year?

THE WITNESS: Of 1951. I received a phone call from my contact, Irving, and he said that there would be a man call me up and identify himself as Lou. He said, "He will call you up in a day or so," and I was to get in contact with him.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Did this Lou ever contact you? A. Yes. He called me and said, "Hello," and asked me who was talking. I said "Danny." He said, "This is Lou." He said, "I want you to meet me tomorrow night. Drive your car to the Wabash Theater." That is a theater which is close. "In the City Terrace, and park your car there at about a quarter to eight."

Q. Did you meet the man who was to identify himself as Lou at the Wabash Theater? A. Yes, I drove my 13290 car there and I parked and waited, and soon a man walked up to the car and said, "I am Lou."

Q. What took place after he walked up and identified himself as Lou? A. I said, "Who sent you?" He said, "Irv." So I opened the door. The window was rolled down. I said, "Get in." He congratulated me on my being so security conscious.

Q. What did you do after Lou got into your car? A. He told me to drive and he would tell me where to go. He took me about six or seven blocks away up in the hills there and had me park in front of an apartment house.

Q. What did you do after you parked in front of the apartment house? A. He got out of the car and I got out and we walked up the steps and knocked on the door of this apartment on the right. I had never been there before in my life.

Q. What happened after you knocked at the door of the apartment? A. This lady answered the door and he introduced me to her. He said, "I want you to meet Lillian Carlson." In turn she introduced me to her husband, Frank Carlson.

Q. Were there any other people present at Carlson's home when you arrived? A. Yes. There was an elderly woman, who left after I arrived.

13291 Q. After the lady left, then what people were present at Carlson's house? A. There was Lillian Carlson, Frank Carlson—I know him, I had met him before—and this Lou, who later proved to be Lou Barron.

Q. What took place after you were introduced and the elderly lady left the house? A. They told me to come into the kitchen, which was the next step right through the door, first the living room and then the kitchen. They told me to sit at the table. I sat down and they pulled out their papers, whatever they had there, and Lillian Carlson sat at my left, Lou sat across the table from me, and Frank Carlson sat in a chair in the doorway.

Q. Was Frank Carlson in the same room with you? A. He was in the doorway right behind me, about from here to that chair there. He sat in the chair and listened and watched while it went on. I turned around and looked at him several times.

Q. Did Frank Carlson hold any position in the Communist Party in Los Angeles at that time? A. He came to the Marxist Institute one night right after I first started there in late 1949, and he was introduced by the instructor, Gunther Michel, as county organizer. He sat in the back of the room for about an hour or maybe a little shorter, 13292 I would say about three-quarters of an hour, and then he got up and left.

Q. When was the last time you have seen Frank Carlson? A. The last time I saw Frank Carlson was at the trial in Los Angeles, California.

Q. Approximately what date was that? A. I would say about February 22, or something like that. I don't remember the date right offhand. He was there every day of the trial, of course, but the last time I saw him was the last day I was there.

Q. That was while you were testifying? A. Yes, while I was testifying.

Q. Was that in February or March? A. I think it was in March.

Q. Approximately how long ago was that? A. Just a couple of weeks ago, two and one-half weeks ago.

Q. After you had gone into the kitchen, what took place next? A. They told me that I had a lot of questions to answer.

Q. Tell the Panel how this group received you and what they asked you and what they did. A. She took out a form, a large form—

Q. By she, whom do you mean? A. That is Lillian Carlson. She and Lou read over questions from this form. They laid another piece of paper alongside the form and 13293 as I answered the questions they filled in the other piece of paper to compare with the questions.

Q. What questions did they ask you, Mr. Scarletto? First, how long did this interrogation take? A. Four hours.

Q. Generally tell the Panel what type of questions you were asked. A. They first started off by where I was born, and how old was I, when was I born, of course, and I had to give an account of my parents, where they were born and if they were foreign-born, to which I answered yes. Then I had to give an account of my life from the time I could remember. They wanted to know where I went to school, in what town, what grades, and the name of the principals of the schools, and the names of the teachers if I could remember them. They wanted to know the names of all my brothers and sisters and what schools they went to. They wanted to know all the jobs I held in my life, what unions I belonged to, what jobs my family was doing at present. I told them that my mother was working in the meat packing industry and my brother was working in the steel industry. They said, "Oh, that is fine, two basic industries."

They wanted to know what unions they belonged to, and they wanted to know what strikes I had ever participated in. They wanted to know when I went into service, what was my position in the service and what branch 13294 of the service I was in. They wanted to know if I knew any FBI agents or any federal employees. They wanted to know if I had any relations who were civil service or federal employees, if I knew any police or FBI men or any government agents of any description. They wanted to know if I knew any Army officers or Naval officers.

Q. Did you know any Army officers or Navy officers? A. Yes, I have a personal friend who has just retired, who is a Naval Air Admiral, Admiral Perice.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13295 Q. Mr. Searletto, you were testifying about the security interrogation which you were given by the Party. Who did the interrogation? A. Lillian Carlson and Lou Barron.

Q. Were you asked for the names of other Communist Party members, for references? A. Yes.

Q. What did you tell them? A. First I didn't want to give them the names, but they told me it was all right, so I just told them who my section organizer was and who my chairman was, that was all.

Q. Were you searched during this interrogation? A. They stopped the interrogation at one point and told me to stand up, which I did, and they said, "Put your wallet and everything on your person out on the table." At that point I laid out my wallet and my car keys, my hanker-

13296 chief, and what change I had in my pockets: They said, "Is this all?" And I said, "Yes."

Q. What took place after you put your personal effects on the table? A. Lou Barron picked up my wallet and dumped all its contents out on the table, and he riffled all through my wallet to be sure he didn't miss anything. They both went over every little slip of paper and everything I had in my wallet, in detail. They examined it very closely.

Q. Were you criticized for anything that was found in your wallet?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I was. My chairman had met a member that was in the first club I was ever in, and he wanted to see me and gave her his address, which was his handwriting, and she gave it to me. I put it in my wallet. I was criticized very much for having that.

I also had the home address of Dick Morton. He had no telephone; and I had the telephone number of Irving Ritkes in my wallet. They both criticized me on my breach of security, and said that they were amazed to find that a man of my standing in the Party would have some embarrassing information on him in case he was picked up. They pushed them in front of me and said, "Here, destroy these."

And right in front of them I tore up the phone num-13297 ber and address of this Party member.

There was a $20 bill there, and she picked it up and said, "We will just keep this for the Party," and I reached over and took it back. I told them it was my grocery money and it was all I had on me at that time.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Did anything else take place during their search of this wallet? A. That is all I can remember right now.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, you were telling us this morning about instructions that you received prior to attending the section convention back in 1948. A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall at this time any other security regulations that you were required to conform with before going to this convention? A. Yes. I was told to leave my driver's license and whatever identification I had in my wallet, at home.

Q. Did you do that? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was your wallet checked to make sure that you were carrying out the instructions? A. No, but I carried them out in case it would be checked.

13298 MISS MCHALE: While you are on that subject, may I ask a question?

MR. STORY: Yes, Dr. McHale.

MISS MCHALE: Was this park in which the meeting was held a city-owned park? Was that State property?

THE WITNESS: It was private property. It is not in the park. It is right across the street from the park. The name of the street is Echo Park.

MISS MCHALE: That is why I was confused. I know some of them are city-owned. I was wondering how you went about renting it for this meeting.

THE WITNESS: I don't know how that was done.

MR. DENUNZIO: Echo Park is the name of the street.

MISS MCHALE: I understand.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Mr. Scarletto, at the end of this security interrogation that you had at Frank Carlson's house, did you receive any further instructions? A. Yes. She said—

Q. "She"? Who? A. Lillian Carlson. She said that I was supposed to keep in contact with Mim Schaffer and pay her my dues and sustainers, and it was all right for me to tell her that I was interrogated, but I was not supposed to go to any Communist meetings.

13299 She said that my underground contact, Irving Ritkes, would get in touch with me.

Q. Did you see Ritkes at any time after this interrogation? A. Yes, I saw Ritkes about five or six weeks later. He called me up and wanted to talk to me, and I went out and met him that evening. He said, "We will meet at the usual place," and I drove down and met him there.

Q. What took place when you met Ritkes on this occasion? Give us the date, also, Mr. Scarletto, the approximate date. A. I would say it was around the beginning of July.

Q. What year? A. 1951. I told him that Mim Schaffer wanted me to do some work in the IPP, and he told me, he said—

Q. Excuse me. What is the IPP? A. Progressive—let me see. I can't think of it right now.

Q. Would that be the Independent Progressive Party of California? A. Yes.

Q. All right, continue. A. I told him she wanted me to do some work in there, and he told me, he said, "What I told you still goes. You are not supposed to do anything."

He said, "Tell her that you will do it, and to hell 13300 with her. Don't do it."

So then I told him about the interrogation. I said, "Boy, that man Lou you sent over, they sure wrung me out." He said, "You should be proud that the Party takes such precautions." He said everybody in our status had to go through the same thing.

Q. Mr. Scarletto, were you required to re-register in the Communist Party after you first joined the Party?

THE WITNESS: Yes, we had to re-register every year, and they told us if the Party didn't re-register you they would drop you. Every year I received a re-registration.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What took place at these re-registrations? A. I had to go to my section organizer, and it was done in private. She would take me into the bedroom where no one else in the house could hear what was going on, and she had a form from which she would read off the questions. Every year we had more questions. They went into more detail.

Q. When was the last year that you were re-registered in the Party? A. I think it was about November of '51.

Q. Were you required to fill out any forms or any applications or anything of that nature, during these 13301 re-registrations? A. No. She did all the filling out. I just answered the questions which she read from the form.

Q. Mr. Searletto, did you receive any instructions as to what you were to do in the event that you were arrested in connection with Communist Party activities? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Will you tell the Panel who gave you those instructions, and approximately when they were given? A. Mim Schaffer gave us those instructions, and we were told—

MR. ABT: May we have when and where?

By MR. STORY:

Q. When? A. That was at the home of Mim Schaffer, I would say in the middle of 1950. We were told there that in case we were ever picked up by the FBI, we were not supposed to answer any questions. In case we were taken in we were not supposed to talk, and demand to see our lawyer. In case the FBI came to our door, to slam the door in their face and don't talk to them. If they called us on the phone and you didn't know who you were talking to, don't talk.

She also told us that the FBI was calling on different members, saying that they were a collection agency or a credit agency, and were checking up on someone's credit and trying to pump information from Party mem-13302 bers that way. Just to hang up the phone on all this kind of calls.

We also got a leaflet, one side printed in Spanish and the other side printed in English. They had all these do's and don't's in them.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Where did you receive this leaflet or pamphlet with instructions on what to do? A. At the home of Mim Schaffer, at a Chairmen's meeting.

Q. The Chairmen of what? A. That is of all the clubs in the El Sereno District.

Q. Was this a Communist Party meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Was this pamphlet put out by the Communist Party? A. IPP. No; CRC, I think it was.

Q. Which was it, can you recall now? A. CRC. That is it.

Q. What is the CRC? A. Civil Rights Congress.

Q. You received one of those leaflets? A. Yes, I 13303 did.

Q. Were you ever picked up or arrested in connection with Communist Party activities? A. No.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What position, if any, did Miss Stoughton have in the Party? A. She was Chairman of the Mexican Concentration Club, and she was also Section Educational Director at that time.

Q. Now, tell us what was said in terms of the Korean war at this meeting? A. Alice Kanamearu—she is of Korean descent, and her husband is Japanese. She came to the meeting that night. She was the Press Director at the time. She said she could no longer handle the Press Director's job of the club because she and her husband, who was about to go into the service, thought it would prove embarrassing to him if she was caught doing any of this kind 13304 of work. Gertrude Stoughton told her; she said,

"You are wrong. We should encourage our husbands to go in the service because in the Russian revolution large numbers of men were encouraged to go over to the Communist side and were assured safe conduct. We should have a plan where we can do that in the American Army, too."

Alice Kanamearu said, "Oh, I didn't look at it that way. Then he would have opportunity for sabotage, too."

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What kind of a meeting was this, Mr. Scarletto? A. It was one of our regular unit meetings that we had once a week.

Q. Did Gertrude Stoughton make any other statements at this meeting, that you can recall? A. She said that the same thing was done in the Italian war. She said a lot of Italians were encouraged to desert the Fascist Army and go over to the side of the Allies.

• • • • • • • • • • •

13305 Q. Did she make any other statements concerning the Korean war? A. She said we should have a plan set up so where our soldiers would be insured safe conduct through the enemy lines.

Q. Through the enemy lines where? A. In Korea.

Q. This entire discussion was concerning the Korean war which was then going on? A. Yes.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Q. What was said concerning sabotage at this meeting?

• • • • • • • • • • •

13306 THE WITNESS: Gertrude Stoughton said she thought it would be a good idea if I went back in the Navy Air Corps, which would give me a good chance for sabotage, and I agreed with her.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What position or what kind of work did you do in the Navy Air Corps? A. I was a mechanic and a gunner.

Q. When you say a mechanic, did you work on motors or parts of planes? A. I worked on the engines, and at one time I had charge of the surface control, all the aircraft controls.

Q. Did Gertrude Stoughton know that? A. Yes, because I had told her about it before.

• • • • • • • • • • •

13308 Q. Do you remember any other Communist Party 13309 meeting where the Korean war situation was discussed? A. Yes, I remember another one.

Q. Tell us the time of the meetings, where the meeting was held and the statements that were made concerning the Korean war. A. About the first of December, 1950, we had a meeting at the home of Margaret Todd, of El Sereno, on Mallard Avenue, and that night Gertrude Stoughton, the chairman, said that some of our officers in North Korea were killed in their sleep by their orderlies, who were Koreans, who disappeared after they cut the officers' throats.

After that statement was made, Margaret Todd said, "I love the Commies."

13312 Q. Mr. Scarletto, do you recall an incident where a Communist Party member in Los Angeles by the name of Warwick Tompkins was expelled from the Party? A. Yes, I recall that incident.

Q. Tell the panel approximately when you first heard of this incident? A. I forget just when I got that letter. I was representing our chairman at a chairmen's meeting that night, and we were given mimeographed copies concerning Warwick Tompkins and his wife, Helen, of the Midtown Section, Los Angeles, announcing that they were expelled from the Party for supporting Anna Louise Strong and trying to get some other Communist members to support her, too.

• • • • • • • • • • •

13313 Q. Did you receive this letter that you have just mentioned, in your official capacity as an official of the Communist Party?

• • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: It was to be taken and read to all clubs. Every member had to know about it so they would have no contact with this man, so they would all know he was a traitor to the Party.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Where did you get this letter or document? A. At a chairmen's meeting.

Q. Were you told what to do with this letter?

13314 A. Yes. I was told to take it to the club and read it and see that all members got word of it.

Q. Did you read this letter at your club meeting at a later date? A. Yes.

. . . . . .

Q. Will you tell the Panel the contents of this letter?

MR. ABT: I object on the grounds stated.

MR. BROWN: Objection overruled.

THE WITNESS: It was said that Anna Louise Strong had circulated some slanderous remarks about Russia, and that the United Nations was responsible for the shooting war.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What was said concerning the activities of Tompkins in this letter? A. It was said that he tried to organize some Communist members to support Anna Louise Strong.

Q. Support her in what? A. In her ideals and her distributing of leaflets.

Q. What was the nature of those leaflets? A. It just said slanderous remarks against Russia.

. . . . . .

By MR. ABT:

13457 Q. Now, Mr. Witness, you testified here yesterday, did you not, as follows, at page 11265:

13458 By MR. STORY:

"Q. What was said concerning sabotage at this meeting? A. They knew that I was in the Navy Air Corps and they thought it would be a good idea that I should—"

And then I interrupted with an objection, and then you continued:

"Gertrude Stoughton said she thought it would be a good idea if I went back in the Navy Air Corps, which would give me a good chance for sabotage, and I agreed with her."

Did you not so testify? A. Yes.

Q. You also testified with reference to this portion of the conversation in the Los Angeles trial, did you not? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. And is this not all that you said on the subject in Los Angeles, at page 3239:

"Q. What else was there about sabotaging airplanes? You mentioned something about sabotaging airplanes. A. I have done aircraft mechanical work for years, including the three years as an aircraft mechanic in the Navy Air Corps, and I said, 'I really could keep a lot of planes on the ground that should be in the air.' They just really congratulated me on that."

13459 Were you asked that question, and did you make that answer? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you testified, did you not, a few moments ago here, that you reported this conversation to the FBI in the same way that you testified to it in Los Angeles? Didn't you so testify a few moments ago? A. Yes.

MR. ABT: Mr. Chairman, we now move that the Panel direct the petitioner in this proceeding to produce here this witness' report to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in which he says that he reported the conversation which occurred at Gertrude Stoughton's house in September or October 1950.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13461 MR. BROWN: The motion is denied.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13601 Timothy Evans, Jr. was called as a witness by and on behalf of the petitioner, and having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. STORY:

13605 Q. Did you receive a membership card in the Communist Party after you joined? A. No, I joined the Party after the 1948 registration and I didn't receive a card for 1948.

Q. Did you receive a membership card in 1949? A. No. Prior to the registration in 19—13606 Q. Were you told why you did not receive a Communist Party card in 1949?

THE WITNESS: Yes, we were told why we did not receive cards for 1949, membership cards for 1949.

THE WITNESS: The place was Nora Lafferty's. That was the place. The time was in the late fall of 1948. That 13607 takes care of the time and place. And she said thusly. That there would be no cards issued for 1949 because of security reasons.

Q. Did Nora Lafferty hold a position in the Communist Party at the time she made this statement in late 1948? A. Yes.

Q. What position did she hold? A. She was Chairman of the Harriet Tubman Club.

Q. How long did you continue as a member of the Harriet Tubman Club, Mr. Evans? A. I was a member of the Harriet Tubman Club until the club was divided into groups—I mean into squads—in 1948.

Q. How many squads were formed out of the Harriet Tubman Club? A. The club was broken into two squads.

Q. Were you told by any official in the Communist Party when this action was being taken? A. Yes, I was.

Q. What were you told and who told you?

13608 THE WITNESS: I was told—at a meeting we were told that the Harriet Tubman Club would be divided into squads, and that each squad would have its group leader and that this group leader would have full authority over the squads. He would take care of the collection of dues and of sustainers, and because of security reasons no new membership cards would be issued for 1949, and if there were still existing old cards should be collected and destroyed, preferably burned.

We were also told that a new code system would be worked out whereby a record for keeping dues and sustainers would be kept by numbers instead of names. At that particular meeting, the club was divided into squads.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Mr. Evans, would you tell the Panel the person making this statement? A. Nora Lafferty made the statement.

Q. And did she hold a position at the time she 13609 made that statement?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: She did hold a position. She was chairman of the club.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Were these squads that were formed out of the Harriet Tubman Club numbered or given names?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Were you assigned to one of these squads? A. Yes, I was. I was assigned to Nora Lafferty's squad.

Q. How long did you remain a member of Nora Lafferty's squad? A. A short time after the club was broken into squads, the section leadership became alarmed at the inactivity of the squads and soon the original membership of the club started meeting together again.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13610 Q. Mr. Evans, after the Harriet Tubman Club had gone back together again, how long did you remain a member of this club? A. I was a member of the Harriet Tubman Club until another reorganization took place in the summer of 1950.

Q. Did you hold any position in the Harriet Tubman Club at any time? A. Yes. Shortly after ~~we went~~ back together, I was made a club chairman.

Q. You mentioned another reorganization in the summer of 1950. Where did you first hear of this reorganization which you state took place in the summer of 1950?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: In July 1950 at 717 Franklin Street, Oakland.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Was this at a Communist Party meeting or what kind of meeting was it?

* * * * * * * * * * *

13611 THE WITNESS: It was a Communist Party meeting of the West Oakland section.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Tell the Panel what took place at this meeting. A. Ray Thompson, a section official, told the members at this meeting that the world situation had created quite a bit of alarm in the Party, and for that reason the Party was adopting stricter security measures, that the clubs would be divided into smaller groups, and that each group would consist of no more than five people, and that these five people in each group were not to know who the members of the other group was, and that the leader of each group would be the sole contact between the section and his group.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13612 Q. Had you finished your testimony concerning what happened at this meeting? A. No, not quite. I think I left off where the group leader of each group would be the sole contact between his group and the section, and that the group leader should be a trusted comrade, and that strict security measures and screening processes would be adopted in order to root out unreliable comrades.

Q. After this meeting, did this reorganization actually take place in the Communist Party? A. Yes. Shortly after the meeting the reorganization did take place, and the clubs were divided into groups.

Q. Were you assigned to one of these groups? A. Yes, I was.

Q. What was the name of your group? A. The groups carried numbers instead of names. The number of my group was group No. 4.

• • • • • • • • • • •

13613 Q. Mr. Evans, did any other reorganization take place in your Communist Party clubs at any time during your membership? A. After the clubs were divided into groups, another reorganization did take place in the Party.

Q. When did that reorganization take place? A. We had a Party reorganization shortly after 1950 at a meeting of the West Oakland section. Billy Wachter, county education director, told us that the county office of Alameda Coun[illegible] would be dissolved and the two counties, 13614 Alameda and Contra Costa County would be merged to form a regional, and this regional would be directly under the state office.

• • • • • • • • • • •

13615 Q. Mr. Evans, you mentioned a Billy Wachter.
13616 Did he hold a position in the Communist Party?

• • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: Yes, she held a position.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What position did she hold? A. She was county educational director of Alameda County.

Q. Was this at an official Communist Party meeting where Wachter gave this statement? A. It was.

Q. Mr. Evans, how long did you continue as a member of a group which was formed out of the reorganization in the summer of 1950? A. I continued to be a member of this group until another reorganization took place in early 1951.

Q. Do you recall when in 1951 the other reorganization took place? A. It was, I think, around January of 1951.

Q. Where did you first hear of this reorganization which took place in early 1951? A. I first heard it at the West Oakland section convention.

Q. When was that held? A. It was in December of 13617 1950.

Q. Where was it held? A. It was held at the home of Emma Stanley, 840 Delaware Street, Berkeley, California.

Q. Now, tell the Panel what was said at this convention concerning the reorganization which took place in early 1951.

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: At the convention of the West Oakland section in 1950, the Chairman told us that the club, the groups weren't operating efficiently and that security measures weren't being followed, and that the groups would be redivided in order to place active members in each group. He said that each group should have a representative number of Negro and white comrades, it should have a representative number of male and female, there should be at least one industrial worker in each group, and also that after the groups are formed, each member of the group should be given a marked organization to work in outside of his regular Party activity.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Were you given any instructions concerning the security measures to be followed once this reorganization took place?

* * * * * * * * * * *

13618 THE WITNESS: Under this new organization, the groups were not to tell the time nor the place of the meetings, and all contact—the group leader was to contact all of his members concerning the place and the date of the meeting, and the telephone as an instrument of conveying messages was banned for Party use. Also that they should continue the use of the number system for keeping of records of dues and sustainers, and the use of last names should be also banned, and there should be no intercommunication between groups.

Q. Mr. Evans, you mentioned the number system. What do you mean by the number system in keeping of records of dues and contributions?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: This method of number system or alphabetical system was a system that could be devised by any group that would not reveal the identity of the person so stipulated on the card, but the group could understand who it was, and it was just for a method of keeping records so that if the card was lost, nobody could trace that particular person as being the one who paid those dues.

Q. Did this reorganization that was discussed in the latter part of 1950 actually take place? A. Yes, it did.

Q. What unit were you assigned to after the reorganization? A. After the reorganization, I was assigned to one of the groups.

Q. Did you hold any position in this group? A. I was the group leader.

Q. Did you hold any other position in the Communist Party in addition to being group leader? A. Yes. I was educational director for the West Oakland section.

MR. ABT: May we have a time, Mr. Chairman?

THE WITNESS: 1951.

MR. FORER: That was the West Oakland section?

THE WITNESS: Yes, West Oakland section.

By MR. STORY:

Q. When in 1951 did this reorganization take place? A. The reorganization took place a short time after the convention. It took place in either the latter part of 13620 January or the early part of February.

Q. How long did you continue as the educational director for the West Oakland section? A. I was educational director from the early part of 1951 until the fall of 1951.

Q. Mr. Evans, did you attend any conventions during the time you were a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes, I attended three conventions during my membership.

Q. What conventions did you attend, and when were they held? A. I attended the West Oakland section convention of the Communist Party in 1948.

Q. And when in 1948, Mr. Evans? A. It was in the late fall of 1948. I attended the West Oakland section convention in December 1950, and I attended the regional convention in January of 1951.

Q. Where was this first convention that you attended in the fall of 1948 held? A. It was held at the home of Nora Lafferty.

Q. Where was Nora Lafferty's home? A. In Oakland.

Q. How many delegates attended this convention? A. Approximately 50 delegates.

Q. Were any steps taken by the Communist Party 13621 to conceal the activities of this convention?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: No steps were taken by the Party to conceal this convention.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Where was the second convention held that you attended? A. The second convention was held at Emma Stanley's house, 840 Delaware Street, Berkeley, California.

Q. How many delegates were at the second convention, Mr. Evans? A. Between 15 and 20 delegates.

Q. Were any steps taken to conceal the second convention that you attended from the general public?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The second convention as well as all the events that led up to it were surrounded by a thick cloud of secrecy.

. . . . . .

13622 Q. Will you tell us what measures were taken to conceal this convention?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: On the morning of the convention we were told to assemble at the home of Mary Green. All the delegates were told that.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Was that in Oakland? A. That was in Oakland, yes. After we had assembled, there, the delegates were divided into groups of three, and we were told to use as few cars as possible. The place where the convention was to be held was not told to the entire group, but was told only to the driver of each group. We were told on leaving Mary Green's house to leave in a casual manner, and when we arrived at the place of the convention, to park at least two blocks from its location.

13623 Q. Who gave you these instructions? A. The Chairman of the West Oakland section.

Q. What was the name of the chairman? A. Roscoe Proctor.

Q. Did you go to Mary Green's house on the day you were instructed to go there? A. I did.

. . . . . .

13624 Q. Mr. Evans, you were testifying about the convention you attended in December 1950. I think when the noon recess was called, you were discussing the delegates that had collected at Mary Green's house; after you left Mary Green's house, approximately what time did you arrive at the convention hall? A. We arrived there between 9 and 9:30 in the morning.

Q. How long did this convention last? A. The convention lasted until about 9 o'clock that night.

Q. Where did the delegates have lunch on that day? A. We were told to bring our lunch because nobody would be permitted to leave the place of the convention.

Q. Did you observe any delegates leaving the convention during the first day of the convention? A. I observed, but no one left the convention hall.

13625 Q. What took place at this convention? A. We reviewed our work for the past two years and we placed a lot of emphasis on strict security measures—

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: And a discussion of security measures to protect the various comrades in the performance of their duty. It was also at this convention that we discussed the peace campaign and the relationship of the Party to the press. That was the PW newspaper. And we discussed the reorganization program which took place in the groups in 1951.

By MR. STORY:

Q. After this convention was over, how did the delegates leave the convention hall? A. At the conclusion of the convention, the chairman directed how the delegates would leave. They came in threes with a specific driver, so he would tell the driver when he could take his group and leave. So as he would call the driver, the people who came with him would leave. And he would always give each driver a chance to reach his automobile and leave before he would call the next driver. I would say at about five minute 13626 intervals.

Q. Now, Mr. Evans, you have testified that you also attended a regional convention of the Communist Party. When was this regional convention held? A. The regional convention was held in January of 1951.

Q. Did you attend this convention as a delegate? A. Yes, I did.

Q. How were you selected to attend this convention? A. At the West Oakland section convention, we elected delegates to attend the regional convention, and I was elected as one of the delegates at the West Oakland section to go to this particular convention.

Q. Where was the regional convention held?— A. The regional—state the question again.

Q. Where was the regional convention held? A. The regional convention was held at Eastgate Lodge, 3138 Grove Street, in Berkeley.

Q. About how many delegates attended this convention? A. We had between 30 and 40 delegates in attendance.

Q. How were you directed to this convention, Mr. Evans? A. On the Saturday before the convention was to convene, we were directed to meet at Mary Green's house, and upon arriving there we were told that we would be directed to the convention hall.

Q. Did you go to Mary Green's house? A. I went there as instructed to do so.

13627 Q. What happened after you arrived at Mary Green's house? A. Upon arriving at Mary Green's house, she told me that I was to drive the delegates to the convention, that is, the delegates from the West Oakland section. She said, or she gave me the address and told me to drive the delegates to 3116 Grove Street.

Q. How many delegates were selected from the West Oakland section? A. Approximately five. It was five of us I think, four regular and one alternate delegate.

Q. What happened after you arrived at 3116 Grove Street? A. When we got to 3116 Grove Street, we were met by West Bodkin, who then directed us to the convention hall.

Q. Did Bodkin hold a position in the Communist Party at that time? A. Yes, he did.

Q. What position did he hold? A. Bodkin was county organizational secretary.

Q. What time did you arrive at the convention hall? A. We arrived there between 9:30 and 10 o'clock.

Q. How long did you remain at the convention hall? A. We stayed there until about 6 o'clock that evening.

13628 Again we were told to bring lunch as no one would be permitted to leave the convention.

Q. What took place at this convention? A. We had our usual round of speeches by different people. Mickey Lima made a speech for the necessity of recruiting more people in to the Party, as insurance of our own safety. He mentioned that this was one of the best security measures that we could follow, that is, to align ourselves with more people. He also mentioned the necessity for mass concentration, especially in other well organized groups, so if the Party was attacked, or if individuals in the party were attacked, at least they would have friends in other organizations. He spoke on a peace program and the war in Korea.

A fellow by the name of Paul Schlipe made a talk on industrial concentration and necessity of infiltrating the different unions, especially the key unions. Another fellow by the name of Matt Crawford made a speech on the necessity for the establishment of a Negro nation in the South.

Q. Mr. Evans, you mentioned Mickey Lima. Did he hold a position in the Communist Party at the time you appeared in this convention? A. Yes, he did.

Q. What position did he hold? A. Mickey Lima 13629 was the chairman of the East Bay region of the Communist Party.

Q. When was the last time you saw Mickey Lima? A. The last time I saw Mr. Mickey Lima was in the Los Angeles trial.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Mr. Evans, how did the delegates leave the convention hall at the end of the day? A. At the end of the day the delegates were called according to sections that they came from and as the different sections would be called, they would leave. The drivers of the cars and the different sections would leave. We were told to leave in a carefree manner, don't go direct to your car, but kind of browse around before you leave, and not to take a direct route home.

Q. Was this convention completed in one day? A. No, the convention continued the following day.

Q. Where was the convention held on the second day? A. The convention the second day took place at 2002 San Pablo Avenue, El Sereno, California.

13630 Q. How were you directed to the convention hall the second day? A. On the second day we followed the same procedure as we followed the first day, by going to Mary Green's house with the exception that we also picked up Roscoe Proctor at another address, and he directed us to the convention. This time we were told not to take a direct route but to drive more or less casually around and then go to the convention place.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did you drive your automobile the second day? A. I did.

Q. What took place at the convention on the second day? A. We had more of the same speeches on industrial concentration, on the peace campaign, on world conditions and war, on stricter security measures, and on mass concentration.

Q. How long did the convention last on the second day? A. The convention concluded around six o'clock that evening also.

Q. How did the delegates leave the convention hall on the second day. A. The general procedure that was fol-13631 lowed the first day was followed the second day. The only difference being that on the second day there was a back exit for us to take and we took the back exit and walked around the block to reach our automobiles.

Q. Mr. Evans, did you attend any Communist Party schools during your membership in the Party? A. Yes.

Q. When was the first school and what was the first school you attended? A. The first classes I attended was in the Harriet Tubman Club. We had ten or twelve classes for beginning students.

Q. Do you recall what textbooks were used in these classes?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The primary textbook used in this particular course was a booklet entitled, "Theory and Practice of the Communist Party."

By MR. STORY:

Q. Now, Mr. Evans, did you attend any other schools while you were a member of the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. What school did you attend? A. I went to the 13632 Marxist-Leninist Institute, which lasted for a year, from about April of 1949 to June of 1950.

Q. Was this a full time school? A. No. It met only once a week and at night, and it would last usually for about three hours.

Q. Where were these classes held? A. The classes were held in various sections of Oakland.

. . . . . .

Q. How many students were enrolled in this school?

. . . . . .

13633 THE WITNESS: We had two sections of about 30 students in each section.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Did you enroll in this school under your own name? A. No. We were enrolled according to numbers. The number that I used was 72.

Q. What classes were taught in the Marxist Institute? A. We had four main classes, and the classes were political economy I and political economy II, Marxist-Leninism I, Marxist-Leninism II.

Q. Mr. Evans, were any steps taken by the school authorities to conceal the existence of this school?

. . . . . .

MR. STORY: The student attended the Marxist-Leninist Institute. He should know whether there were any steps taken to conceal the existence of the school from the general public.

13634 THE WITNESS: There were attempts to conceal the identity of the school. We were told not to discuss the school with anyone, not to discuss the place or the date of its meeting, not to discuss the contents that went on in the school, I mean the subject matter, and after each class, we were told to pick up all scraps of paper that might contain written matter and to destroy it.

Q. Did you use any textbooks at the Marxist Institute? A. We had a large outline that we used as a study guide and in this large outline it made references to some of the Marxist classics and those—13635 Q. Mr. Evans, I hand you a document which has been marked for identification as Government Exhibit 427, and ask you if you can identify this document. A. Yes, this is one of the outlines we used in the school.

13639 Q. Mr. Evans, do you know of your own knowledge any plans devised by the Communist Party for underground activity in the Communist Party?

THE WITNESS: I do know of plans that we made at—13640 Q. What plans were made concerning the underground activity of the Communist Party?

THE WITNESS: At a West Oakland section meeting in June of 1950, we were told that the groups should equip themselves with a mimeograph machine and with 13641 paper, stencils and ink, so that in the event the Party is forced underground that these small groups that are segments of the main body could carry on their work independent of the county office, in the event the office is closed down.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13642 Q. Do you recall the name of the person who gave you the instructions at this West Oakland section meeting? A. Yes, the name of the person was Ray Thompson.

Q. Did he hold any position in the Communist Party at the time he gave this information? A. He did.

Q. What was that position? A. He was an organizer. He was sent into the West Oakland section to bolster up the section.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did you have any position in the Communist Party at the time you received these instructions? A. Yes, I was leader of a group. I was chairman of a group.

13643 Q. Was anything done within your group to carry out these instructions?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: My group purchased a used mimeograph machine, paper, stencils and ink as required by the section to do.

By MR. STORY:

Q. What did you do with this material after you purchased it? A. I stored it in my apartment.

Q. Where is that equipment now? A. The equipment is still in my apartment.

Q. Mr. Evans, do you know of any other plans made by the Communist Party concerning underground activity?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13644 THE WITNESS: In the late summer of 1951, I was contacted by Roscoe Proctor, the chairman of the West Oakland section, and told that the reorganization of the clubs which will take place the following fall that I was not supposed to accept any group or section position, that I was being considered for underground assignment, and that I would have to go through a careful screening process before I could get the job.

Q. Were you screened by the Party in preparation for this assignment, Mr. Evans?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: I was.

By MR. STORY:

Q. When were you screened? A. It was in the late, late summer, near August.

Q. Of what year? A. Of 1951.

Q. Tell the Panel what happened, who contacted you and where you were contacted.

13645 THE WITNESS: At this time I was contacted by a man named Morris Keller, who was a member of the Security Commission, which controlled the West Oakland section.

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: This fellow got in contact with me and told me that he wanted to see me, and after I went to see him, he took me to a room and said that he had to give me a screening for a new job that was coming up for me. He handed me a questionnaire and proceeded to have me to answer the questions from the form that he had given me.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Were you interrogated at any time during this screening? A. Yes, after filling out the questions, you know, then he asked me some questions openly.

13646 Q. Do you recall what subjects were covered during this screening? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Tell the Panel what subjects were covered.

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: In the questionnaire itself, questions were asked about your family background, how old you were, how much education you had, the jobs that you had held chronologically right along, different places you worked, asked your union affiliation, your religious affiliation, also asked the background of your parents, whether they were foreign or native born, or how old they were, where they worked, where they are living now, the address, the address and age of your sisters and brothers. I also was asked how long I had been in the Party, the number of books I had read, the schools I had attended. I was asked whether or not I still agreed with the Party's position, and whether or not I thought the future of the Party's position would be imperiled by events happening now. I was also asked whether or not I had associated with factionalists, and whether or not I had ever been arrested or had any type of criminal record, other than a traffic violation. I was 13647 asked whether I had ever been contacted by the FBI or other agent for misdemeanor or any government violations.

I also was questioned about my wife's family, her background and religion, et cetera.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Are you finished? A. Yes.

Q. How long did this screening process take? A. This process took from between two and three hours.

Q. After you were screened by the Party, did you hear anything more about your underground assignment? A. A few weeks after this screening process, I was again contacted by Roscoe Proctor who told me that I would be contacted by another man who would use the name of Terry

Rose, and that this fellow would give me further instructions according to my underground activities.

Q. Approximately when did Roscoe Proctor contact you? A. It was the early fall of 1951.

Q. Did Proctor tell you anything about the type of assignment you were to receive? A. Yes. He told me that the job would consist in the main of acting as a courier between the section and the county.

Q. Were you ever contacted by this man who was to identify himself as Terry Rose? A. No, I was never 13648 contacted by Terry Rose.

Q. Did you ever hear anything further concerning your underground assignment? A. Yes. About a week before I testified in Los Angeles, I was again contacted by Roscoe Proctor, and he told me that the job was still in the hopper, and that this fellow was still going to contact me.

Q. You have not heard anything further? A. I think the testimony in Los Angeles probably took care of that.

Q. Mr. Evans, were you given any instructions while you were in the Communist Party as to what you were to do in the event you were arrested in connection with Communist Party activities?

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What were you told? A. I was told on several occasions by different officials that in the event that you were arrested while performing Party activities to stand on your constitutional rights and don't answer any questions, don't give your name, and to demand that you be allowed to talk to a lawyer, and to get in touch with one of the Civil Rights Congress lawyers.

13649 We were also given a small card explaining what to do in case you were arrested.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Mr. Evans, I hand you a document which has been marked for identification as Government Exhibit 428, and ask you if you can identify that document. A. This is the same as the card that was given to us.

Q. Where did you receive this card? A. It was given to me at the meeting of the Harriet Tubman Club.

MR. ABT: May we have the date, Mr. Story?

THE WITNESS: Shortly after my coming into the Party. I would say it was given in the spring of 1948 by Nora Lafferty.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. STORY:

13654 Q. Mr. Evans, were you taught anything concerning the allegiance owed by a member of the Communist Party to the Government of the United States during your membership in the Party?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: We were taught about just and unjust wars in the Marxist Institute.

Q. What were you taught about just and unjust wars in the Marxist Institute? A. We were taught that a just war is not a war of conquest, that it was waged to free people from oppression and enslavement, and that a just war is waged sometimes to free colonies from capitalist oppression. We were also taught that an unjust war is a war of 13655 oppression, designed to enslave people and that this war of oppression could only be waged by a capitalistic country, because in doing so they seek to enslave other countries in order to create a market for their products. We were taught that the Soviet Union could never wage an unjust war because by the very nature of itself, the Soviet Union is geared for production of its own people, and they don't seek outside markets for an outlet for their products. Therefore, on that basis, only a capitalistic country could wage an unjust war, and also that it was our duty as Communists to fight against anyone who would wage an unjust war, and to try to bring it to a successful conclusion.

13656 MR. BROWN: Mr. Evans, were you taught anything at the Marxist Institute as to what action the Communist Party or the members thereof would take in the event of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States?

THE WITNESS: We were taught that we are supposed to support any country who is engaged in a just war, and oppose any country who is waging an unjust war. We were taught that the Soviet Union could never engage or never start an unjust war, that they could only start a just war, and we were supposed to support anyone who started or anyone who was the recipient or started a just war, and oppose an unjust war. We were told that the United States could never start a just war, by the very nature that they are a capitalistic country, and could only start an unjust war. And we were supposed to oppose this unjust war and support the just war.

By MR. STORY:

Q. Were you told by any of your Communist Party superiors at any time what category the Korean war falls in?

13657 THE WITNESS: I mean it more or less destroyed the thought I intended to convey because of the question. The question was, was I told what category the Korean war fell in, is that correct?

MR. BROWN: Yes.

THE WITNESS: We were told that the Korean war did represent a free nation being aggressed upon. In 13658 this case the North Koreans and the Chinese forces represented the forces of liberation, and that the United States, and her allies, and whoever she could draw into it, represented the aggressors, and therefore they were waging an unjust war, against the North Korean and Chinese people.

By Mr. Story:

Q. Who made that statement, Mr. Evans? A. Roscoe Proctor, at the section educational meeting.

Q. Approximately when was that made? A. Around the fall of 1950.

. . . . . .

13745 The Witness: This is the explanation I would like to give to the question in reference to the yes or no answers concerning the Party's fight for the rights of Negroes. It can be characterized in the general term of the Party's fight for the rights of Negroes. The question asked me by the gentleman over there was, did they not actively participate in a struggle to save the life of Willy Magee. On the surface that would appear to be correct, that they did sponsor a program which would seem to carry on a projection that would induce a person to believe that the Party was extremely interested in saving the life of one man, Willy Magee, who happened to be a victim of oppression in the South. But a further study of Communist tactics and of Communist strategy will refute this to the point where, if you gave a "yes" answer to such a question you might give an incorrect one, because the Party's position in the fight for the Negroes is not focused upon one individual, to help relieve the situation of that one individual alone. The Party's program and its final destiny is socialism. It is their main strategy which any Party member will attest to and say so. So the fight to save Willy Magee was really a struggle to rally Negroes around the cause and to 13746 further publicize the party.

I know one eminent person spoke and said the Party is not interested in Negro rights from the humanitarian standpoint. They are not interested in Negro rights as rights to save the Negro alone. The Party feels that in elevating the standard of Negroes, in giving this false projection to the Negro, making them feel that they want to reform a government such as there is to accept the Negro as a full citizen, is erroneous. The Party does not have that projection in view. They want to raise the level of the Negro and raise his understanding so he can be a useful means of helping them obtain the final victory, which is socialism.

So if you ask me the question whether the Communist Party actively fought to save the life of Willy Magee, I don't think I can say correctly that it was their main objective, that that was their main fight. I can say that they actively participated in the campaign because there are circles who believe that the Communist Party was most detrimental in the struggle, that it was the Communist Party which actually sealed the doom of Willy Magee, and the people who have struggled, like the NAACP for the Negro rights for years, will have no part side by side with the Communist Party because they felt they did more harm than good. For me to sit here and say that they actively participated in a program to save the man's life, to give a yes answer to it I 13747 feel it would be an injustice to the cause that they really represent.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Forer:

13764 Q. Yes. You were also taught, were you not, that if despite all efforts to keep peace a war did break out between the United States and the Soviet Union that it would be the duty of Communists to cooperate with all democratic forces to bring such a war to a speedy conclusion on the basis of a democratic peace and thus de-13765 feat the predatory war aims of imperialism. Were you not taught that? A. I think that is correct.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13787 Louis Francis Budenz called as a witness on behalf of Petitioner, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Paisley:

13794 Q. Have you been a member of the Communist Party of the United States? A. Yes, sir, I have been.

Q. When did you become a member? A. I became a member in August 1935, but became an open member in October 1935.

Q. What is the difference between a member and an open member? A. Well, from August to October I was a concealed member, that is to say, I did not announce that I was a member of the Communist Party, nor did I act publicly as a Communist.

13795 Q. Prior to the time that you joined the party had you been acquainted with any party leaders? A. Yes, I knew several of them—Jack Stachel, Clarence Hathaway, and Carl Winter, Israel Amter, and a number of others.

Q. How did you happen to come in contact with them? A. In connection with various united front movements and in connection with the unemployed movements.

Q. What had been your work just before you joined the Party? A. I had been connected with the Conference for Progressive Labor Action, which was called the Musteites; that is, it was an organization which was out organizing unemployed and in that connection we worked with the Communists.

Q. Did you have occasion, Mr. Budenz, to discuss the possibilities of your becoming a member with any of these people before you joined?

* * * * * * * * * * *

13796 The Witness: Yes, sir, I discussed membership in the Communist Party, and as a result of that I applied for membership in August 1935.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. With whom did you discuss it? A. I discussed it with a number of people prior to joining, and then I went to Clarence Hathaway, who was head of the Daily Worker, and he accepted my application, signed it, and told me I had been accepted, but that I would have to wait as far as my open membership was concerned.

Q. Why? Did he tell you why you would have to wait? A. I would have to wait until Jack Stachel and Earl Browder returned from the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International in Moscow. Then they would decide or a decision would be made, at any rate, with them participating, as to whether I should be an open or concealed member from there on.

Q. When they came back did you discuss the matter with them? A. First I discussed it with Stachel, who came back first.

13797 Q. Do you recall the conversation, the substance of it? A. Yes, he told me that I should wait until Browder got back so far as my membership was concerned, and mentioned the fact that a large delegation of American Communist Party representatives had been present at the Seventh World Congress.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13798 Q. What did Stachel say, if anything, about whether or not you would be a concealed member or an open member? I believe you said he said to wait until Browder came back. A. That is correct.

Q. Where was the conversation? A. That was on the Ninth Floor of the Communist-owned building there at 35 East 12th Street or 50 East 13th Street. The building runs between 12th and 13th streets.

Q. At that time had you actually gone to work with the Daily Worker? A. No, sir. I didn't go to work for the Daily Worker until October.

Q. Did you have a second conversation with Stachel about it? A. Yes, sir, one with Mr. Browder present.

Q. What were the circumstances and what was said? A. There the discussion was in regard to open or concealed membership, and it was decided that I should become an open member.

Q. Who decided that? A. Browder did, after consultation with other Communists.

Q. You then became a member, did you? A. Yes, sir. In October—that is, I think, October 2, 1935, it was announced in the Daily Worker that I had become a member of the Communist Party. There was a statement of that.

13799 Q. Did you make a public statement? A. Yes, sir. I made a public statement at Jack Stachel's suggestion.

Q. Was it printed in the Daily Worker? A. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. I have just shown you, Mr. Budenz, a photostat of what appears to be the Daily Worker, a photostat of which Daily Worker has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit 429 for identification. I call your attention to page 2 there. Do you recognize your picture? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the statement that was published at the time? A. That was the statement which I prepared and submitted to Stachel and it was published as a result.

Q. Do you remember any conversation with Stachel about the statement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the Panel what he said? A. He stated that it was good enough, that it would be printed as I wrote it, but that I had not emphasized sufficiently Stalin's position of leadership in the International Communist movement, as the guide of the movement.

13800 Q. Did he call your attention at that time to any other document or article? A. Yes, sir. In that connection he called my attention to the resolution of loyalty to Stalin adopted at the Seventh World Congress by the representatives of the 65 parties there.

Q. In what form or shape was this resolution? Do you remember? A. He had a printed copy and had me read it. My impression is it was from the International Press Correspondence, but at least it was a printed copy.

Q. What is the International Press Correspondence? A. That was the reportorial system of the Communist International, sending out news to the Communists of the world on the happenings in the International Communist movement and in the Communist movement of various countries. It was translated into various languages. This was the English edition.

Q. Was that International Press Correspondence the official organ of the Communist International?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir.

13801 Q. Now I call your attention, Mr. Budenz, to your quoted statement. I quote from it a portion as follows: "For him who purposes to advance the workers' revolution, there is but one road to follow: the path of the Comintern. That definite conclusion leads me to announce 13802 my affiliation with the Communist Party of the United States."

What was this path of the Comintern which you felt at that time should be followed?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The path of revolution, the violent shattering of the non-Communist governments as the aim of the Communist International, expressed in its program and in the statements of its leaders, Lenin and Stalin.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. The shattering of other governments with what purpose in mind? What was the path? What was the ultimate goal?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: To set up the dictatorship of the proletariat, to lead to the dictatorship of the proletariat or the world Soviet dictatorship.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Now I show you a photostat of the International Press Correspondence, a copy of which has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit 430 for identification.

(Document produced and marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit No. 430.)

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. I ask you, Mr. Budenz, if that is the document 13803 which Stachel referred to, called to your attention.

A. That is the resolution he referred to.

Q. Is it the one that appears on page 861? A. Yes. I thought you were calling my attention to that. "To Comrade Stalin, Leader, Teacher and Friend of the Proletariat and Oppressed of the Whole World."

* * * * * * * * * * *

13804 Q. At the time he called this resolution to your 13805 attention did he say anything more to you about this American delegation that you now recall, which had attended the convention?

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Witness: He stated in connection with this resolution the American delegation approved of it along with the other Communist parties.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13808 Q. I call your attention to what has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 431. I ask you to tell the Panel whether or not you recognize this International Press Correspondence, Volume 15, No. 33, as International Press Correspondence, the official organ of the Communist International. A. Yes, I do. I am very familiar with it. It was given free to every member of the Daily Worker staff and every Communist functionary.

Q. Can you find Volume 15, No. 33 in this? A. That is the same one.

Q. I call your attention to page 861 of Volume 15, No. 33, in the original. Do you see there the resolution of Comrade Stalin about which you testified? A. Yes, sir; that is the resolution.

Q. You recognize that as the International Press Correspondence? A. Yes, sir, that is the International Press Correspondence which we were required to study.

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

13809 Q. In your conversation with Mr. Stachel about that Seventh World Congress did he mention any other American Party members being over there and participating in it?

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

Q. Other than Foster and Browder and himself?

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

13810 THE WITNESS: Yes. He mentioned a number. I can recall Martha Stone, Sam Darcy, and Ben Carruthers. There were others mentioned.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did you later have any conversation with any of these individuals about their having been over there? A. Oh, yes. I didn't with Darcy, because he didn't come back to the United States for a long time. He remained in Moscow. But I did with Martha Stone and with Carruthers.

Q. How about Gil Green? A. Yes, I did with Gil Green.

Q. Do you remember the occasion? A. He arrived in the early part of 1936. I met him on the ninth floor of the Communist Party, that is, the headquarters, at the time he was giving a report to the National Committee on his work among the youth and upon his investigation of the Communist youth movements of Europe and specifically the Soviet Union. He stated to me that he had remained a few months after the Seventh World Congress to make that investigation.

Q. Was he a delegate to the convention? A. Yes, sir. He told me he made a speech there, as a matter of fact.

Q. Do you know whether Stone and Darcy were delegates?

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

13811 THE WITNESS: Stachel said they were delegates. Stone and Carruthers told me they were.

By MR. [redacted]SLEY:

Q. When you became a member of the Party, Mr. Budenz, were you given any party literature? A. Yes, sir, prior to my joining the party I was given some literature by Jack Stachel.

Q. Do you recall what it was? A. There was J. Peters. Peters Manual of Organization and M. J. Olgin's "Why Communism?" the program of the Communist International as adopted at the Sixth Congress and reaffirmed at the Seventh, and Stalin's Foundations of Leninism.

Q. Did he give you any reason for giving you this material? A. Yes. He stated that these books are documents which would be of value in making my work measure up more to Communist integrity and understanding.

Q. Did you make any use of them? A. Yes, sir; I made constant use, that is, off and on.

Q. In what way? A. In different ways, in making reports to the Daily Worker Staff, in making talks to Com-13812 munist groups, in teaching at the Worker School, and also in editorial work on the Daily Worker.

Q. Over what period of time did you make use of them? A. I might say practically all the time I was in the Communist Party.

Q. By the way, when did you leave the Communist Party? A. October 1945. I was in the Party ten years officially and openly.

Q. You were in the Party, then, before the creation of the Communist Political Association? A. What is that?

Q. You were in the Party, then, before the creation of the Communist Political Association? A. Oh, yes. That took place in 1944.

Q. And the reactivation of the Communist Party. You were in there during that period? A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you joined the Party just what assignments were given you? A. I was named first a member of the staff of the Daily Worker, and after a very short period I was made Labor Editor of the Daily Worker.

Q. For how long a period? A. Oh, I should say until January 1936, maybe earlier.

13813 Q. You had had editorial and newspaper experience before that, had you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long a period of time? A. For many years I was editor of the Labor Age, prior to that, for approximately 12 or 13 years.

Q. At that time when you first became Labor Editor, where was the paper published? A. You mean the Daily Worker?

Q. Yes. A. The Daily Worker was published at 35 East 12th Street, that is, or 50 East 13th Street. It had that double address. On the eighth floor so far as the editorial offices were concerned.

Q. Where were the Communist Party USA headquarters? A. On the ninth floor of the same building.

Q. Who gave you your appointment as Labor Editor? A. Earl Browder.

Q. What was his position in the Communist Party? A. General Secretary of the Communist International.

Q. Of the Communist International? A. I mean of the Communist Party.

Q. How long did you continue in the position of Labor Editor? A. Until November 1937, when I went to Chicago to become editor of the Midwest Daily Record.

13814 Q. What was the Midwest Daily Record? A. The Midwest Daily Record was a Communist-controlled, organized and financed newspaper which the Communists stated publicly was the Communist gift to the people's front.

Q. Who appointed you to that position? A. The announcement was made by Jack Stachel, although he stated the Politburo had appointed me.

Q. Did he give you any directions as to what you should do? A. Yes, he did. I was to conduct this paper as a people's front paper, but with the Communist line to dominate it and to guide it. It was to be under the direction of representatives of the Politburo.

Q. What was Stachel's position, Mr. Budenz, in the Party, when he sent you out there to Chicago? A. Jack Stachel was the most important member of the Political Bureau or Political Committee. It had various names. The Communists changed the name of it. It was the Executive Committee of the National Committee. He had various commissions. He was in charge of trade union work, he was in charge of the Party for a time. He had various commissions, and he was the most important member of 13815 the Political Bureau.

Q. Did he indicate to you whether or not your assignment to that work in Chicago had been considered by the committee? A. By the Political Bureau?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, specifically. As a matter of fact—That answers the question.

Q. Had the paper been established when you went out there? A. No, sir, it was not established, as a matter of fact, as a paper until the following February, but I went out to get the staff together, to make the preliminary arrangements, to go to various cities and conduct a fund campaign, and things of that sort.

Q. Did you finally get it started as a newspaper? A. In February 1938.

Q. Was it a daily or a weekly? A. It was a daily, with the exception of Sunday, until some time in 1939 when it became a weekly.

Q. What were the circumstances that brought that about? A. The paper had made an appeal to a wider group of readers than just Communists on the grounds it was a people's front publication, and when the Hitler-Stalin Pact occurred, it lost thousands of readers and finally became a weekly and then terminated.

13816 Q. Did you run into any financial difficulties at that time? A. It had financial difficulties all the time, I must say, but they became accentuated in 1939 and it terminated about January 1940.

Q. To what extent was your work supervised on that paper by the Party?

Q. To what extent, if any, was your work supervised?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: It was carefully supervised, not only in the sense that I was obliged to make frequent trips to New York to consult the Politburo members, but also that Morris Childs, who was the leader of the Communist Party in Illinois, was made a candidate to the Politburo in order to supervise the paper more directly on the scene.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. What was his official designation in Illinois? A. That designation has changed from time to time. He was the district leader in Illinois. The title is state secretary or state chairman or district organizer. These titles have been changed from time to time, as was the custom of 13817 the Communist Party.

Q. How long did you remain as editor of the Midwest Daily Record? A. Until its discontinuance.

Q. In what year? A. 1940, the early part of 1940. I returned to New York approximately in February 1940.

Q. Do you know why and what the circumstances were surrounding the ceasing of publication in January 1940?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. As I stated, it was due to the fact that the circulation had fallen off to such a degree that it was found impracticable to continue it.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did you ever have occasion to come to New York with Morris Childs in connection with the financing of the paper?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir, on several occasions, and specifically in the year 1939, when we were trying to obtain more funds from the Communist Party.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. What occurred on that occasion? A. We had 13818 a conference with Robert William Weiner who was then in charge of the Communist Party funds.

Q. Was he an official of the Party? A. He has been treasurer of the Party and president of the International Workers Order, but he always has been in charge of the funds. He later became head of the publishing house, the New Century Publishers. But even during that period he was in charge of all the Party funds and supervision of all the Party financial affairs.

Q. Did you and Morris Childs have a discussion with him with reference to the financing of the Midwest Record? A. Yes, sir, this was one of the many discussions.

Q. Do you recall what was said? A. Yes, sir. When Weiner said that it was impossible for the Party to put any more money into the Midwest Daily Record, Childs asked him if we couldn't get some money from abroad.

Q. What did he say? A. He said that we could normally, but the channels of communication abroad had been broken for the time being, and perhaps could be re-established so money could come.

Q. Was the word "abroad" used or was there any discussion as to what "abroad" meant?

13819 THE WITNESS: That was the terminology which was used very frequently in the Communist Party.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Was it clarified to you by Weiner what he meant?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: It was not definitely stated what he meant but that term had been used constantly in the Communist Party as a specific source or center.

. . . . . .

Q. What did it mean to you, Mr. Budenz?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: It meant financial aid from Moscow, both because of this terminology and because of experience.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. After you discontinued your work on the Midwest Daily Record what did you do? A. I returned to New York, where I was advised that I was to become head of 13820 the corporation publishing the Daily Worker and managing editor of the paper.

Q. Do you recall who told you that? A. Yes, first Elizabeth Gurley Flynn and then Earl Browder, who called me up to the ninth floor to advise me officially that the Politburo had so appointed me as the President of the Corporation that was to be formed.

Q. Browder was then general secretary of the Party? A. Yes, sir. He was the leader of the Party.

Q. Did you discuss it with any other leaders of the Party? A. Yes, I discussed it with a number of leaders of the Party.

Q. Was Foster then one of the leaders? A. Yes, sir, Foster was about that time named as liaison officer of the Politburo with the Daily Worker.

Q. How about Dennis? A. He succeeded Foster as the liaison officer of the Politburo supervising the work of the Daily Worker.

Q. How long did you remain as managing editor of the Daily Worker? A. First I think I should explain, if I might, when the corporation came into existence.

Q. All right. A. Because there were some months there where the legal procedure had to be straightened 13821 out. The corporation came into existence openly, that is, it was publicly acknowledged, around June 1940.

Q. Prior to the creation of the corporation who was running the Daily Worker openly? A. They had a prior corporation, and I was working in the Daily Worker, but the corporation was announced publicly in June while I was in St. Louis at the convention.

Q. What was the name of that corporation? A. Freedom of the Press Company, Inc.

Q. You became president? A. That is right, at that time.

Q. Were you also managing editor of the paper? A. I became managing editor about a year or a year and a half later, although that was also involved in the Politburo's decision.

Q. What duties did you have before you became managing editor? A. I was acting practically in that capacity. We had an associate editor there, Sam Don, and we worked together. Then I became definitely managing editor, although that I say was the arrangement made some time prior.

Q. During that period 1940 to 1945, when you left the Party, did you hold any positions in the Party? A. Yes, a number of positions. I was on the state Trade Union 13822 Commission of New York in 1936 to '37. I was on the State Committee of the Illinois Communist Party, that is, the Illinois district during my time in Chicago. I was also a member of the State Committee in New York. I was a member of the National Trade Union Commission for a time, and other commissions.

Q. In the period of time were you ever on the National Committee of the Party? A. Oh, yes. I was a member of the National Committee of the Party, being co-opted in 1936.

Q. How long did you serve on the National Committee of the Party? A. I was on the National Committee of the Communist Party so far as attendance was concerned all through my period from 1936 on, but during part of the time that I was head of the Daily Worker I was advised by Browder that it would be better for me to not be a member of the National Committee, although I attended all the meetings, that is, when I could do so. I was officially requested to attend just as though I were a national committee member.

Q. Did you attend most of the meetings? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did Browder give you any reason why you should not be officially a member of the committee? A. Yes, sir. He stated that it might be advisable from the legal 13823 viewpoint to set up the plea that the Daily Worker and the Communist Party were separate entities, and that is why the Freedom of the Press Company, Inc., had been established, with three gentlewomen as alleged owners, and if I were not on the National Committee I could plead that I was closely connected with the Communist Party functioning apparatus.

Q. Was there any difference between the National Committee and the Political Committee and the Politburo? A. Yes, indeed. The Politburo is actually the governing body of the Communist Party of the United States. It is technically the Executive Committee of the National Committee, with power to act in between the sessions of the National Committee, but actually it makes statements in the name of the National Committee and directs the National Committee in its work. It is the directing body of the Communist Party.

Q. During this period 1940 to '45 did you attend the meetings of the Political Committee or the Politburo? A. Yes, sir; from time to time as I was requested or as the necessities of the Daily Worker required, and also I came in to Chicago occasionally and attended these politburo meetings when it was thought necessary that I should do so in order to be informed.

Q. To what extent were your duties on the Daily Worker supervised by the Party leaders, if at all? A. They were very definitely supervised. First of all, there was a liaison overseer or directing representative of the Political Bureau who met as a rule every day with the editorial board of the Daily Worker, and then in addition to that we had a direct internal telephone up to the Political Bureau's headquarters and consulted them frequently all during the day. I did, and those associated with me did.

Q. In connection with the publication of the paper? A. In connection with publication of the paper, carrying out of the Communist Party line, and the particular slant to be taken on individuals or on movements or on committees or on any other thing of that sort where such advice was necessary.

Q. Was it customary to slant news items?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The news items had to be in conformance with the Communist Party line during every period, definitely.

MISS MCHALE: Mr. Paisley, at this point do you mind if I ask a question.

Was this an accepted policy by the three women who supposedly financed the paper?

THE WITNESS: Yes. They did not appear around the paper at all, except once a year, and had nothing to do with 13825 the paper whatsoever, actually. They were just used for the defense of the paper during the period of the Hitler-Stalin Pact and for some time thereafter.

MISS MCHALE: Was the paper in this period when you were the manager considered the official medium of communication? I mean by "official," official for the Communist Party.

THE WITNESS: Yes, it is and was then the telegraph agency for instruction or directions to the Commies. In the agreement which these ladies drew up—it was a complicated legal process—they became the owners and then they delegated by power of attorney all their power to three of us, that is, to myself as president, to Ben Davis who was variously treasurer, secretary or vice president, and to Howard Boldt, who also alternated in one of the other positions.

THE WITNESS: What I was coming to there, so I can explain that and give the background, what I was coming to was that in the agreement which was made between them and as ostensibly, it stated that we must follow the line or the policy that the Daily Worker had followed be-13826 fore, in other words, the Communist Party dictation.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. There came a time, did there not, Mr. Budenz, when the Communist Party, USA, changed its name to Communist Political Association? A. Yes, sir, that occurred in 1944.

Q. Did you become a member of the Communist Political Association? A. Yes, sir. All members of the Communist Party were turned over to the Communist Political Association, automatically.

Q. Was there any substantial difference in the leadership of the Party during that interim when the Communist Political Association was in existence?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: No, sir, there was no substantial change. The same personalities appeared. There may have been slightly different functions, but that occurred even during the Communist Party period. Earl Browder became the President instead of the General Secretary, but he 13827 was still the leader.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you remember the circumstances of the formation of the Communist Political Association? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just tell the Panel in your own way exactly what happened in so far as you were able to observe it. A. The definite mention of the Communist Political Association officially to be made was made at a national committee meeting around January 1944.

Q. That would be a national committee meeting of the CPUSA? A. Of the Communist Party, yes, sir. There was first a preliminary meeting of the National Committee to acquaint us with what was going to happen. Browder told us that it was necessary to dissolve the Communist Party and form an association in order to assure American acquiescence in a Red China and a Red Poland. Then we had the official session in which Browder brought forward formally the proposal that the Communist Party cease to exist as a party and become a political association.

Q. Was there a convention of the Communist Party, USA, which followed this discussion you just mentioned? A. The National Committee, if I remember correctly, voted unanimously at that time in favor of Browder's proposal and called for a convention in May to form the Com-13828 munist Political Association.

Q. Was it formed at that convention? A. Yes, sir; it was formed at that convention.

Q. Do you remember when these national committee meetings took place, approximately? A. Do you mean with regard to Communist Political Association?

Q. Yes. A. I know so far as I remember it was early in 1944. I think it was in January. The exact date I don't recall at the moment.

Q. But it was May before the convention and that change took place? A. In May. I think the convention opened in the latter part of May, if I remember correctly. It was in May, at any rate.

(Document produced and marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibit No. 433.)

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. I show you what has been marked Petitioner's Exhibit 433, Mr. Budenz, an issue of The Communist for February 1944. Do you recognize that as the Communist? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. Are you familiar with that decision in the 13829 National Committee published there on page 107 and 108? A. Yes, sir. It was known as the Teheran Resolution in the Communist Party because it was based on Browder's conclusion that the agreement at Teheran had made this move possible to dissolve the Communist Party.

Q. Are you familiar with this exhibit? Have you read it? A. Yes, I have read it before, not recently, but I have read it before on a number of occasions.

Q. Mr. Budenz, did you attend this second meeting held in February 1944?

13830 MR. PAISLEY: I thought he said there were two meetings.

THE WITNESS: No, I haven't spoken about the February meeting as yet, Mr. Paisley. I referred to a meeting just held the day before the January meeting, and then the May meeting. There was a February meeting, but I didn't refer to it specifically.

MR. PAISLEY:

Q. There was a meeting in January? A. That was the National Committee meeting official session which passed unanimously this resolution.

Q. That is the one which is published there in the last exhibit? A. In the February 1944 issue of The Communist.

Q. Was there a meeting of the National Committee in February 1944? A. There was an informal meeting of the National Committee members and others called together hurriedly in response to a letter written by William Z. Foster to the members of the National Committee or to the National Committee, rather, as a body. It wasn't written to the members, but to the National Committee as a body.

Q. Did you attend that meeting? A. No. I couldn't because of my duties. I was either out of town or I couldn't be there. I was told to be there, but I couldn't be.

13831 Q. Did you talk to any of the members who did attend that meeting? A. Yes, sir; several of them, notably Benjamin J. Davis.

Q. Do you remember your conversation with Davis about it? A. Quite well, yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the Panel about it?

Q. First, what was Ben Davis' position in the Party when he was talking to you? A. He was a member of the Politburo.

Q. All right, now tell us what he said. A. He came to the Daily Worker office where he was secretary-treasurer. I was working. He told me about the meeting that had taken place, at which Foster had got a good shellacking. They had upheld Browder's position on the Communist Political Association, with only Sam Darcy and Foster being opposed. Foster had changed the unanimous vote here, but it had been of no avail. He also stated to me that the Foster letter was ordered suppressed, that is, not to be given to the National Committee members nor to the membership 13832 at large.

Q. Did you see a copy of the Foster letter? A. Yes, sir; I did; I think a few days later.

Q. To whom was it addressed? A. It was given to me by Eugene Dennis. I had asked Mr. Dennis if I shouldn't be permitted at least to know the substance of the discussion because it would guide me on the Daily Worker, and he agreed that that was the case, but he said he could not permit the letter to remain in my possession. He permitted me to read it and took it away.

Q. Had you talked to Ben Davis about the letter before you talked to Dennis? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had Davis told you in substance what the letter contained? A. Rather generally. I got the general idea.

Q. What was the general idea as he related it to you?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The general idea was that the proposal for the Communist Political Association and the ending of the Communist Party was not in line with the revolutionary position of Marxism-Leninism and therefore should be rejected, that Foster after consideration had come to that conclusion.

13833 Q. As I understand it, you went to Dennis and asked him why you couldn't see it, at least? A. He came down always. He was the representative of the Politburo who came down to the Daily Worker and in the course of our normal discussions I asked him if it would not be a good idea for me to see the letter since it would aid me in my work.

Q. What did he say? A. He said that I should see the letter and he showed it to me, but he said he couldn't leave it in my possession.

Q. Did you read it? A. Yes, sir. He also said—May I add to that?

Q. Yes, go ahead. A. He also said it had been suppressed and should not be given to Party members; knowledge of it should not be given to Party members.

Q. Thereafter at a meeting of the Communist Party the Communist Political Association was formed?

13834 THE WITNESS: The convention of the Communist Party which met in May 1944, turned itself over into a convention of the Communist Political Association, Earl Browder making the motion, and it being unanimously adopted.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. You attended the convention, did you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you participate in the deliberations of the convention? A. Yes, sir; I spoke there. I was a delegate.

Q. As a delegate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what extent were the officers and functionaries of the Communist Political Association the same as the officers and functionaries of the CPUSA?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: It was practically the same. There were shifts. I have said that Earl Browder was made 13835 president instead of general secretary. Foster, who had been national chairman, was made vice president. But by and large the same personnel appeared.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Then it remained as the Communist Political Association until some time in 1945, did it not? A. That is correct.

Q. How was your work on the Daily Worker affected by this change?

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Witness: It wasn't affected at all. The procedure remained the same, the directives remained the same. The control by the Politburo remained the same.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Did the physical location of the plant remain the same? A. Yes, sir; on the eighth floor.

Q. The physical location of the headquarters of the CP remained the same? A. Yes, sir, the Communist Political Association merely took over the same offices.

Q. Did you remain as president of the Freedom of the Press Company during that period? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were managing editor of the Daily Work-13836 er? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the conference in San Francisco when the United Nations was being organized? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Approximately when was that? A. That was in the early part of 1945. I think it began some time in February. I wouldn't be absolutely certain. It ran over into March.

Q. Did the Daily Worker have any representatives or correspondents covering that conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they? A. Frederick Vanderbilt Field and Joseph Starobin.

Q. Were they members of the Communist Party, USA? A. Yes. Mr. Field was a member of the Communist Party and also had written a column for the Daily Worker for some time and was active in Far Eastern Affairs for the Communist Party. Joseph Starobin at that time was foreign editor of the Daily Worker.

Q. Did you from time to time receive communications from either of them? A. Yes, sir. We steadily received communications, both letters and also we received of course their news reports and comments.

13837 Q. Do you recall any particular communications from Starobin? A. Yes, I do recall a special delivery communication addressed to the editorial board, care of my attention.

Q. Did you receive it yourself? A. Yes, sir, I received it and opened it.

Q. Did you read it? A. In part, yes.

Q. What were the circumstances? A. I opened this letter from San Francisco, which was a statement that D. Z. Manuilsky—

Mr. Abt: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. I object to the witness testifying to the contents of the communication. The question was the circumstances under which it was received.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Yes. Give us the physical surroundings. You said you opened the letter. A. I received the letter at the Daily Worker and was reading it when Jack Stachel came in.

Mr. Abt: May we have the date, Mr. Chairman?

The Witness: It was some time in May 1945. I think it was between the first week in May and May 22. I place that because of certain events. I was reading the letter and had got partly through when Stachel came in and I said 13838 to him, "Look at this important communication we received from Starobin." He glanced at it and said, "Oh, I must take this to the ninth floor immediately." And he took it from me and went upstairs with it, and I never saw it after that, the rest of it.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Did you try to see it after that? A. No, I didn't make any effort. That is not the way Co nmunists act.

Q. What do you mean by that, Mr. Budenz? A. Things that are referred to the ninth floor, unless the ninth floor refers them back to you you leave it to their discretion.

Q. How much of this letter did you see? A. I saw the beginning of it.

Q. How was it addressed? A. It was addressed to the Editorial Board, my attention as the Managing Editor.

Q. How much of the contents do you now recall?

* * * * * * * * * * *

13839 THE WITNESS: In this letter Mr. Starobin stated that D. Z. Manuilsky upon his arrival in San Francisco had expressed indignation at the fact that the American Party had not criticized the American leaders, 13840 that is, in the government, more severely, and that The American Party should observe more carefully the guidance and the counsel of the French Communists.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13844 Q. Had the Duclos article been published in the United States at the time that article appeared in the New York Times on May 6? A. No, it had not.

Q. Was any one else present when Stachel took this letter away from you? A. No. It was prior to the editorial board meeting, and we were alone.

MR. PAISLEY: Give me Exhibit 208, please, Mr. Turner.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you recall whether or not you read the Duclos article in Political Affairs? A. Yes, sir, I read it in Political Affairs and also in the Daily Worker.

Q. I show you, Mr. Budenz, what is already in evidence as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 208, purporting to be the Duclos article in Political Affairs. Do you recognize it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it also published in the Daily Worker? A. It was published in July 1945 Political Affairs. It was published in the Daily Worker the latter part of May of that year. I attended to its publication. That is, it was given to me to publish.

13845 Q. Did you have anything to do with putting it in the Daily Worker? A. Yes, sir. It was handed to me by either Dennis or Stachel and I was asked to proof read it to make sure that it was correct; that is, that it was accurate, it was such an important document. Browder also advised me the same, although the document was handed me by either Stachel or Dennis.

Q. Did they tell you to publish it in the Daily Worker? A. Oh, yes, and to be very careful of its publication because of its importance.

Q. Do you see in that exhibit 208 any quotations from the Foster letter which had been suppressed? A. Yes.

Q. You have previously read this article, I take it, rather carefully, have you, Mr. Budenz? A. Yes, some time ago.

Q. At the time? A. I did on a number of occasions.

Q. At the time it came out I take it you read it rather carefully? A. That is right.

Q. How did the Foster letter as quoted in that Duclos article compare with the letter which you had seen and which had been taken from you?

13846 THE WITNESS: It was the same letter, that is, of course, I don't know word for word that it is the same letter.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you know how Duclos got it?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: No, I have no idea.

. . . . . .

Q. You were not allowed to keep a copy of it? A. No member of the National Committee was allowed to keep a copy, and as a matter of fact the first time it was handed around to the National Committee members was after the Duclos article appeared, that is to say, at the National Committee meeting in June 1945 when Browder was deposed.

Then mimeographed copies were handed out. Even then the members of the Communist Party as such did not know about it until it was published in Political Affairs.

Q. Did you attend this National Committee meeting of the Communist Political Association in June 1945? A. Yes, sir, I was there all three days. That was the middle of June.

Q. What do you mean when you say that the rank and file of the Party didn't know anything about it? A. They were not supposed to know that this letter existed until 13847 it was finally published in Political Affairs.

Q. Was there any discussion in this National Committee meeting about the extent to which the letter should be publicized to the Party membership? A. The National Committee meeting to which we refer is June 1945?

Q. That is right. A. There Foster declared in the course of his remarks at that three-day session that his letter had been suppressed and that he agreed to the suppression because otherwise he would have been expelled from the Party and that now the letter should be made available to the whole membership. Several other participants in that discussion spoke up and said make the letter public to the whole membership, as they had seen it only to hold it in their hands in mimeographed form there at that session.

Q. Did Foster give any other reason other than 13848 his likely expulsion from the Party? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say? A. He said he had been advised that Browder's position was upheld from abroad and that consequently he bowed before that decision.

Q. How did you as a Communist interpret the words "from abroad"?

THE WITNESS: From the Communist International apparatus, namely, from Moscow.

13850 Q. Mr. Budenz, when we recessed for lunch we were talking about the reconstitution of the Party. I believe you stated that the vote in the National Committee was finally unanimous. A. Yes, sir, in support of the Political Committee's resolution which would have restored the Communist Party.

Q. Did you ever have any discussion with any of the Communist Party leaders as to why Hudson changed his vote? A. Yes, both Stachel and Dennis and some others, as a matter of fact, discussed it.

Q. Can you recall what they said?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes. They said that they had represented to Hudson that in order to carry out the Communist or revolutionary purpose he should conform to the resolu-13851 tion which condemned revisionism and return to the Marxist-Leninism path of the Party, that is, to the revolutionary path, and that it was his obligation as a Communist to join with the others in that attitude.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Was there a so-called discussion period following these committee meetings? A. Yes, sir, a discussion period was ordered and was carried out in the Daily Worker and also discussions in different branches and discussions in different sections of the Party and in the different staffs of the Party publications.

Q. Tell us about the discussion period so far as the Daily Worker staff was concerned. A. The Daily Worker held a discussion which lasted three weeks in the Summer of 1945. We had three days a week, three hours a day for about three weeks.

Q. What would take place? A. There was an initial report, as the Communist custom, made in this case by Jack Stachel, and then there was a discussion by the staff members in regard to the evils of revisionism and opportunism which had been condemned in the Duclos article, with statements as to how they could carry out better the tasks assigned to them as a result of the necessity of getting rid of revisionism.

Q. Did anybody talk to the staff members other 13852 than Stachel? A. Oh, yes. As a matter of fact, most every one participated. The chief discussion was a debate between Stachel and James Allen.

Q. Who was James Allen? A. Well, he had been foreign editor of the Daily Worker but at that time was foreign editor of the Sunday edition of the paper and a sort of adviser on foreign affairs to the Daily Worker. He was therefore a member of the staff in that respect.

Q. Did they take the same view of the situation? A. Allen held that there should be a logical following out of the condemnation of Browderism, that the United States was a hopelessly capitalist country, and that the Duclos statement against revisionism and for rejection of class peace should be interpreted in this case that socialism could be obtained with the help of the Red Army.

Q. That was Allen's position? A. That was Allen's position, yes, sir.

Q. Do you mean he took that position at an open meeting? A. Yes.

Q. In the discussion period? A. Yes, where the staff was present and also certain members of the Politburo or leading Communists such as occasionally Trachtenberg, John Williamson. Dennis even looked in, and V. J. Jer-13853 ome once or twice.

Q. Do I understand— A. These men were not present at every session. They came occasionally.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did anyone take issue with Allen in the need for the Red Army to intervene, and so on? A. Stachel opposed that on the grounds that it was not in line with the Duclos article specifically and that it would expose the Party. However, he eventually at the conclusion of the discussion stated that Allen's position was permissible.

Q. Who stated that? A. Stachel.

Q. Thereafter did you discuss the matter with Stachel as to his change of position? A. Yes, sir, I discussed it with him.

Q. What did he say? A. I asked him why it was that he had made this change in his attitude, at least to the degree that he had.

Q. What did he say?

• • • • • • • • • • •

13854 THE WITNESS: He said that there was danger of complacency toward Browderism and that there were dangers in some of his arguments and attitudes that might tend to support Browderism, and that in addition it had been decided by Hans Berger, the Communist International representative, that this was permissible.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Q. When was that, approximately? A. This discussion took place in June or July, the first part of July 1945, I should judge. It was before the National Convention.

Q. At that time had the Communist Party USA withdrawn from the Communist International? A. Oh, yes, it withdrew several years before.

Q. A couple of years before, at least, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as a matter of fact, the Communist International had been dissolved, had it not, or did that come later? A. I am not sure just when it was dissolved, at the moment.

Q. Was Berger still in this country? A. Oh, yes.

13855 Q. Stachel indicated to you that he had discussed this matter with Berger?

• • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. He discussed the matters with Berger frequently.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Q. Did you know Berger? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time? A. I had not met him under the name of Hans Berger, but I knew who he was.

Q. Who was he? A. He was Gerhart Eisler.

Q. You had met him? A. I had met him under the name of Edwards when he was in the National headquarters of the Communist Party. He was there when I first joined the party.

Q. How did you know he was a CI representative?

MR. ABT: I object.

MR. BROWN: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: As Edwards I knew he was CI representative because first he told me and then I had been so advised by others of the Politburo. So far as Berger is concerned, I was advised that he was the equivalent of the CI representative by Eugene Dennis. That was in approximately 1942.

13856

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Was this discussion period preliminary to the convention of the Communist Political Association in the summer of 1945? A. Yes, sir, preliminary to the convention which took place in July 1945.

Q. Was there a meeting of the National Committee of the Communist Political Association prior to the convention? A. That is the one I spoke of, the one in June, which lasted for three days. That was the only one that was held. That was when Browder was desposed and the decision was made to hold the convention.

Q. Did the Communist Political Association also have a national Board? A. It had a national board. The National Board was the name at that time for what is popularly known as the Politburo, which was its original name, or Political Committee, the National Board of the Communist Political Association, and later on then it became the National Board of the Communist Party. Its name has been changed several times, but its functions remained the same.

Q. I take it that the Board was composed of fewer members than the committee? A. Yes, both of them changed in number according to circumstances, but normally the National Committee was approximately 60 members, whereas the board, the maximum was 14.

Q. Were you on either one? A. I was on the National Committee, as I have stated. I was not on the board, although I regularly attended sessions due to my being on the Daily Worker in an executive position.

Q. You remember this committee meeting, do you, in June 1945? A. Very well. Considering the time that has passed, I remember it very well.

Q. Where was it held? A. It was held on the third floor of the Communist Party building at 50 East 13th Street. A new hall had been made there out of what was formerly the Workers School. We held it there in that hall.

13858 Q. Will you tell the Panel the name of some of the leaders of the Party who you recall were present and who participated in the meeting?

THE WITNESS: William Z. Foster made the report, Eugene Dennis, John Williamson, Louis Weinstock, Doxey Wilkerson, Julius Emspak, Alexander Trachtenberg, Alexander Bittleman, Sam Donchen, also known as Sam Don, and a number of others. There were 80 present altogether, 60 members of the National Committee and 20 leading Communists.

Q. Suppose you, Mr. Budenz, in your own way, tell the Panel what happened on that occasion, what took place. A. There was a three-day discussion. The first report was made by William Z. Foster, who based his statements on the Duclos article and stated—

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Foster referred to the Duclos article, which he supported, and stated that it showed that Browder had been guilty scandalously of revisionism and deviation 13859 which could not be permitted in a revolutionary party, that it was the sense of it that the Party return to the path of Marxist-Leninist revolutionary ideology and action; that it had been prevented from doing that by Browder; that in addition to that it would have to steel itself and prepare itself to become a true Communist Party organization with no remnants of revisionism or opportunism in it. He declared even that Browder had been guilty of revisionism in the withdrawal of the Communist International, but at that point Stachel interrupted him to say that was an action of the Communist International itself, let the Communist International alone. Then Foster concluded by a declaration that there had not been democratic centralism in the Party, that there had only been centralism, referring to his having his letter suppressed, and they declared that the career of the Party under Browder or at least Browder's career in the Party was an example of deviation which certainly had to be wiped out.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. At that particular moment, Mr. Budenz, what was Browder's position in the organization? A. Browder was still technically general secretary.

Q. Of the Communist Political Association? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he present? A. He was present, yes. He was present, but not on the platform. He sat down in 13860 front.

Q. Do you remember who followed Foster? A. Yes, I remember the main reports. That is, Eugene Dennis followed Foster.

Q. Are you able now to recall the substance of the position taken by Dennis? A. Yes, I am, because it stood out. Dennis referred to the fact that Foster had said that he had been one of those who had shown a tendency toward opposing revisionism. He declared that this had not been the case, that he also had been guilty of revisionism and that he wished to express his determination to oppose it from then on. He particularly recommended in order that the Party should be thoroughly steeled for its work, that there be a thorough return throughout the Party to the Marxist-Leninist classics, particularly to the writings of Stalin, the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Foundation of Leninism, and Dimitrov's Report to the Seventh Congress, which dealt with the true nature of how to conduct the United Front while forwarding the Communist revolutionary aims.

Q. Do you recall who followed Dennis? A. I can't recall them in succession. I know those that stood out. For example, Robert Minor's report was one very early.

Q. What position did Minor take? A. Minor
13861 took the position that he had been close to Browder but that he had actually opposed Browder. One of the reasons he was maintaining such cordial relations with Browder was in order to oppose him and to defeat his revisionist tendencies. This caused quite a few groans among the assembly. He went so far as to say that Browder had consulted six Senators in Washington in regard to whether the Communist Political Association even should not be ended and just the Daily Worker left as the representation of the Party or the representative of the Party.

Q. Minor said that he had discussed the matter with six Senators or that Browder had? A. That Browder had. But Stachel cut him off there and said leave the six Senators alone. He said not to discuss that matter.

Q. Did Browder take the floor at any time during the meeting? A. Yes, Browder took the floor.

Q. What did he say? A. Browder apologized for not having a formal statement. He formerly had formal reports. His position was that there was no other policy that could be pursued on the basis of the Teheran agreement, that is, between Stalin, Roosevelt, and Churchill, that there would be generations of peace, that this meant that there would also be class peace, and any other position would 13862 have looked forward to the possibility of conflict between the United States and the Soviet Russia at the end of the war. He stated that the Duclos-Foster position actuall, was a war position, and he declared that he would be willing nevertheless to accept the resolution if there was an amendment put in in regard to eliminating any suggestion that the Party would fight for curbing of American foreign trade.

Q. Do you remember whether or not Foster indicated one way or the other whether or not his course of action had been approved from Moscow?

THE WITNESS: He did not do so specifically. He merely called attention to the fact that Browder in introducing the Duclos article in the Daily Worker had stated that it represented the opinion of the leading Marxists in Europe.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. I probably misled you there. I believe I used the word Foster. I meant Browder. When Browder was talking did he indicate to the persons assembled there whether or not his course in forming the CPA had had the approval of Moscow.

13863 MR. PAISLEY: I am asking if he indicated one way or the other. Maybe he did, maybe he didn't. I don't know. I haven't talked to the witness about it.

THE WITNESS: He stated that it followed the Teheran policy laid down by Stalin, the Teheran policy of generations of peace, and that there was only one conclusion that could be drawn from that. He based his argument on Stalin's acts and Stalin's words.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you remember whether Jack Stachel took a position in the meeting? A. Yes, Stachel did. Stachel supported the resolution, that is to say, he attacked the revisionism of Browder, pointing out that the Duclos article had been written before the death of President Roosevelt, that therefore it was also a criticism of the Communist Party for its tail-ism in regard to Mr. Roosevelt. That is, that it followed in the wake of Roosevelt policies and did not assume a critical attitude, that this was evidenced by the fact that the article had appeared in April in Paris, had been prepared before that, and therefore before the death of Mr. Roosevelt. He warned the Party against further tail-ism, that is, hanging on to the coattails of any political leader, except the Communist political leaders.

13864 Q. Do you remember John Williamson being present? A. Yes, John Williamson was secretary of the conference.

Q. Do you remember any position he took? A. He spoke at great length to the effect that this policy had to be supported as laid down by Duclos and also recommended the reading of Marxist-Leninist works, State and Revolution, and other classics which he claimed had been neglected during the period from 1944 to 1945, and that there must be a return to the raising of the ideological level of the Party so that it would avoid hereafter revisionist errors such as Browder had led them into.

Q. Was Elizabeth Gurley Flynn present? A. She certainly was.

Q. Do you recall anything that she said? A. She made an extensive talk in which she particularly criticized Robert Minor for his having been more Browderite than Browder. She said he was an example of revisionism, that his statements were not up to what a Communist should have made. She declared further that during all the time that she had been on the Politburo she had not been permitted an independent thought or act, that every time she made proposals she was bowled over with the statement that she didn't understand Marxist-Leninist theory. She hoped that from now on there would be the possibility of expression within the Politburo which would not be met with that sort of sweeping argument. She condemned Browder very 13885 severely for having misled her and others into an incorrect path.

Q. You say Foster made the main report. Do I understand by that that he led the discussion, led over the convention or whatever you call it? A. That is correct. That is the Communist method of procedure. There is no parliamentary debate in Communist meetings. There is a report by a reporter, and then there is discussion, and then the reporter concludes in a summary, and what he says, the leader, becomes what is agreed to. Foster, because he said he was partly ill and unprepared, allowed Dennis to make part of the main report. That is, the two were together. That is the reason I remember them distinctly.

Q. How long did this discussion last? A. It lasted three days.

Q. Do you recall whether or not Foster took the rostrum, or however you might express it, on the third day? A. Yes, he did. He proposed on the third day that the conference send wires to the strikes that were occurring and to other trouble spots where strikes were contemplated, urging them to strike and to hold out for strikes. He said that was in line with the new attitude that the Communists should take.

Q. Just what was the situation historically at that time, Mr. Budenz, with reference to the war? This was 13866 in the summer of 1945. A. June 1945.

Q. Do you recall whether or not Germany had been defeated at that time? A. Certainly we were still at war with Japan.

Q. What was this that Foster was proposing about a strike?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The extension of strikes by the encouragement of them through the Communist Party.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. What happened as a result of his proposal? A. Two Communists who are connected with the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers Union, Julius Emspak and Ruth Young, immediately had a hurried conference with Foster which I overheard, in which they urged him to withdraw this statement, that it would injure the Communist infiltration, of the unions and was not at all a timely procedure on that account. He agreed to do that, and in the afternoon session, some time later, he got up and withdrew his suggestion.

Q. So were these telegrams dispatched? A. They were not, because of the objection of Emspak and Ruth 13867 Young.

Q. What conclusions, if any, were reached by this National Committee? A. They condemned revisionism, drew up a program which was based on the Duclos letter and demoted Browder as general secretary.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13870 Q. I notice that Foster in the letter uses such terms as "opportunistic error" and "revisionism." Will you explain to the Panel just what those terms mean?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

13871 The Witness: "Opportunistic error" is a well-known term in the Communist documents and in Communist discussions. Opportunism is the blurring over or killing off of the revolutionary Marxist-Leninist objectives of the Communist movement, by any tendency or deviation which makes the Communists forget that their goal is the violent shattering of the bourgeoise state as set down by Lenin and Stalin.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. What about "revisionism"? A. "Revisionism" is generally applied as a term to opportunism from the right. It is Kautskyism that is based on the fact that Karl Kautsky differed from Lenin in regard to the Bolshevik revolution and likewise it is a blurring of the revolutionary class war objectives of the Communists so that they can not fulfill their function as Communists and lose sight of the goal of shattering violently the bourgeoise states. From this revisionism there flow a number of other errors which apply to immediate work, that is to say, for example, confusing reforms which the Communists adopt for tactical reasons with objectives. Therefore, this is considered a very serious deviation. The term arose from the attempted revision of Marx by Edward Bernstein, an alleged socialist, but it now has come to mean any deviation from the Communist objective as set down by Lenin and Stalin of the violent shattering of the bourgeoise state, anything which takes away the fact that this Communist Party is not a 13872 party of a new type and not a party which rejects civil peace.

Q. Was Trotskyism regarded as opportunism? A. Trotskyism in general is opportunism from the left. Trotskyism is accused also of blurring the objectives of the Communists, but with left phrases and left objectives. The revisionism is rather applied as a rule to what I call opportunism from the right. It is Kautskyism as distinct from Trotskyism to that extent.

Q. After this national committee meeting about which we have been talking there followed a national convention of the Communist Political Association, did there not? A. Yes, sir, in New York City.

Q. Do you recall when it was held? A. It was held about the middle of July at the fraternal club house.

Q. Did you attend? A. I attended only a few sessions. I was very busy on the Daily Worker.

Q. Was the general public and representatives of the press admitted? A. No, they are never admitted to a Communist Party convention proper.

Q. What happened at the convention of the Communist Political Association?

. . . . . .

13873 Q. As editor of the Daily Worker and from any sessions which you did attend, did you learn what took place? A. Yes, sir, most decidedly.

Q. What did take place?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The Communist Political Association was changed back to the Communist Party. That is the same convention which met as the Communist Political Association convention became the Communist Party convention.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. To what extent was the leadership changed?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: In substance the leadership was not changed. Browder was not in the picture, but 13874 Foster was national chairman, and eventually Dennis became secretary, though there was a secretariat set up at that time of which he was a member.

13877 Q. Mr. Budenz, the Party when it was reconstituted in 1945 adopted a constitution, did it not? A. That is correct.

Q. It was not amended until after you left the 13878 Party, was it? A. It wasn't amended while—

Q. It wasn't amended while you were in the Party.

A. No.

MR. PAISLEY: May I have the 1945 constitution?

MR. DENUNZIO: That is Exhibit 329.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Are you familiar with that constitution? A. Yes. I received it as soon as it was printed.

Q. I direct your attention, Mr. Budenz, to the preamble to this constitution, the first sentence of which reads as follows: "The Communist Party of the United States is the Political Party of the American Working class, basing itself upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism."

As a member of the Communist Party what meaning did that sentence have for you?

• • • • • • • • • • • •

13879 THE WITNESS: Marxism-Leninism is a well-known and historical term in the Communist documents and discussions. It is that interpretation of so-called scientific socialism based on the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, and which holds as the goal of the Communist Parties of the world the necessity for the violent shattering of the bourgeoise states in order to set up in their place a completely new state machinery, the dictatorship of the proletariat. This shall be achieved under Marxism-Leninism through the Party of the new type, the Bolshevik Party under Bolshevik discipline, which rejects the concept of class peace.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did the Communists in the United States at that time regard the American Government as a bourgeoise state? A. It did, yes, according to the Communist concept it is a bourgeoise state. It is a matter—Well, I can't add to that unless you ask a question.

Q. Now I call your attention to this sentence in the same preamble: "The Communist Party upholds the achievements of American democracy and defends the United States constitution and its bill of rights against its 13880 reactionary enemies who would destroy democracy and popular liberties."

Can the two sentences be reconciled?

• • • • • • • • • • • •

THE WITNESS: The statements can not be reconciled. The dedication of Marxism-Leninism is the dedication historically and categorically to the violent shattering of the bourgeoise state as the necessary step toward progress, and this other language in the light of that, since Marxism-

Leninism principles prevail, is merely a window-dressing for legal protective purpose. It is part of the Aesopian language recommended by Lenin.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Did the words "reactionary enemies" have any particular meaning in Communist circles?

. . . . . .

The Witness: They do.

By Mr. Paisley:

13881 Q. What interpretation do they have? A. Reactionary enemies are those who are seeking to curb the Communist conspiracy. The term "Fascist" is used likewise as an alternative. It runs through all Communist literature. The reactionary enemies are those who are seeking to curb the Communist conspiracy.

. . . . . .

13884 Q. Mr. Budenz, I call your attention to the sixth paragraph of the Preamble to the Constitution of the Communist Party adopted in 1945, reading as follows: "The Communist Party, therefore, educates the working class, in the course of its day-to-day struggles, for its historic mission, the establishment of socialism."

As a member of the Party and as a result of your 13885 experience in the Party, what was meant by that language?

. . . . . .

The Witness: The historic mission of the working class was laid down by Lenin and Stalin specifically, and understood throughout the Communist movement. It is the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat through the smashing of the bourgeois states and the setting up of a so-called dictatorship of the proletariat, Soviet dictatorship.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. In this same constitution, Article IX, Section 2, which reads:

"Adherence to or participation in the activities of any clique, group, circle, faction or party which conspires or acts to subvert, undermine, weaken or overthrow any or all institutions of American democracy, whereby the majority of the American people can maintain their right to determine their destinies in any degree, shall be punished by immediate expulsion."

Were you familiar with that provision of the con-13886 stitution? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What meaning, if any, did that language in the constitution have for you?

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Particularly in the light of the first sentence of the preamble, about which we have already had testimony. A. That was what I was about to say, Mr. Paisley. In light of the dedication to the principles of Marxism-Leninism and the reiteration of this in the mention of the historic mission of the working class, which are well defined, historically worked out terms in the Communist movement, especially by Lenin and Stalin, this is merely protective language in order to protect the Communist Party and at the same time enable it to go forward in advancing the principles of Marxism-Leninism. It is Aesopian language recommended by Lenin.

Q. Is this word "Aesopian" a word which you, yourself, have coined, or is that a word which had meaning in Communist Party circles when you were a member? A. It is a word that had a meaning in the Communist Party circles, having appeared in the preface to the Russian edition of Lenin's "Imperialism."

Q. I want to go back for a moment to the time 13887 when you were in Chicago, Mr. Budenz. Do you recall a visit out there by Eugene Dennis in the fall or winter of 1939-1940? A. Yes, sir. That was during the Hitler-Stalin Pact period, when the party was going underground.

Q. What do you recall about the particular visit of Dennis out there? A. There was a meeting called of the chief functionaries of the Communist Party in Illinois, or at least in Chicago, very hurriedly called together and held in the basement of a building in Chicago, at which Dennis appeared. He had been underground or partly underground, and he came there. There were present at this meeting a number of the leading functionaries, including Morris Childs, the district organizer, William L. Patterson, who was then associate editor of the Midwest Daily Record, that is, associate with me, and was also on the State Committee, Ed Brown, who was the organization secretary of the district, Jack Martin, and a number of other functionaries.

Q. Did Dennis address the meeting or discuss any Party matters with you? A. The meeting was very brief. At that meeting, Dennis declared that he had come for the purpose of giving us directives as to the urgency of the complete underground existence of the Party, that is, we had already had instructions about dividing into groups of five and having no public records. He reiterated this again, 13888 and at the same time he declared that we should be prepared in case the United States joined with Great Britain against Hitler, to turn the imperialist war into civil war as Lenin had advised. He stated that his purpose was to prepare us for eventualities of that character, and also that we should prepare the Party and its organization work for eventualities of that character.

Q. Did he give you any specific instructions as to how you should proceed? A. He emphasized the urgency of what was already contemplated, and that was of real diligence and expedition in the breaking down of the Party units or branches into groups of five, and going underground and destroying Marxist literature. In other words, going on a completely war basis.

Q. Did you always use your own name while you were in the Party? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any practice in the Party with reference to assumed names?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: There were Party names. I presume that is what you mean. There were Party names.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. To what extent was that prevalent? A. It was 13889 common in the case of concealed Communists, that is, people who were functioning as non-Communists publicly but who were actually Communists. With open Communists the practice was less. For example, a man like William Z. Foster, so far as I know, never had a Party name. But I know a great number of other people who did have Party names.

Q. Did Dennis make another visit out there? A. Not to Chicago.

Q. Or to any other city? A. Yes. I met him in Milwaukee in the fall, late summer or fall of 1940. I had gone then from the Daily Worker out to Milwaukee, and Dennis said that he would see me there.

Q. Did you see him there? A. Yes, sir. We met at the home of Mrs. Meta Berger.

Q. At that time, had Hitler invaded Poland yet? A. Oh, yes. He had quite a time before. This was in the fall of 1940.

Q. Had he attacked Russia? A. No, he had not.

Q. The Hitler-Stalin Pact was then still in effect? A. That is right.

Q. Tell us what happened at this home of this woman, who was present and what was said? A. This was a very small meeting, attended by about six or seven 13890 people—Ned Sparks, who was the district organizer for Wisconsin, who brought me out to the place; Fred Bassett Blair, who was the leading functionary in the Communist Party in Wisconsin; and Sigmund Eisenschur, who had been Midwest Daily Record representative in Milwaukee but was a Communist functionary; also Harold Christoffel, who was a concealed Communist and the president at that time of the local union at the Allis-Chalmers plant. There were two or three others, but I don't recall them.

Q. Did Dennis have anything to say at this meeting? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you tell the Panel in substance what he said? A. He stated that the meeting had to be very brief because he was underground and had to go away rather quickly. There were three things that he placed on the agenda. One of them was the bolshevization of the Party; another, the Allis-Chalmers situation; and the third, the Socialist Party in Wisconsin which the Communists were penetrating.

On the first point, very briefly summarizing it, he had in his hand a typewritten copy of an article that he had written for The Communist, and which was published, I believe, in May 1940, at least during that year, on the bolshevization of the Party. He wanted to stress the bolshevization of the Party, the necessity of being more vigorous in the underground organization of the Party, in steeling the 13891 comrades to the possibility that the imperialist war would be turned into civil war.

In this connection, his main emphasis was the urgency of a wider reading of the works of Stalin in particular, and of certain works of Dimitrov, but the works of Stalin, particularly the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, and Foundations of Leninism, in order that the comrades would not be lost in this underground work but would understand their goals, so the Party would be steeled for any shock. That was his first mission. He reviewed the scene much more widely than that. In fact, he referred to the "Roosevelt war." He declared that Earl Browder had stated officially at the last convention that Roosevelt was another Hitler, and that we should realize that in opposing the Roosevelt policies we were fighting the Fascistization of the United States, and should put, therefore, every energy into it. That was the general introduction.

On the second point, on the Allis-Chalmers situation, he declared that it was essential that war production in Great Britain be halted in order to forward this campaign against the Roosevelt program, and in that connection the Politburo had decided that there should be a stoppage at the Allis-Chalmers plant. He did solicit Christoffel's views on this matter, and there was a discussion in which Christoffel participated briefly.

13892 Q. Who was Christoffel? A. He was the president of the local union at that time of the United Automobile Workers in the Allis-Chalmers plant. He is not so any longer.

Q. Was he a Party member, to your knowledge? A. Yes, sir. I met him as such on several occasions.

Q. Did you testify in his trial here in the District? A. Yes, sir, in two of them.

Q. What was Allis-Chalmers making at the time, do you know? A. I do not know the specific material, but it was considered to be a key part of the aid to Britain, and the general defense build-up of the United States.

13894 Q. Was there a strike on at the time? A. No, sir, there was no strike at the time.

Q. Do you know whether a strike took place after this meeting? A. I wasn't there. I know that Christoffel there agreed that a strike should be called, and that 13895 grievances could be filed which could bring about such a strike.

Q. Was this before Germany invaded Soviet Russia? A. Oh, Yes.

. . . . . .

Q. How long before, approximately?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: This was in the fall of 1940. It was almost a year, I should say nine months before the invasion.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you know whether or not a strike took place?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: As Editor of the Daily Worker, I know, but I wasn't on the scene. I know a strike took 13896 place in the early part of 1941.

Q. Did Dennis give Christoffel any instructions in your presence?

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. He specifically stated that the Politburo required a stoppage at the Allis-Chalmers plant. He said they had chosen that place as being one where such a stoppage should take place because of the Communist leadership there in that local at that time.

13898 Q. Mr. Budenz, did the Daily Worker customarily have staff meetings while you were Managing Editor? A. Yes, they had staff meetings.

Q. To what extent? A. They weren't what you would call regularly arranged for any particular time. They were called whenever it was essential to bring up some outstanding political topic. Therefore, we would have them once or twice a month, and then two months might go by.

Q. Who would attend the staff meetings? A. Normally, the members of the Daily Worker staff. I say 13899 "normally," because on one occasion of this special discussion there were more of the leading functionaries there than was usual. Then generally some leading Party functionary, member of the Political Bureau as a rule, would make a report on this topic. It might be national affairs with Eugene Dennis, or it might be a report on the work of the State of New York by Gil Green, various topics, in order to keep the Daily Worker members on their toes.

Then, of course, this was always intertwined with political discussion, because it was for political purposes that it was held. I mean "political" in the Communist sense, political education.

Q. You referred to the various so-called classics, including the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. Were those books used by you in your work, and by the other members of the staff, up to the time you left the Party?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir, they were used, and they were also very freely quoted in the staff education meetings, if you want to call them that, staff meetings which were held.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Throughout your time in the Party, was there 13900 ever an instance, to your knowledge, when there was any criticism of the Soviet Union published in the Daily Worker?

MR. ABT: I object. We have had this question over and over again, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWN: Overruled.

MR. PAISLEY: We have not.

MR. ABT: May I finish, Mr. Paisley?

The Panel has previously ruled it is an improper question.

MR. BROWN: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: Not only was there never any criticism of the Soviet Union, but there was always praise of the Soviet Union and its leadership. That was a "must" rule.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Would the answer be the same with reference to Political Affairs, as far as you were able to observe? A. Yes, sir, the same rule applied to Political Affairs.

Q. Where the policies of the United States differed from those of the Soviet Union, which side would the Daily Worker take, if any?

13901 THE WITNESS: Always with the Soviet Union; and there are very many examples of that, particularly during the Hitler-Stalin Pact period, which could be drawn upon if time permitted.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Do you know of any exceptions to that proposition?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: None whatsoever. It was not permissible to have an exception to that rule.

. . . . . .

13905 Q. After the disaffiliation, so called, of the CPUSA from the Communist International, did you ever see this man Gerhart Eisler in the United States? A. Yes, I saw him.

Q. Where? A. Once at Jacob Golos' funeral in the latter part of 1943, and once across the street from a meeting of the National Committee.

Q. When was that? A. My remembrance is that it was in 1942.

Q. Are they the only two times that you actually saw him? A. Yes. He stayed away from national headquarters.

Q. Did you talk to him on either occasion? A. I did not, no.

Q. Did he talk to you? A. He did not, no.

Q. Did you ever discuss his activities in this country after the disaffiliation of the CPUSA from the Communist International with any of the leaders of the Communist Party USA? Answer yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. With which members? A. Several. Earl Browder, Jack Stachel, Eugene Dennis.

13906 Q. Do you now recall anything that any of those leaders of the Party had to say about the activities of this man in this country?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: I have mentioned the fact that Eugene Dennis in the latter part of 1942 stated that Hans Berger was the equivalent to the representative of the Communist International, that he was fulfilling those functions, that his real name was Gerhart Eisler and that I was to receive any communication from him as being that of the C. I. Rep. Dennis at that time was liaison officer with the Daily Worker but was going down to Washington for several days, maybe two weeks. He told me I was not to confuse Eisler's integrity as a Communist leader with the fact that he had a sister who was a Trotskyite. That is the case of Dennis. Although he mentioned this again on several occasions, that is a specific case I can recall.

In regard to Stachel, his references to Eisler were constant during 1943 and '44, rather to Berger, Eisler as Berger. He mentioned meeting him in order to get directives and in order to discuss problems. He brought him money from the Daily Worker. He had me arrange with Bill Browder to get money for him. He also arranged 13907 for certain articles to be printed in the Daily Worker under the name of Hans Berger.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Who was Bill Browder? A. Bill Browder was business manager of the Daily Worker.

Q. A brother of Earl Browder, was he? A. That is correct.

Q. Did you have any discussion with Foster concerning this man Berger? A. I don't recall any specific discussion with Foster along this line.

Q. Do you recall whether or not Berger actually contributed any articles to the Daily Worker? A. Oh, yes, very many. They appeared week after week in the Daily Worker, and also some in The Communist. As a matter of fact, it was Stachel who emphasized Berger more than anybody, because Stachel was the representative of the Political Bureau who dealt with the Daily Worker over several years.

Q. Did you know this man Golos, whose funeral you attended? A. Yes, sir, I knew him rather well.

Q. When did you meet him? A. I first met him away back in the twenties when I attended a Russian-American 13908 corporation which was being organized at that time, but I didn't see him from that period on until I joined the Communist Party.

Q. What was his first name? A. Jacob Golos. He was supposedly the head of the World Tourist Agency, and did function from there in the Flatiron Building in New York. I have been to his office and conferred with him there. He has been to my office and conferred with me. He has been in touch with me a great number of times, particularly from, we will say, 1936 on until his death.

Q. What kind of business was this World Tourists, if you know? A. It was a tourist agency in regard to making arrangements for tourists into Soviet Russia and also sometimes into other countries. But it also was connected, as I know, with the Soviet espionage agency.

Q. Was he a party member? A. He was chairman of the control Commission of the Communist Party for a number of years. That was the most powerful commission in the Party, having to do with the discipline of the mem-13909 bership. Each Communist is compelled to file his biography with that, and that is the commission that watches after the Communist integrity of the membership.

THE WITNESS: The fact is that when he died, because he was an alien Browder asked me to write that he had never been a member of the Communist Party, although a friend of the Party, whereas he had been chairman of the Control Commission for at least a number of years.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did you write such an article? A. That is my remembrance. I know we discussed it and I am sure it appeared.

Q. Do you think it was published? A. Yes, that is my remembrance.

Q. How often would you see Golos during the period of time that you were on the Daily Worker? A. It was irregular. He first saw me in order to introduce me to members of the MVD or Soviet secret police operating in this country. Then from time to time he was the source of getting in touch with me by them. Then when I was out at Chicago he used to call me up on the long distance phone in regard to the same matter. A relationship of that kind, though not in the same degree, continued down to 1943.

13910 Q. What would be the occasion for his introducing you to the various members of the Soviet Police?

. . . . . .

Q. Did I understand you to say that he did introduce you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would be the occasion for that? A. Not to various members. He introduced me to one member first, and then afterwards he was the go-between for other members. The occasion?

. . . . . .

Q. To what individual did he introduce you? A. He introduced me to a man who went by the name of Richards.

Q. Did he introduce you to any others? A. Yes. That is, I became acquainted in the same way from Richards to a man named Roberts whom I met several times in the presence of Golos and who I now know was Dr.

13911 Gregory Rabinowitz, the head of the Russian Red Cross, supposedly, but he went by the name of Roberts with me.

Q. Did you meet Elizabeth Bentley? A. Yes, sir. I was introduced to Miss Bentley, by Mr. Golos, who stated that she was a trusted comrade who was engaged in very important underground work and that anything that I wished to tell her in that respect I could tell her. He could not see me as much as he had wished to before because he had recently pleaded guilty, yes, pleaded guilty to having violated the foreign agents' act, and he didn't want to be seen too much in contact with me or other known communists.

Q. Give him the time and place, if you can. A. The meeting with Richards occurred in 1936, early 1936, as a result of my being called upstairs to the ninth floor by Jack Stachel and re-introduced to Golos and then Golos took me down the street to a restaurant and introduced me to Richards. The meeting with Roberts took place approximately a year later.

Q. Can you give him the place? He wants the place. A. At Childs Restaurant on upper Broadway. That was with Richards introducing me to Roberts, however.

13912 Subsequently, I met from time to time on until 1939 off and on with Golos and Roberts, who I say I now know to be Dr. Gregory Rabinowitz. We met on one occasion in 1938 in the Office of the World Tourists on a Saturday afternoon in this Flatiron Building.

Q. Now give him the time and place on your meeting with Elizabeth Bentley. A. That was early in 1943, as I recall, about that time.

Q. And the place? A. The place was in front of the Daily Worker Building. Mr. Golos had seen me several times in my office about a matter which he wanted me to take care of in underground work, and then one day he came to me and asked me if I would come downstairs and he introduced me to Miss Bentley not far from the 13th Street entrance to the Daily Worker Building.

Q. Did you know Alexander Trachtenberg? A. Oh, yes, for many years.

Q. What position, if any, did he hold in the Communist Party, USA? A. He was the head of the cultural commission, which has charge of the direction of the Communist cultural activities, the schools, the entertainment field, publications, and also has charge of the infiltration of cultural activities outside of the Communist Party.

13913 Q. Was he active in the Party during the time you were in the Party? A. Yes, sir, he was very active and a very important communist.

Q. Did he ever have anything to do with these publishing houses about which we have heard so much? A. He was in charge of the general publishing field. Specifically, though, he was head of International Publishers, in New York City. He also helped to direct what was called the Workers Library Publishers and then was changed to the New Century Publishers. But his specific first job, I should say, was that of head of the International Publishers, which gets out all the Marxist-Leninist classics.

Q. Did you have occasion to discuss mutual matters, matters of mutual interest? A. Many times, yes, sir. We discussed many times the question of publications. He was very much interested in our newspapers, the Daily Record and the Daily Worker, and in pamphlet publications also. In 1938 he announced to me when I came into Chicago that he had obtained the authorized Marx-Lenin edition in English of the History of the Communist Party of the 13914 Soviet Union which was to be published in English.

It had already been published in Russian. The English edition was going to be available.

Q. Did you ever have any discussion with him as to whether or not his activities or the activities of these publishing houses were supervised in any way or controlled in any way?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Mr. Trachtenberg stated many times, not only to me but in the Politburo sessions, that he had obtained authorized translations from Moscow. He was not permitted to issue any Marxist literature, especially the classics, without the authorization of the Marx Institute in Moscow and was in touch with them repeatedly in that regard.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. During your activity in the Party did you come to know this man J. Peters, who wrote the Peters Manual? A. Yes, sir; I knew him rather well, too. I saw him very often.

Q. What position, if any, did he have in the Party? A. He was introduced to me by Jack Stachel, as organization secretary of the Party, although Stachel said at the same 13915 time he was much more important than that. To my own knowledge in dealing with him and from his own statements to me, he was liaison man between the Communist International apparatus here and the Soviet Police operating in America.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. How often did you come in contact with him? A. In my first year in the Party, or two, I was frequently in contact with him, maybe as much as two or three times a week, if not more. Then later on when I went to Chicago that tapered off, except when I saw him in New York, and then when I returned he was for the time being largely underground and I didn't see him much, but I saw him later after, we will say, 1943 or so.

Q. Was that his real name? A. No, it was not. I don't recall his real name now. He had many different names.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13933 Q. Mr. Budenz, what news services did you find that the Daily Worker was a subscriber to when you first became associated with the Daily Worker? A. They had a purely commercial relationship with the United Press, and then they also received news from the Runag News Agency.

Q. What was the Runag News Agency? A. The Runag News Agency was the agency which under various names, that is, I mean to say, various language names, furnished information out of Moscow to the Communist Party and their organs.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Upon what service did the Daily Worker depend for news items from Moscow?

. . . . . .

13934 THE WITNESS: It depended for the main political items; these items were sent over in great volume by cable and wireless to the Daily Worker directly from Moscow through the Runag News Agency, and they contained articles translated from Soviet papers and pronouncements of Stalin and other Soviet leaders which were used in Daily Worker and also were sent up to the ninth floor.

Q. What were the sources of your information concerning this arrangement for the receipt of news by the Daily Worker from Moscow? A. In the course of my work on the editorial board it was there discussed and also the Politburo.

Q. Did it come up for discussion frequently or otherwise? A. Not frequently, but it came up occasionally. It was a well-established service. They had had it there for some time.

Q. When the matter first came to your knowledge, when you first went to work there for the Daily Worker, 13935 just exactly what was the arrangement whereby the Daily Worker received this information from Moscow?

MR. ABT: I object. No foundation.

MR. BROWN: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: It received it free of charge from Moscow and, as I say, it came in to the Daily Worker direct.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did you have occasion to talk to Earl Browder about it from time to time? A. Yes, not frequently but I have talked to Browder about it.

Q. What were the physical arrangements for the receipt of this information? A. There was in the Daily Worker a telegraph room, and in that telegraph room there were placed special machines for this service from Moscow.

13936 Q. Do you know whether these were direct wires to Moscow? A. They came from Moscow, yes.

. . . . . .

Q. Was the material received in the English language? A. Yes, sir. The prepositions were left out and had to be filled in, but otherwise the entire material was there in the English language.

Q. Give the Panel, Mr. Budenz, some idea of the extent of this information which came to you through the Russian news agencies? A. It was irregular in its contents, that is to say, sometimes it was not so large as others, but it was whole articles from the Soviet publications, statements by Soviet leaders, the approved statements by Stalin, for example, in English translation. Then on other occa-13937 sions when there was the Trotskyite Bukharin trials, for example, a great deal of the questions and answers, in fact, the whole trial, substantially, was sent over by cable or wires.

Q. Were these operators on the same floor that the Daily Worker occupied? A. Yes. That is, when I say the Daily Worker I mean the editorial department of the Daily Worker. There was the linotype department on the seventh floor and the presses below in the basement, but I am speaking of the editorial offices.

Q. That was on the eighth floor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the headquarters of the Party were on the ninth floor? A. That is correct.

Q. What use customarily was made of this information which came to you? A. A great deal of it was published in the Daily Worker, and all of it was sent up to the ninth floor, that is, a copy of it.

Q. Were any directives from Moscow ever received through this system?

. . . . . .

13938 THE WITNESS: These articles all contained directives. That is to say, the Communists looked in these articles from Moscow for the directives and the line that was to be pursued, the attitude that should be taken.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What did the Daily Worker pay for this service? A. Nothing.

Q. Do you know who did pay for it? A. I do not know directly.

Q. Did you ever discuss it with any of the Communist Party leaders? A. Yes, sir. It was discussed extensively both before I was managing editor and after I was managing editor.

Q. By "extensively" what do you mean and with whom? A. With Grace Maul Granich, with Earl Browder, and some occasions with Joseph Brodsky.

* * * * * * * * * * *

13939 Q. Let me ask you this: At the time you discussed the matter with Browder, what was his position in the Party, if any? A. He was general secretary, that is, head of the party.

Q. What did he tell you about the arrangement? A. He stated that this was free service from Moscow which we received, both for the benefit of the Party leadership and and for the benefit of the paper. Later of course other questions arose about this service.

Q. What were the questions that arose later? A. After the passage of the Foreign Registration Act of 1938, 13940 if I remember that year, the questions came up about how to handle this service, and while the service continued, a corporation was formed, the Intercontinent News, with the idea of finding some way of handling the service independent of the Daily Worker to all appearances.

Q. Who formed that corporation? A. That was formed by discussions between Browder, Grace Maul, and Brodsky, and approved by the Politburo, so far as I know.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Were these people you named, Mr. Budenz, all functionaries of the Communist Party when these matters were discussed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. All of them. Every one. Just tell the Panel in your own way what was decided and what was done about this matter. A. There were various steps. In 1938 or 1939 when I came into Chicago I attended a conference where I was invited to be present between Earl Browder and 13941 Grace Maul Granich and Joseph Brodsky, at which this matter was taken up, and the formation of the corporation was discussed and also its conduct.

Q. What was Brodsky's position in the Party? A. He was attorney for the Communist Party. The Daily Worker had another attorney, but he was attorney for the Communist Party.

Q. Was there any change made in the actual physical receipt of the news? A. There was eventually, yes.

Q. Tell it in your own way. A. By 1941 it was decided that Grace Granich should take over as the alleged sole proprietor or owner or director of this Intercontinent News Corporation, and she first operated for a few months at least, maybe a little bit longer, in the Daily Worker Building, that is, on the ninth floor, and then moved over to 799 Broadway. That was in 1941.

Q. Do you know the purpose of her moving? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it? A. The purpose of her moving was to indicate that she was a separate corporation from the Daily Worker and therefore the Daily Worker would not have to file as a foreign agent.

Q. Were those operators and machines moved 13942 physically from the premises? A. The machines were moved. One or two machines continued to receive news at the Daily Worker direct from certain correspondents that we had through the country and even one or two foreign countries.

Q. I mean the receipt of news from Moscow. A. They were moved out of the Communist Party Building.

Q. Did there come a time when the Department of Justice was insisting that the foreign propaganda be filed and labeled as such?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. The Department of Justice took over the matter of conducting the foreign registration act. Before that it was in the hands of the Department of State. They requested the Intercontinent News Corporation to register and also to label its corporation Communist propaganda or foreign propaganda according to the Act.

Q. Were the requirements of the Foreign Agents Registration Act a subject for discussion among you people? A. Oh, yes indeed. In fact, Grace Maul Granich was over at my office a number of times discussing the matter in various states of its development.

Q. Did she comply with the request that she label this information?

13943 THE WITNESS: No, sir. That was the point. That was the thing that wanted to be avoided.

. . . . . .

Q. What was the final determination in the matter, Mr. Budenz?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The final determination was that the Intercontinent News Corporation ceased operations because of this demand of the Department of Justice.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. And then what did the Daily Worker do for news direct from Moscow?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: We got a correspondent in Moscow and also began to use the Soviet Bulletin here of the Embassy and established certain correspondents in certain other foreign countries, Latin America and the like, but the correspondent in Moscow was supposed to endeavor to 13944 cover as much as possible of the whole international scene.

Q. Do you remember over what period of time Grace Granich resisted the efforts of the Department of Justice—

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. (continued) —to require her to file foreign propaganda and label it as such?

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Approximately. A. The Department of Justice?

Q. Yes. A. About two years or a little less.

Q. Do you know from your discussions with her and other leaders whether she was finally required to comply by labelling the material she received—

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Would you repeat that, please?

(The pending question was read by the reporter)

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir, she was supposed to.

13945 By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Is that when she dissolved this Intercontinent? A. That is right.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did you have any discussions with her or the Politburo or Browder or any other leaders of the Party as to why they did not wish to comply?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir. That was a matter of extended discussion, I mean extended time. The reason was that they did not wish to register as foreign agents and also a very disturbing element was that when the Department of Justice came into the scene they did not wish an examination of the financial structure since they stated that it would show that the amount of money the Intercontinent News got from the Daily Worker and Freiheit was inconsequential compared to the cost?

Q. What was the importance of this service, if any, to the Communist Party of the United States?

. . . . . .

13946 THE WITNESS: It was of very great importance, not merely to the Daily Worker which thereby received day to day indications of the line which should be followed and the interpretation of the line, but also, as I have stated, copies had to be sent up to the ninth floor and they were considered by the leadership of the Party as part of the directives they received.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did any other publication in the United States receive this service direct? A. No. The Daily Worker sent a copy to the Freiheit, that is, when it was Runag. A copy was also reserved for the Freiheit. That was the daily paper which was also in the same building with the Daily Worker. Later on the Intercontinent News distributed it to the Daily Worker, Freiheit, and several other Communist controlled papers.

Q. To your knowledge, Mr. Budenz, did the Communist Party resort to any strategy to conceal its control of the Daily Worker?

13947 THE WITNESS: It was to separate the Party technically from the Daily Worker that the Freedom of the Press Company, Inc., was established.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. That is the company of which you became president? A. That is right.

Q. Was Granich in the Party up until the time you left? A. Yes, sir.

13953 Q. Do you know who had control of Party finances?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: They were in the control while I was there of a commission headed by Weiner, assisted by Lement Upham Harris and the late Charles Krumbein. They supervised all finances of the Party and also decided on the needs of the various divisions of the Party.

Q. Did that include control of the Daily Worker finances? A. It included supervision of the Daily Worker finances.

Q. How about the finances of the International Publishers? A. It included the control of all organizations under the control of the Party, even including a number of Communist front organizations. That is, they were supervised by Weiner, assisted by Lement Upham Harris, and the late Charles Krumbein.

. . . . . .

MISS MCHALE: May I ask two or three questions?

13954 How much freedom, Mr. Budenz, did you feel that you had, if any, as managing editor of the paper or of the publication with respect to composition, et cetera?

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: The execution of things, that is, the assignment of things to be done was in the hands of the managing editor, but the complete control of the tone of the paper, its political attitudes, and even the leading articles was in the hands of the political bureau, and their representative conferred, as I have stated, I should say on the average of once a day, particularly during the latter part of my managing editorship, in addition to frequent discussions over the telephone and frequent visits upstairs to go over matters.

MISS MCHALE: How was this done in the day? Was the copy for the press read and checked?

THE WITNESS: Yes. That was done as in a regular newspaper by copyreaders, but also on important matters the managing editor or the assistant managing editor, whoever was there in the evening, went over it. However, by 13965 that time the tone of the paper, the editorial policy and everything else had been decided.

Miss McHale: Did you have any recourse in the event you didn't agree with some of the decisions? To whom could you go?

The Witness: You had to agree with every decision. It would cause you to be expelled for some deviation if I disagreed.

Miss McHale: The other question is this: During your time with the Daily Worker, with the Communist Party, did they ever employ you on their headquarters staff in any capacity as a non-Communist?

The Witness: They did not. That is, when you say headquarters staff I judge you mean the personnel of the Party itself and the secretaries and telephone operators. They of course had to have some non-Communists among the printers, because the union insisted on certain rules in that respect. So far as I know these telegraph operators sent in by the outside agencies were non-Communists, but the entire staff, including telephone operators, secretaries, and everyone else had to be communists. In fact, you had to get their biography during a period of time for the control commission and examine them very carefully before putting them on, at least after a probationary period.

Miss McHale: This is my last question: In respect 13956 to the fealty oath I get the impression that not all groups had to take it, that it was optional at a particular time, but that some of the leaders had to take it. I would like to have that clarified.

. . . . . .

The Witness: This was presented to me as something that it was essential that I accept. I was told by Stachel that this was what all Communist functionaries had to have as their basic pledge and loyalty. There was no oath of that kind or pledge given to mass Communist members. At one time there was a pledge given which included very strong words in regard to attachment to Soviet Russia, but this pledge to Stalin was one which was given to party functionaries and leaders.

Miss McHale: Over a period? There was no particular concentration of emphasis?

The Witness: No. It occurred after the 1935 Congress, but all through the Communist directives and literature there is constant hailing of Stalin as the leader, teacher and friend. That is repeated over and over again in Political Affairs and The Communist.

13957 Cross Examination

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Marcantonio:

14055 Q. You testified about a meeting held in a basement in Chicago in the fall or winter of 1939-1940. You so testified here. A. That is right.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14057 Q. You have testified here that at that meeting Dennis said the Party should be prepared in case the United States joined with Great Britain and against Hitler to turn the imperialist war into a civil war as Lenin had advised. That was your testimony here. A. That certainly is correct.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Are you sure, for example, that Dennis said in so many words that the Party should be prepared to turn the imperialist war into a civil war? A. He made two statements. He first said that we should be prepared to 14058 turn the imperialist war into something else, and then at the conclusion of the discussion he said we should turn the imperialist war into civil war, that we should be prepared if the United States joined Great Britain against Hitler.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14059 Q. You wrote about this meeting in This is My Story? A. That is right.

Q. Did you say there that Dennis talked about turning the imperialist war into a civil war? A. I may not have.

Q. As a matter of fact there you say that he said that the imperialist war would have to be turned into something else. A. Yes, I probably did.

Q. On cross-examination you say that Dennis made two statements. A. Oh, yes.

Q. The two statements, according to you, were, one, the imperialist war had to be turned into a civil war, and two, that the imperialist war had to be turned into something else. On direct examination you didn't say anything about Dennis making two statements. You attributed only one statement to him, did you not? A. I didn't give 14060 a whole resume of his statement there. That was the thing that I had most in mind at that time.

Q. But you were talking about this statement, this meeting in a basement, on direct examination, were you not? A. Oh, yes, I was but you don't cover everything that is said. I may remember in a few minutes something more that was said because you just don't cover everything in a statement. That is just known. I put down that he said turn the imperialist war into civil war, which he did, if the United States joined Great Britain.

Q. But you had gone over that particular meeting in the basement, this basement meeting, this so-called meeting that took place in Chicago—you had gone over that with Mr. Paisley before you testified about it? A. Yes, I did rather hurriedly.

Q. Hurriedly? Were not the question and the answer to that written out? Written out hurriedly, would you say? A. I don't know whether that was written out or not. I can't recall that particular matter.

Q. When you wrote about this episode—and I have your book before me, This is My Story, page 195—didn't you say as follows with reference to Mr. Dennis' statement?

"Gene Dennis was there from New York and gave a brief report. In almost sepulchral tones he said the 14061 time was approaching when we would have to 'turn the imperialist war into something else.' That was plain enough; it meant to be prepared to do anything to wreck American loans to aid Britain, either directly or indirectly."

Do you recall writing that?

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Yes. I started reading from here (indicating). A. Yes, that is what I wrote.

Q. You testified that in 1939 you made a trip from Chicago to New York with Morris Childs to secure some money for the Midwest Daily Record. That was your testimony here? A. That is correct. It may have been the latter part of 1938, but it was in that period. My memory is that it was in early 1939. That is very correct. We had made several of those trips.

Q. Your memory isn't too good on dates, is it? A. Yes, it is good on dates, particularly some that stand out. But that was one of a series of trips made back and forth on this question. Weiner was out in Chicago on the money 14062 question, and Childs and I on several occasions were in New York on it.

Q. You testified that you and Childs conferred in New York? A. That is correct.

Q. And you conferred with one Robert Weiner? A. William Weiner, yes.

Q. That Childs asked Weiner if he couldn't get some money from abroad? A. That is correct.

Q. And your testimony here is that Weiner answered that he could normally but channels of communication abroad had been broken for the time being. Was that your testimony? A. That is right.

Q. You testified here that "abroad" meant financial aid from Moscow? A. That is correct.

Q. Mr. Witness, you have had occasion to write or testify about the sources and nature of the finances of the Communist Party in your two books, is that right? A. To some extent.

Q. You did write about that subject matter, did you not?

A. Yes, I did.

14063 Q. In your public testimony before various committees as well as in deportation proceedings and in court proceedings and in various other writings you have had occasion to discuss or narrate with reference to the source of Communist Party finances, have you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You testified this morning, did you not in one of the early questions I asked you, that you didn't say anything here that you hadn't said anywhere else publicly or that you hadn't written somewhere else publicly? A. That is my remembrance.

Q. That was just this morning. Do you remember being asked that question and making that answer? A. I say that was my remembrance this morning, that I had.

Q. You answered that question that you had not said anything here that you had not either published or about which you testified anywhere else, isn't that right? A. That was my remembrance.

Q. Publicly. Have you ever in any of your books or writings or in your published testimony related this alleged conversation between yourself, Childs and Weiner? A. It is my remembrance that I have somewhere. I certainly have told the Federal Bureau of Investigation about it.

Q. I didn't ask you about that. I didn't ask you 14064 what you told the Federal Bureau of Investigation. That is private. I asked where in your writings in your books which have been published or in your public testimony, where you have publicly testified and where the record of your testimony is available, have you testified relating this particular incident that you have related here that is alleged to have taken place between yourself, Childs and Weiner. A. I can't recall for the moment.

* * * * * * * * * *

14069 Q. Did you testify about it in a proceeding before the subcommittee on Immigration and Naturalization of the Committee on the Judiciary, 81st Congress, in May 1949? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you testify about finances in that proceeding? A. I did in part, yes.

Q. Didn't you make this statement? Page 240:

"The Party has a bigger treasury than you think. It can go out, and finance all the meetings, and it gets the money back, you understand."

Were you asked this question by the Chairman?

"Where does this treasury come from?"

And did you make this answer: "Of my own knowledge I can not say, but it certainly is supposed to come in part from Moscow."

Did you give that answer? A. I may have.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14070 Q. I will show it to you and ask you whether or not you did, starting here (indicating).

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Yes, sir, that is correct.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. You did make that statement? A. That is of my knowledge.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14096 Q. You testified that the Starobin letter was received by you in May 1945, is that right? A. I testified it was received in May because it was received after Manuilsky arrived and before the Duclos article was printed or made public.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14108 Q. Did you make this statement in your book. I am reading from page 278 of your book entitled This is My Story:

"To a very inner group there had been a hint, of course, that the Soviet views were about to change. The most sensational by-product of the San Francisco conference was never published: the whispered orders of D. Z. Manuilsky, boss of the Communist International, to the American Party via the French Comrades. We got wind of this at the Daily Worker through a letter from Joseph Starobin, foreign editor of the paper, sent post haste from the conference scene in California. Manuilsky's indirect command did not censor Browder in any way, but it did bluntly order that Stettinius must be fought. However, this was supposedly in order to forward the pledge of Teheran—and so it was conveyed to us. There was not the slightest indication that Manuilsky intended any such drastic operation within the Party as Browder's political execution, though 14109 sharpshooting against the United States officials was not exactly the way Browder had talked. Naturally, the Daily Worker leaped to follow the Manuilsky command and increased its slurs and shouts against the Secretary of State."

Did you write that statement? A. I said here via the French Comrades.

Q. That is through the French Comrades. That is what you said, right? A. That was involved in the matter. That didn't necessarily require that I put in everything that was in the letter there. I mentioned the French Comrades there.

Q. I didn't ask you whether it was necessary or what was necessarily required. I asked you whether or not that is your writing. A. That is correct, Counsellor, but the French Comrades were mentioned there, Manuilsky is mentioned there, Starobin's letter is mentioned there.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14110 Q. You say you don't remember your testimony before the UAC, the Un-American Activities Committee, on this subject? A. No, not in detail.

Q. You don't remember whether you testified about it or not, do you? A. I don't know.

Q. I will try to refresh your recollection on that by showing you your testimony. At page 34 did you make this statement:

14111 "As a matter of fact, right on the eve of the Browder business, Joseph Starobin, the foreign editor of the Daily Worker, wrote a very indiscreet letter to the editorial board of the Daily Worker, from whence it was snatched and immediately travelled to the ninth floor. And in that letter he said toward the end of the San Francisco conference, that the French Comrades, who were used largely to beat the Americans, asserted that there should be more of an attack upon Stettinius by the American Communists. He added that this was 'likewise the opinion of Comrade Manuilsky.' This letter was very quickly taken by Stachel and it travelled to the ninth floor and disappeared. This was an instance before Browder's deposition showed how things were going.".

Did you make that statement? A. Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

14123 Q. Was your report to the FBI about the Starobin letter the same as your testimony before the Un-14124 American Activities Committee? A. I cannot recall now, counselor. I have given report after report to the FBI. I have answered questions they have asked me, and there have been many, many questions.

Q. Can you tell us whether or not the date that you gave them as to the receipt of the letter with respect to the beginning or the end of the conference, was the same as you gave to the Un-American Activities Committee? A. No, I can not.

Q. Or did it follow your description of the incident in "This is My Story"? A. I think it probably followed the description of the incident in "This is My Story," although there may have been more factors to it than that. I know, as I say, that the various items covered in the book were gone over with the FBI either before or after the book was published.

Q. Let me ask you this question specifically, if you remember: Did you tell the FBI that the Starobin letter was received toward the end of the San Francisco conference? A. I do not recall that. I do not recall their questioning me about the details of the matter. That is, I can not recall the details as presented to them.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you told the FBI that Starobin wrote that it was the French Comrades 14125 who said there should be more of an attack by the American party on Stettinius? A. I told them, yes, that, and that that was what Manuilsky said, also.

Q. You remember telling them just that? A. I don't remember specifically, but I know I gave them the substance of this material that we have had before us, that is—

Q. Do you remember specifically whether or not you told them that Starobin wrote that it was the French comrades who said that there should be more of an attack by the American party on Stettinius? Did you specifically give that report to the FBI? A. I gave the report that this flowed from Manuilsky. I don't know the exact phraseology in which I made it. I also referred to the French comrades.

Q. But you don't know whether you specifically made this statement? A. Oh, I couldn't remember that today, no.

Mr. Art: If the Panel please, on the basis of the witness' testimony, we move that the Panel direct the petitioner to produce all reports made by this witness to the Federal Bureau of Investigation dealing with the so-called Starobin letter.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14132 Mr. Brown:

* * * * * * * * * * *

You have argued your motion at length on the production of the Bureau reports, and your motion is denied.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Marcantonio:

14150 Q. While you were connected with the Daily Worker did it ever carry an article or editorial written by you—and you were the managing editor for a time—which advocated the overthrow of the Government by force and violence? A. Not directly or specifically, no. That was not the line of the Party then. It had changed as a result of the People's front. Before that the Daily Worker did, but during our time these references were made through references to Marxism-Leninism, the Leninist classics, and the like.

Q. During your time—you were connected from when to when on the Daily Worker? When did you begin? A. 1935 to 1945.

Q. So in 1935 to 1945 did you at any time write any article in the Daily Worker advocating the overthrow of the 14151 government by force and violence? A. No, I did not, not specifically.

Q. While you were with the Midwest Record did you or anybody else publish in that paper anything which advocated the overthrow of the government by force or violence? A. No, sir, except by reference to the works which stand for that program, but it was not the line of the Party at that time to publicly do that.

* * * * * * * * * *

14152 Q. When did Edwards tell you that he was a C. I. representative? A. He told me that in the latter part of 1935 or early 1936, or rather it was first told in his presence.

* * * * * * * * * *

14155 Q. Was it on just one occasion that he told you that or was it on other occasions that he told you? A. That I do not recall.

Q. But you distinctly remember one occasion that he told you that he was the C. I. Rep? A. That is right.

Q. You mentioned another occasion when somebody else in the presence of Edwards told you that he, Edwards, was a C.I. Rep. When was that occasion? A. Well, once Bittelman mentioned it, and I don't know whether this was in the presence of Edwards. I remember Bittelman mentioning it in his presence.

14156 Q. Going back in your testimony didn't you tell us here that there was another occasion when someone in the presence of Edwards told you that he was a C.I. Rep? A. Yes, I say Bittelman did on one occasion.

Q. But you now say it was not in the presence of Edwards? A. Oh, yes, it was. I am trying to recall whether Harry Raymond said it in his presence or not.

Q. But you do recall and you are certain, you say, that Bittelman in the presence of Edwards did say that he, Edwards, was a C.I. rep? A. That is right.

Q. When did that take place? A. That was in the spring of 1936.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14160 Q. Was Harry Raymond a member of the Political Bureau? A. No, he was not.

Q. You were a witness in the trial, the United States v. Eisler, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, were you not? A. That is right.

Q. That testimony of yours took place in July 1947, did it not? A. That is substantially right, yes, sir.

Q. You testified for the government? A. That is right.

Q. Do you remember who the prosecutor was? A. Mr. Hitz.

Q. In this trial Eisler was charged with having made false statements in an application to the State Department for permission to leave the United States, isn't that 14161 right? A. Yes.

Q. One of the alleged false statements was that he had stated that he was not a member of or affiliated with any organization, although in fact, it was alleged, he was a member of and affiliated with the Communist Party, is that right? A. That is right substantially.

Q. And another alleged false statement was in answer to a question what names he had used, he had written only Gerhart Eisler, whereas it was charged that he had in fact used among others the names Edwards and Hans Berger, isn't that right. A. That is right.

Q. Before taking the stand of course you discussed your testimony with the prosecutor in that case, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were informed of the nature of the trial, what the trial was all about? A. Yes, I was.

Q. You were fully aware of the accusations made against the defendant in that case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had informed the prosecutor the testimony you would give was testimony that would bear on the charges on these charges that we have recited here? A. That 14162 was the supposition, yes, sir.

Q. The prosecutor told you, did he not, that one of the things he was trying to prove in the trial, that is, one of the issues, was that Eisler had been a representative of the Communist International? A. I do not recall that.

Q. You don't recall that? A. No. I recall the general charges against Eisler, that is, the ones on which he was tried as having misrepresented himself as being not a Communist when he was one.

Q. Don't you recall the prosecutor charged Eisler with being a representative of the CI? A. I do not.

Q. As a matter of fact, you were in the courtroom at the time the prosecutor opened up the case, were you not? A. No, I wasn't.

Q. You were conversant with the prosecutor's opening up and the charging that he made, were you not? A. I came in late and I wasn't there when he made the charges. I wasn't particularly familiar with them.

Q. You knew about the case from the beginning? A. Yes, I did.

Q. You followed the case from the beginning? A. Yes, to some extent.

Q. As a matter of fact, you read about the case in 14163 the press during that period, did you not? A. Oh, yes.

Q. You say now that you don't know that the prosecutor charged Eisler with being a representative of the CI, that that was part of the Government's case and that it was so charged? A. I don't recall it. I recall the charge that Eisler was technically arraigned on as I understood it, that is, that he had misrepresented his Communist Party affiliation.

Q. Those were the charges that he was technically arraigned on, and you were aware, were you not, that those charges did involve his being a CI representative? A. I suppose they did.

Q. You supposed at that time that they did, didn't you? A. I should say so.

MR. ABT: If the Panel please, so that there may be no doubt about this question that Mr. Marcantonio has raised on cross-examination we request the Panel to take judicial notice of the opinions, both the majority and the dissenting opinions, in the case of Eisler v. the United States before the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, which appears in 176 Fed. 2d. page 21, and we direct the Panel's attention particularly to two brief statements in the opinion which I would like to point out. First, the following statement in the opinion of the major-14164 ity of the court, and I quote:

"In spite of this, the Appellant claims prejudicial error because the prosecuting attorney outlined in his opening statement the broad sweep which his proof would take concerning Eisler's activities as a Communist and as an agent of the Communist International."

That appears at page 23 of the opinion.

Then the following statement, which appears at page 25 of the dissenting opinion, Judge Edgerton's dissent, and I quote:

"The prosecutor in his opening statement told the jury that the Appellant 'was a representative of the Comintern and that his real purpose for coming to this country * * * was for the purpose of disrupting the economy of the United States, to further the ends of Moscow.' There was testimony that he had been 'the head of the Comintern' and was to direct the Communist Party in this country. He was represented as having taken a leading part in Communist activities here and abroad. The prosecutor in his closing argument told the jury that Appellant was 'Anti-Government.'"

* * * * * * * * * * *

By Mr. Marcantonio:

14169 Q. Isn't it a fact that in that trial you stated that you related everything that you could recall about your meetings with Eisler in the 1930's. A. I don't know. It may be that I did.

Q. It may be that you did. So now you say that you may have said to the court and jury in that case that you had related everything that you could recall about your meetings with Eisler in the 1930's? A. It may be.

14170 Q. Since you say it may be, I ask you whether or not you were asked this question and whether or not you gave this answer: I am now calling the witness' attention to his testimony at page 1286 in the transcript of the proceedings, United States of America v. Gerhart Eisler. Were you asked this question and did you make this answer?

"Now have you related everything that you can recall about your meetings with Eisler in the 1930's?

"Answer: That is all that I recall."

Did you give that answer to that question? A. Yes, I did. That was all I could recall then, probably.

Q. That was all that you could recall at that time? A. That is right.

Q. That was in 1947? A. That is right.

Q. Is it not a fact that never in the Eisler trial did you testify that Eisler or Edwards had ever told you that he was a representative of the Communist International, as you have testified here? A. That may be. I took it for granted that everybody knew he was a CI Rep. I mean in my own mind.

Q. In your own mind. A. Sure. The whole course of Eisler, the Batory, the Red Polish ship and all that indicates that he was.

Q. So the reason that you did not state at that 14171 trial that Eisler had told you that he was a CI Rep, as you have testified here, is because you assumed that everybody knew about Eisler's being a CI Rep? Is that your testimony now? Is that your explanation? A. I didn't recall the conversation and didn't think it necessary, probably.

Q. So you say now that the reason you did not make mention of it in that trial was because you did not recall the conversation and you didn't think it was necessary, is that it? A. That is right.

14172 Q. Did you anywhere in that trial testify that anybody told you in the presence of Eisler that Eisler or Edwards was a CI Rep? A. I don't recall having done so.

. . . . . .

14328 Q. I show you Exhibit marked for identification CP-68, which is a pamphlet entitled "Red Baiting: Enemy of Labor," and ask you who wrote it. A. I wrote it.

Q. When? It states on the back cover. A. 1937.

Q. October, wasn't it? A. That is right.

Q. At that time you had been in the Party for about three years, is that right? A. That is right.

Q. You were then labor editor of the Daily Worker? A. That is right.

Q. I call your attention to the last page, which reads as follows:

"That is why the Communists place themselves in the front line trenches of the fight for trade unionism and democracy, along with other progressive trade unionists.

"That is why the Communists strive so zealously to build the unions and to preserve their unity from disruption."

. . . . . .

14380 Q. You testified here that after the passage of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, there was a discussion on how to handle the Runag service. A. That is right.

Q. You also testified that after the Department of Justice took over the registration of foreign agents from the State Department, the Department of Justice requested Intercontinent News to register, and also to label its material as foreign propaganda; wasn't that your testimony here? A. That is right. That was 1942, though.

14381 Q. You also testified that the reason why Browder and the other party leaders did not want to comply with the Act was because they did not wish to register as foreign agents and did not wish an examination of the financial arrangement by the Department of Justice. Was that not your testimony here? A. That is right. That is what Mrs. Maul Granich said several times.

Q. But that was your testimony here? A. That is right.

Q. Didn't you also tell us here that in 1941, Intercontinent News moved out of the Daily Worker office to separate itself from the Daily Worker so that the Daily Worker would not have to file as a foreign agent? Wasn't that your testimony here? A. That is right. The Intercontinent News was to be an independent corporation in appearance.

Q. Is it not a fact that the Daily Worker did register under the Foreign Registration Act? A. It registered, and denied it had foreign—as I remember, it registered, but denied it had foreign agents.

Q. But it did register, did it not? A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, didn't you personally sign and swear to a registration statement under the Act?

14382 A. That is right.

MR. ABT: Will you mark this?

(Document marked for identification CP Exhibit No. 70.)

BY MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. I show you Communist Party Exhibit No. 70 for identification. That is a statement dated September 5, 1941, is it not? A. Just a moment. (Witness examining document.) That is right.

Q. It was filed with the State Department on that day or the next day, on or about that day, isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. That statement was made by you as President of Freedom of the Press Company, Inc.? A. That is right.

Q. This statement refers to a prior statement dated October 10, 1940, does it not? A. That is right. I don't know.

Q. October 18. A. It states here October 18, 1940.

14387 Q. In the October 1940 statement, which is CP Exhibit 71, reference is made, is it not, to a Registration Statement contained in CP Exhibit 72, which is the Registration Statement of March 1940? A. That is right.

Q. That is clear, isn't it? A. Yes, sir. But these statements were not made to avoid registration. They were to avoid registration as foreign agents. They deny they are foreign agents.

Q. These statements that you have, CP 70, 71, and 72, were all filed with the State Department, were they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are forms for registration under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, are they not? A. That is right, but they deny they are foreign agents. That is the point.

Q. Now I call your attention to Question 12 on Exhibit 72, which is the first statement that was filed, on March 29, 1940. Question No. 12. We have there the following question:

"Identification of all contracts of employment or other documents submitted herewith to indicate in com-14388 plete detail the nature of the employment of registrant and the terms and conditions thereof. If contract is oral, a full statement of the terms and conditions thereof must be submitted herewith and identified herein."

Will you read the answer to that question? A. This is one that I had not made myself. This is a previous statement.

Q. That is right, but it was referred to. A. "Photostats of contract with the United Press attached hereto. The registrant receives the regular telegram and mail news service covering events all over the world for publication in newspapers and the United Press, under the contract, is entitled to the use of all news in our two newspapers for transmission to other parts of the world.

"No written or oral agreements have been made between the Daily Publishing Company, Inc., and the Rundschau, Delta Verlag AG, or the Agence France-Monde. Further answer to No. 12 on rider attached hereto marked 'A'."

Q. Will you read the answer in the rider? A. The rider is an insert, but it is under "A."

"12 (continued): We send to the Rundschau, Delta 14389 Verlag AG and Agence France-Monde, or direct to the newspapers receiving their service, news concerning current events in the United States and we receive from both Rundschau, Delta Verlag AG and the Agence France-Monde news of events in Europe.

"We receive these news services as a contribution given by Mr. Earl Browder, who is General Secretary of the Communist Party, U.S.A. Mr. Browder informs us that he arranged the service by agreement made in April 1936 with Mr. Julius Alperi, care of France-Monde, Paris, France, whereby the accounts for this service would be offset by (a) contributions to the news and press articles sent from the United States to Europe, to offices of newspapers designated by the Rundschau, Delta Verlag AG and Agence France-Monde, and (b) payment of account balances periodically to an agency of the Rundschau, Delta Verlag AG or of the Agence France-Monde, by means of publication rights abroad of the writings of Mr. Browder, William Z. Foster and others. This arrangement was established before the Daily Publishing Company, Inc., came into existence, and was continued by it as a matter of routine."

That, however, was a device used in order to escape the Foreign Agents Registration Act.

Q. But they did register under that Act? A. They 14390 registered in order to say they had no foreign principal.

By Mr. Paisley:

14542 Q. With reference to this news service about which — you testified and about which you were cross-examined, as I understand it both the State Department and the Justice Department were communicating with both Browder and Mrs. Granich during the period from this arrangement which was made by Mr. Browder right up through 1944 in an effort to get them to register as foreign agents, is that correct?

• • • • • • • • • • •

14543 The Witness: Yes, sir.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Q. How frequently did you discuss the matter of this effort of the State Department and the Justice Department to have these people register as foreign agents, as agents of a foreign principal? How frequently?

• • • • • • • • • • •

14544 The Witness: I had frequent discussions of the matter, particularly with Mrs. Granich, who came over to my office almost once a week to discuss the matter, not that frequently, maybe twice a month, and then as 1942 to 1944 came about, that is, after it, I had a number of discussions with her some of which were quite close together, because at that time she contended that the Department of Justice was pressing very hard in regard to the necessity of labelling this material as propaganda. That was becoming more and more the insistence of the Department of Justice during that two-year period.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Do you remember now approximately when the Department of Justice finally ruled and so informed her that this material must be labeled?

• • • • • • • • • • •

The Witness: It was around 1944, the early part of 1944.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. Up to that time had there been any change or diminution whatsoever in the receipt of this news from Moscow?

. . . . . .

14545 The Witness: No. It came in in approximately the same volume. Of course just as at the time of Runag, there were periods when it was more intense, but it was approximately the same thing, translations of Soviet publications and other information from throughout the world gathered through Moscow.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. In other words, did the pressure from the State Department and the Justice Department cause any change whatsoever in the transmission of this information to you?

. . . . . .

14546 The Witness: Not in the contents of the material up until about May 1944, when Intercontinent News was discontinued. During the time between Runag and Intercontinent News there was the same transmission of news except it came through Intercontinent News, and then in May 1944 Intercontinent News had to suspend.

Mr. Paisley: These next two documents, Mr. Chairman, if received in evidence, are rather short and could be read into the record. I don't have photostats. They are originals so I don't want them marked. I want to show them now to the witness and see if he can identify them.

Mr. Brown: Very well.

Mr. Paisley: If he does I would like the privilege of reading them into the record.

Mr. Brown: Show them to the witness, if you will, for identification, and then to Respondent's counsel.

(Respondent's counsel examining documents)

Mr. Abt: No objection.

Mr. Marcantonio: No objection, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Brown: Very well.

MR. ABT: To save time, Mr. Paisley, we concede 14547 authenticity.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Are you familiar with Grace Granich stationery? A. Yes, I saw this letter.

Q. Did you also see this notice sent out? A. Not only did I see it but it was given to me as a sample of what they were sending out.

MR. MARCANTONIO: We are not questioning the authenticity of that and we are not objecting to its going in.

MR. PAISLEY: I understand that. I am a little obstinate myself once in a while. I wanted the witness to identify it.

This letter is on the stationery of Intercontinent News, 207 Fourth Avenue, Room 902, New York City. Grace Granich, editor, cable address INCONTNEWS. American representative: Universal Press Service, Moscow, USSR. Dated May 16, 1944. Addressed to Mr. James R. Sharp, Chief, Foreign Agents Registration Section, War Division, Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.:

"Dear Mr. Sharp:

"Enclosed herewith is a copy of a communication which I have sent today to all my subscribers.

"Until it is definitely ascertained whether the new ruling of the Attorney General applies to me, and I have 14548 obtained legal advice as to further procedure, I am issuing no more bulletins, nor disseminating in any way the cabled news service which I received from Universal Press Service in the USSR.

"In this connection I repeat again my conviction that the law in question should not apply to me since I represent a bonafide news agency in an allied country, which agency is not owned or controlled by either a foreign government or a foreign political party. As I told you when we discussed the matter in Washington in January of last year, I considered the application of this law to an agent of an unofficial news agency in the Soviet Union a discrimination against the Soviet Union, since the act specifically excludes from its provisions news agencies, privately owned, in friendly or allied countries.

"Yours very truly, Grace Granich, Editor, Inter-Continent News.

"Copy of Notice to subscribers."

Those words are typed at the bottom of the first page.

The enclosure is a mimeographed letter signed Editor, Intercontinent News, dated May 16, 1944, addressed "To All Subscribers."

"We regret to inform you that on May 15, 1944, 14549 we temporarily discontinued the news service supplied by this agency.

"We have been compelled to take this step because of a ruling of the Attorney General of the United States, which demands that the news supplied by Universal Press Service, Moscow, and distributed to you by this agency be labelled 'political propaganda.'

"Since we are unwilling to label the news received from the USSR as 'propaganda'—which it is not—and since we are seeking legal opinion in this matter, we have no other recourse but to discontinue our service, until such time as the situation may be clarified.

"If your failure to receive the service supplied by Intercontinent News works a hardship upon you, we can only refer you to the Department of Justice.

"Very truly yours, Editor, Intercontinent News."

At this time I ask the Board to take judicial notice of the provision of the Foreign Agents Registration Act, which, as I understand, makes a matter of public record all these registration statements that were filed with the Justice Department. I say that because we were accused here the other day of suppressing evidence. These documents that they put in evidence were matters of public record available to each side, and I hardly see how we can be justly 14550 accused of holding and secreting evidence.

* * * * * * * * * *

MR. BROWN: Do you want to refer to certain specific sections of that act?

MR. ABT: We submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Panel can take judicial notice of the entire Foreign Agents Registration Act.

MR. BROWN: Very well. There being no objection, the Panel will do so. Let's proceed.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. After that date you ceased to get this news service from Intercontinent News? A. It ceased completely.

14660 John Gates called as a witness on behalf of Respondent having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows.

• • • • • • • • • • •

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

14662 Q. Do you hold any offices in the Communist Party at the present time? A. Yes.

Q. What office do you hold? A. I am a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party.

Q. When did you first become a member of the National Committee? A. Of the Communist Party?

Q. Yes. A. In July of 1945.

Q. Will you state the circumstances under which you were made a member of the Committee? A. Well, there was a Special Emergency Convention of the Communist Party at that time. I was not present at the Convention, I was a member of the United States Armed Forces. I was in Germany at the time. I was elected by that Convention to the National Committee in absentia.

Q. Had you, prior to that time, been a member of the National Committee of the Communist Political As-14663 sociation? A. Yes. At the Convention of the Communist Political Association in 1944, I was elected to the National Council of that organization, also in absentia. At that time, I was in the Aleutian Islands in the United States Armed Forces.

Q. When did you take office as a member of the National Committee? A. When I returned from the Army, in, roughly, February, 1946.

Q. Have you been a member of the National Committee continuously since that time? A. Yes.

Q. You were re-elected? A. I was re-elected in the National Convention of 1948, and again elected in the Convention of 1950.

• • • • • • • • • •

14720 Q. Prior to your departure to Spain, did you make an application for a passport? A. I did.

Q. Under what name? A. Under the name that was on my birth certificate, Isriel Ragenstrich.

Q. The name on your birth certificate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the application call for a listing by you of the countries to be visited? A. It did.

Q. Did you list Spain as one of the countries to be visited by you? A. I did not.

Q. Why not? A. Because at that time the Government of the United States of America did not permit anyone to use a passport for traveling to Spain, although it did permit passports for traveling to Fascist Germany and 14721 Italy.

Q. On your arrival in Spain, did you serve with the International Brigade? A. I did.

• • • • • • • • • •

14759 Q. Now, what are the objectives of the Communist Party? A. Well, we divide the objectives of the Communist Party into two parts, the immediate and ultimate objectives of the Communist Party.

Q. What do you and your associates mean by the terms ultimate and immediate objectives? What is the ultimate objective?

First, what is the immediate objective? A. The immediate objectives of the Communist Party—

Q. Just a moment. Before you give us the meaning of the ultimate and immediate objectives, will you first tell us what is the difference between the two?

MR. PAISLEY: You mean as far as the Communist interpretation as applied to the United States?

14760 MR. MARCANTONIO: That is right, of the United States.

THE WITNESS: By immediate objectives, we mean all of those interests of the American people arising out of the every-day effects of the operation of the capitalist system on their struggle for existence to make both ends meet, from the economic point of view, all of those issues arising out of the improvement of their democratic rights, preservation and extension of those rights, and the peace of the American people and the world.

Generally, these immediate objectives have to do with those issues that can be solved within the framework of the capitalist system, that is, they can be won, they can be achieved.

The ultimate objectives refer to the cause of these evils, the operations of the capitalist system, and have to do with those measures that bring about a final solution, a radical solution, a solution that strikes at the roots of the evil of the capitalist system. That is, a revolutionary change. That is the ultimate objective.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Now, what do you mean by a revolutionary change? A. By a revolutionary change I mean the superseding of the capitalist system, which is a system of the ownership of the mines, mills, factories, means of communications, by a few capitalists and operated for profit on the basis 14761 of the exploitation of the many, the superseding of this system by a socialist system, namely a system in which these means of production, that is, the factories, mines, mills and so on, pass over into public ownership from private ownership, and are operated under a government of the majority of the people led by the working class, and in which the goods that are produced by the mills and factories and so on under this public ownership are produced for use and not for the profit of any few individuals. And a system in which, therefore, the exploitation of man by man is limited.

Q. Now, what do you say, then, is the ultimate objective of the Communist Party of the United States? A. The attainment of socialism in the United States.

Q. And socialism is what you have defined here a moment ago. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, specifically what are the immediate objectives of the Communist Party of the United States? A. Well, as I said, they fall into the categories of promotion of the economic interests and welfare of the American people, the preservation and extension of the democratic rights and liberties of the country which specifically also deal especially with the problems of the Negro people of the United States, and lastly all those questions having to do with the peace of the nation.

14762 Q. Now, what means does the Communist Party of the United States of America advocate to achieve these objectives, both immediate and ultimate? A. Peaceful and constitutional means.

Q. Just exactly what does the Communist Party mean when it says by peaceful and constitutional means? A. It means the exercise of the constitutional rights of the American people, freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of views, freedom of the press, to place our views before the American people on all of the matters that modern industry has created in order to do that, within these constitutional safeguards.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Are these objectives of the Communist Party stated in any official document of the Party? A. Yes, they are stated in many official documents of the Party. They are first of all stated in the constitution of the Communist Party of the United States, and they have always 14763 been stated in the constitution of the Communist Party of the United States. They have also been stated very often in the main resolutions adopted by various conventions, national conventions, of the Communist Party, national committee meetings, meetings of all types, resolutions, main speeches made by leaders of the Communist Party and so on. Throughout our literature of the Communist Party of the United States, these things are stated.

Q. And you say these things are stated in the constitution? A. Yes, that is the basic document of the program.

Q. That constitution is distributed widely among the membership? A. Yes, it is distributed widely among the membership and it is also distributed to non-members of the Communist Party.

14900 Q. Tell us about the national board, how the number of its membership was determined and what its 14901 functions were, and how it was elected. A. Yes. By the way, I should mention that the constitution prescribes that the National Committee shall meet at least four times a year. The 1945 convention of the Communist Party elected a national committee of some 55 members and these were from all over the country. This created a great problem of how to conduct the work of the party in between meetings of the national committee. It was not practicable for 55 members of the National Committee to come together every week to conduct the every-day affairs of the Communist Party. So a national board was elected by the National Committee consisting pretty much of resident members of the National Committee, resident in New York, which was the headquarters, national headquarters, of the Communist Party.

The National Board was elected by a meeting of the National Committee that took place after 1945. At the 1948 convention, due to the fact that the size of the national committee was reduced sharply from 55 to 13, there was no provision for the election of a national board, and this new national committee met much more regularly than national committees in the past.

Q. How was this board elected at that time? A. By the National Committee of the Communist Party, by a majority vote.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

14927 Q. Will you state what this term or what understanding of this term democratic centralism you and your associates in the Communist Party had? A. Democratic centralism is that principle which governs the party organization and function. Democratic centralism means, first of all, the broadest democracy in the operation and functioning of the party. The constitution of the Communist Party of the United States lays down a number of principles to fulfill this concept of the broadest democracy, and that every member of the Communist Party not only has the right but the duty to participate and discuss the formulation of all party policies and programs.

All policies of the party are democratically arrived at. And I might say that the functioning of the Communist Party, its procedure at conventions, and so on, is a million times more democratic than the way the Republican and Democratic Parties function in this country.

14928 The Witness: The centralism part of the concept has to do with, once the policies of the party are formulated, democratically, in the manner that I have described, by majority votes at conventions and so on, with delegates democratically elected, that once party policy or decisions are made by majority vote, then each and every member is obligated to carry out that decision as long as it remains in force, or until that decision is changed. This is our position because ours is a serious political party. We are not just a discussion organization or just a talking shop. We are a party that is interested in bringing about an improvement in the welfare of the American people, and in finally achieving socialism. Therefore, after the broadest operation of democracy, we finally decide upon policies, and then we proceed to carry out those policies as effectively as we can. That is why we have this principle of 14929 centralism; that once policies are decided upon by a majority vote, that all members are obligated to carry out that policy.

* * * * * * * * * *

14969 Q. Now, Mr. Gates, at any time since January 1946, when you took office as a member of the National Committee, has the Communist Party been affiliated with any other organization? A. It has not.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. It has not.

14970 Q. Has the Communist International been in existence at any time since the date that you took office on the National Committee? A. It was not in existence at anytime during that period.

Q. Do you know of an organization known as the Communist Information Bureau? A. I do know of such an organization.

Q. Is the Communist Party affiliated with that organization? A. The Communist Party of the United States is not affiliated to the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. Does the Communist Party pay any of its money, dues money or any other money, to the Communist Information Bureau? A. Well, we have never contributed so much as one cent to the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. Does the Communist Party pay or contribute any funds or give any financial assistance, direct or indirect, in any manner, shape or form to the Communist Information Bureau? A. None whatsoever.

Q. When and how did you first learn of the organization of the Communist Information Bureau? A. From 14971 Capitalist newspapers, reading it in the New York papers, the Times and Tribune and Daily News and so on, at the time that this was formed.

Q. Can you tell us approximately when that was? A. I believe it was some time in 1947 but I can't place the date more closely than that.

Q. After you learned through the New York papers, was there any discussion of this organization, that is, the Communist Information Bureau, was there any discussion of that organization in the National Board of the Communist Party of the United States? A. There took place some informal discussion, based on the reports that had appeared in the capitalist newspapers. But we withheld any official or formal discussion until such time as we were able to see the official documents of that event, the formation of the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. When you say official document, specifically what do you mean by that? A. I mean the reports that were made at that founding conference and the resolutions that were passed at that founding conference.

Q. Contained in what? A. They were contained in various publications that were published in Europe, and when those publications arrived in this country they were 14972 translated and made available to us.

Q. These were publications published for the public consumption, is that right? A. These were Communist Party publications in Europe, openly published. It is the same as our Political Affairs is published here in the United States.

Q. And that is what you meant by official documents when you said you waited to see the official documents?

14973 THE WITNESS:

. . . . . .

When I said official documents what I meant was the reports which appeared in the capitalist press we did not consider to be authentic. They were just excerpts and were not complete. We didn't know whether they were garbled or not. We wanted to see the actual speeches, the actual text of the speeches, and so on, that were made there. That is what I meant by official documents. Official of the Communist Information Bureau. That is what I meant.

14974 By Mr. Marcantonio:

Q. After you received the publications, the Communist publications, which officially reported the news of the organization of the Communist Information Bureau, did the National Board have any further discussion? A. Yes, we did.

Q. What was the result of that discussion? A. The result of that discussion was the issuing of a statement signed by Mr. Foster, the Chairman of our party, and Mr. Dennis, the General Secretary of our Party, as to our position on the formation of the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 368, in evidence, which is an article entitled "United States Communists decided not to join nine-party body," contained on page 2 of the Daily Worker of New York, Monday, November 3, 1947, and I ask you if that is the statement that you referred to when you said that the National Board voted and issued a statement. A. Well, what this is, it is a news story reporting the action taken by the Communist Party, and in the course of the news story it then gives the text of the statement of the Communist Party.

Q. I ask you to look at that text, and I ask if that is the accurate text of the statement issued by the Com-14975 munist Party. A. It is, but there appears to be a typographical error in the paper which I regret, having been the editor of the paper at the time. But it is the statement, outside from that typographical error.

Q. Now, was that policy set forth in that statement carried out by the Communist Party? A. Yes.

Q. Has there ever been any change in that policy? A. No, there has not been.

Q. Did any representative of the Communist Party attend the meeting of the Communist Information Bureau referred to in Exhibit 368? A. You mean of the Communist Party of the United States?

Q. That is right. A. There was no representative of the Communist Party of the United States there attending any meeting.

Q. Has any representative of the Communist Party attended any subsequent meeting of the Communist Information Bureau? A. No.

Q. So that we will have the record clarified, when I say Communist Party, I mean Communist Party of the United States. I will try to say Communist Party of the 14976 United States but sometimes I inadvertently leave it out. So when I say Communist Party I mean Communist Party of the United States. Has any representative of the Communist Information Bureau visited the United States? A. I don't know whether any representative has ever visited the United States. I know that no representative has ever visited the Communist Party of the United States. That I know.

Q. Has the Communist Party received any written or oral directives or instructions from the Communist Information Bureau? A. We have never received any directives or instructions from the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. Has the Communist Party of the United States received any written or oral directives or instructions from any representative of the Communist Information Bureau? A. We have not.

Q. Has the Communist Party of the United States received any written Communications of any kind from the Communist Information Bureau? A. We have not.

Q. When you say "We have not," you are talking, of course, of up until the date you went to prison, is that right? A. Yes, I am talking about the entire period that I was a member of the National Committee until the 14977 time I went to prison. Of course, dating from the formation of this organization.

Q. And you are talking of the entire period during which you were in a position to have knowledge? A. That is right.

Q. Which ceased after you went to jail. You were then no longer in a position to have any knowledge, is that right? A. Aside from what I read in the newspaper I get in prison, the New York Times.

Q. Now, has the Communist Party received any written communication of any kind from the Communist Information Bureau? A. No.

Q. Prior to your imprisonment, did you read "Lasting Peace"? A. I did.

Q. Did you read it regularly? A. As regularly as I could. I may have missed some issues.

Q. Did Lasting Peace contain any directive or information to the Communist Party of the United States, instruction, rather, directive or instruction to the Communist Party of the United States? A. I never read any 14978 issues of Lasting Peace in which I saw any instructions or directives to the Communist Party of the United States, and the National Committee of the Party, during this period I am speaking of, never understood that it was receiving any such instructions or directives from Lasting Peace.

Q. Now, did you or your fellow associates, fellow members, of the National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States consider any of the contents of Lasting Peace as constituting a directive to the Communist Party of the United States? A. We did not.

Q. What was your purpose in reading Lasting Peace? A. My purpose was to gain information on world affairs. First of all as editor of the Daily Worker, I naturally was greatly interested in what was going on in the world, and was very desirous of gaining as broad a knowledge and as wide information as possible, and I considered many of the things that appeared in Lasting Peace very informed articles on the state of affairs in the various countries of the world, and very valuable to my own information and knowledge.

Furthermore, I was interested as a member of the National committee of the Communist Party in the affairs of other Communist Parties of the world. This news-14979 paper, Lasting Peace, served as a medium for the publication of information as to what was going on within various communist parties throughout the world.

Q. What is the source of your knowledge of policies and activities of the Communist Information Bureau? A. The source of my knowledge is entirely from this newspaper, Lasting Peace, which publishes news about the Communist Information Bureau, and Communist parties throughout the world.

Q. Did you receive any information with respect to the Communist Information Bureau through any other press? A. Well, something may appear in a capitalist press. This newspaper, Lasting Peace, is publishing in Bucharest. During the years that we are speaking of there were reporters for capitalist newspapers in Bucharest. When this paper would come out on the streets they would get a scoop on the Daily Worker. They would get news of this before we would get copies of the Lasting Peace in New York. They would sometimes print excerpts in their newspapers in New York. So sometimes we would sort of get advance notice in the capitalist press as to what was to come in Lasting Peace when it finally arrived in the United States. Lasting Peace arrived in the United States sometimes several weeks after it was published, in fact sometimes several months, 14980 because they were often held up by some authorities, I don't know whom, the customs office, and their distribution in the United States was delayed for a considerable time.

Q. What is the source of your knowledge of the structure and methods of functioning of the Communist Information Bureau? A. Solely from what the Communist Information Bureau publishes and states itself in its newspaper Lasting Peace.

Q. Since you assumed your duties as a member of the National Committee, has the Communist Party of the United States received any directive or instructions from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union? A. We have never received any directives or instructions from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

Q. Or from any representative of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union? A. Nor from any representative of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union.

Q. Or from any official of the Soviet Union? A. Nor from any official of the Soviet Union government.

Q. Or from the Communist Party of any other country? A. We have never received any instructions or directives during this period which you are asking me about from a representative of the Communist Party of any other country.

Q. Or from a representative—I asked you before 14981 —from the Communist Party of any other country, or from the representative of the Communist Party of any other country? A. Neither from the Communist Party of any other country or from the representative of the Communist Party of any other country.

Q. Since you assumed office as a member of the National Committee in 1946, January, has there been a representative of the Communist International in the United States? A. There has not been because the Communist International has not been in existence during that period.

Q. And since that date, that is, when you assumed office in the National Committee, has there been any person in the United States who was the equivalent or acted as a representative of the Communist International? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know Gerhard Eisler? A. I know him, yes.

Q. When and where did you first meet him? A. I met Mr. Eisler for the first time some time in 1946, after I returned from the Army. I believe it was in early 1946 that I met him for the first time. I met him in the Borough of Queens

New York. He happened to live just a few blocks away from where I lived in Queens New York City. He asked to see me and I met him at his house, I believe, and we had 14982 a conversation there. What it was was that he learned that I had returned from the Army and that I had been stationed in Germany. Since he was expecting to return to Germany shortly he was very anxious to hear any news of what I had seen and what was going on in Germany.

Well, I wasn't able to tell him too much about that, but we had a little chat about Germany and what I had seen as a member of the Army in Germany, and that was the end of the conversation.

Q. Did you meet him on any other occasions? A. I met him on several other occasions since then. I once spoke at a meeting in Philadelphia, a public meeting, on the same platform with Mr. Eisler. During the trial at Foley Square, under which I was convicted, I think he visited the trial there one day and was in the audience, and I spoke to him for a moment in the corridor there in the courthouse. I believe I saw him at a reception once, a public reception, given in a hotel, for the Communist leaders who were under indictment under the Smith Act.

As a matter of fact, I think he was one of the speakers at that reception.

Those are the only occasions I have seen him except there may have been other public meetings or gatherings of this type where we may have just passed each other and said hello or something like that.

14983 Q. Did Eisler ever give you any directive or instruction with reference to the conduct of the affairs of the Daily Worker? A. He never did.

Q. Did he ever give you any directive or instruction with reference to the policies, or the affairs of the Communist Party of the United States? A. He did not.

Q. And did he ever give you any directives or instructions with reference to the activities of the Communist Party of the United States? A. He never gave me any instructions or directives whatsoever.

Q. Did Eisler, in your presence, give any other member of the Communist Party any directive or instructions with reference to the policies and activities of the Communist Party of the United States? A. He did not.

Q. Did Eisler ever state in your presence that he was a representative of the Communist International? A. He did not.

Q. Or that he was the equivalent of a representative of the Communist International? A. He did not.

Q. Or that he was functioning as such? A. He 14984 did not.

Q. Did any of your associates, members of the Communist Party, and members of the National Committee, ever state, in your presence—or national board, for that matter—ever state in your presence that Eisler was a Communist International representative? A. No.

Q. Or that he was the equivalent of a Communist International representative or functioning as such? A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear that statement made by anyone in the Communist Party? A. No.

* * * * * * * * * * *

14988 Q. Now, since you assumed your duties as a member of the National Committee, how have the funds of the Communist Party been obtained? A. The funds of the Communist Party have been obtained entirely from the collection of dues on the part of the members, from the members of the Communist Party. That is prescribed in the constitution. And from donations from the party members as well as soliciting donations from the public in general. We held annual collection campaigns for the collection of funds to finance our activities. From the sale of literature, although that was primarily an expense rather than an income, but income would come in on it. These were all of the methods that we had of obtaining finances in the Communist Party of the United States.

Q. Did you or the Party obtain any money from any sources outside of the United States?

MR. PAISLEY: To his knowledge.

MR. MARCANTONIO: I beg your pardon.

MR. PAISLEY: To his knowledge.

MR. MARCANTONIO: Naturally, to his knowledge. It couldn't be anything outside of his knowledge.

MR. BROWN: Let's proceed. To your knowledge, Mr. Gates.

THE WITNESS: To my knowledge as a member of 14989 the Communist Party during that period, we received no moneys, no funds from outside of the United States of America.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Since you became editor of the Daily Worker in 1947, how has it been financed? A. The Daily Worker financed itself entirely through the sale of the paper, the sale of subscriptions to the paper, and through donations from the readers of the paper in the United States.

Q. What was the annual budget of the Daily Worker? A. Well, in the years that I was editor, the annual expenditures of the Daily Worker were on the average of—this includes Sunday Worker, the Daily and Sunday Worker—the annual expenditures were roughly three quarters of a million dollars, $750,000.

Q. Before we go further with reference to the finance of the Daily Worker, I just want to make certain of one matter. I have asked you with respect to the Daily Worker, I now ask you with respect to the Sunday Worker. How was that financed, first? Answer that question. A. In exactly the same way as the Daily Worker is financed.

Q. And second, did the Sunday Worker receive any funds from any sources outside of the United States? A. No.
14990 Q. And the same question with respect to the Daily Worker, did it receive any funds from sources outside of the United States? A. Well, there may have been a subscriber in Europe who bought a subscription, and in that sense contributed the cost of that subscription.

Q. I mean outside of a subscriber or a subscription. I mean any other sources outside of the United States. A. No.

Q. That goes for both the Daily and Sunday Worker? A. Yes.

15010 Q. Were there any discussions within the National Committee with reference to the size of the club? A. During this period yes, many discussions.

Q. What was said in these discussions? A. Well, 15011 there was a running discussion with pros and cons with respect to the size of the clubs. By the way, I would like to interpolate that as long as I have been in the party, since 1933, there has been this running discussion as to what should be the size of the clubs of the Communist Party. Now, discussion was as follows: That is, that there was one group that was in favor of continuing the clubs at a size of 25, and the arguments in favor of this was that the larger the clubs of the party the more attractive they would be for members of the party as well as for potential members of the party. That is, when you have a larger number in a club you could have a better social life, more active educational life, the club would be stronger, be able to do more things than a smaller club would be able to do.

These were the main reasons why larger clubs were favored in this discussion. This was the argument that has been put forward over the years, as well.

On the other hand, the arguments against this were that when you have a large club of the Communist Party, 25 or larger, and in the history of the party there have been clubs of the party that had as many as a hundred members or more, that it is difficult for the leadership of that club, large club, to keep in touch with all of the members, and as a result of which many of the members are inactive and the leadership loses touch with them, and you don't have 15012 the maximum activity of the membership of the Communist Party that we are interested in. We are interested in bringing about a one hundred per cent activity on the part of the membership of the Communist Party. However, we have never attained that ideal, and I don't know whether it has been attained since I have gone to jail but that is the ideal that we have been working for.

An additional factor that began to play an increasing part in our discussions during this period now that I am discussing was the fact that a severe period of repression had set in for members of the Communist Party. This created a serious problem and created a serious situation among the rank and file membership of our party, and many questions were being raised by the members of the party as to what to do about this situation. We were forced to deal with this and take whatever necessary measures were needed. It was said in the discussion that many Communists were being deprived of their constitutional rights of freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of thought, and that there was a whole series of measures instituted by government which jeopardized the means of livelihood of Communists as well as the personal safety and freedom of Communists. Among these measures were the Truman loyalty probe and purge as a result of which Communists, for mere membership in the Communist Party, and for no deeds or acts of any kind, 15013 were disqualified from working for the government, a whole series of measures that were taken in many states depriving Communists who were teachers of the right to be teachers in the public school system of the country for the mere fact of membership in the Communist Party, and not for any of their teachings in those schools; the fact that the Taft-Hartley law had been passed and interfered with the right of Communists within the unions to be elected freely by their membership to office in those unions under penalty of losing collective bargaining rights with the National Labor Relations Board; the fact that in many plants, many factories, of the nation, workers were fired for mere membership in the Communist Party. All of these various things that had happened, then climaxed by the announcement of Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach of the intention of the Government to outlaw the Communist Party and then finally the indictment of the 11 Communist leaders under the Smith Act, their conviction, and its being upheld by the Supreme Court and the passage of the McCarran Act and its application with the ordering of the hearing in the case of the Communist Party.

Now, particularly following the conviction of the Communist leaders under the Smith Act and its being upheld by the Supreme Court, and the following statement that was made by an Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Whearty—

MR. ABT: Will you spell that?

15014 THE WITNESS: W-h-e-a-r-t-y. —before a congressional committee to the effect that the Department of Justice was ready once the Supreme Court had upheld the conviction of the 11 Communist leaders at Foley Square, to proceed against 12,000 members of the Communist Party.

Following especially these events and the passage of the McCarran Act, we were confronted with the situation in the Party with many questions of fears on the part of the rank and file that it was necessary to take the measures to protect the Constitutional rights of members of the Communist Party.

We discussed this and we said this would be entirely unnecessary, any measures of this kind to protect our members, if it were not for the fact that the members of the Communist Party were being illegally deprived of the Constitutional rights that all other Americans enjoyed. We therefore then decided to take a number of measures to bring about the protection of the lives, the safety and the means of livelihood of these members of the Communist Party.

Now, these measures that I will enumerate that we took had nothing whatsoever to do with concealing the views or the program of the Communist Party. As a matter of fact, it was because we wanted to be able to continue to reveal the views and policies and program of the Communist 15015 Party to the American people that we were determined to protect our members in their constitutional rights. We said in this discussion that the American history bore out this stand on the part of the Communist Party, that all of the great democratic and revolutionary movements in American history were forced at one time or another to resort to methods of secrecy as a result of repressive measures, repressive laws that were in operation against them, and that in all cases in past American history where these methods of secrecy were necessary, that they were not for the purpose of concealing the program of these movements but were for the purpose of protecting the people involved in these movements from the deprivation of their legal, constitutional, democratic rights.

In taking this stand about American history we referred to a number of events, we referred to the fact that the early American revolutionists in their struggle against the British Empire were forced to resort to methods of secrecy, the committees of correspondence. The very Boston Tea Party was composed of men who were forced to disguise themselves as one hundred per cent Americans. And, of course, the revolution itself.

The movement against the British Empire which was then in power in the United States in many respects, of course, had to be secret.

15016 Then, following this situation there was the situation that arose at the time of the alien sedition acts in 1798. In this particular situation the Jeffersonians at that time were driven largely underground. They were denounced as agents of a foreign power, as agents of revolutionary France, because of their opposition to those in America, to those who were then in control of the Government, who wished to declare war against revolutionary France. The stand of the Jeffersonians was that such a war was not in the interests of the American people and they opposed such a war.

15017 THE WITNESS: The Jeffersonians were forced as a result of the alien sedition acts, as a result of which many of their leaders were put in prison, to organize secret clubs, political clubs. Well, finally, as we know, Jefferson was elected and the alien sedition acts were nullified.

15018 We further mentioned the case of the abolitionist movement prior to the Civil War. They certainly organized secretly and, as a matter of fact, their main operation was called the underground railroad, and was the only means that they would have of facilitating the passage of fugitive slaves from slavery to freedom, although this was against the law at that time. And we said that history has now given its judgment as to who were the real lawbreakers of that period, the abolitionists, who were helping to create the situation of freedom, or those who passed such laws as the fugitive slave law, who propounded the Dread Scott decision and so on.

Then there was the very important historical antecedent of the trade union movement, which, in its beginning in the United States of America, had to organize entirely as secret organizations. They were declared conspiracies in the early days, conspiracies against the Government of the United States, by various judicial decisions and laws. After many decades of struggle, these trade unions won their rights. But even up until modern times and even up until the present time, the unions still have not won their full legal rights of organization.

I have already testified the other day about a period when the big industries of this country like the steel industry were unorganized, were open shop, and not until the 15019 coming of the CIO in 1935 and thereafter did these unions win legal recognition.

This situation continues in this country even now in certain areas of the South where workers remain unorganized and are forced to operate secretly in many instances in order to prevent their being blacklisted. These were all examples that we based ourselves on to show that all of the democratic and progressive movements of the past in our country had to go through this process because of illegal and unconstitutional and undemocratic obstacles that were put in their path, and that there was no attempt on the part of any of these to conceal from the American people their aims, their intentions and their purposes, only to protect their individual persons and to protect their constitutional rights.

We, on the basis of this thinking, therefore, decided to sharply reduce the size of the membership of the clubs of the Communist Party. We decided to reduce them so that there would be less possibility of penetration by either government or company spies, and the bringing about of either blacklisting of these members of the party who may have been working in industry or to bring about possible physical harm to the members of the party. We felt that with small organizations if, indeed, some spies of this type would penetrate into the organization, well, then, they could do 15020 the least possible damage. In a small club they would be able to finger just a few people, and they would only be able to damage just a few human beings. In a big club they would, of course, be able to do much more damage.

Then we took other measures as well, and this was to eliminate any lists of membership in the organization. In prior years we used to have membership lists, and we did away with these lists as well for fear—

By Mr. Marcantonio:

Q. Was there anything said in those discussions with respect to FBI informants that had been infiltrated into the Communist Party? A. Well, we knew very well that these informers had infiltrated into the party. We knew it very well from the testimony of many of these informers at various proceedings that took place.

It was said by these informers that they would report to the FBI as long as they were present in the ranks of the Communist Party anything that would take place in the Communist Party, even if a member of the Communist Party bought a pair of shoes they would report that to the FBI. This was testified to at Foley Square in my presence. We considered this an outrageous and immoral and undemocratic invasion, to say nothing of our constitutional rights, 15021 of our privacy as human beings, the privacy of our homes and so on, that the FBI has no business inquiring into matters of this nature and we are fully justified therefore in preventing the Government from invading our privacy in this fashion.

Q. Did there ever come a time, therefore, when the club membership was reduced to a size of no more than five? A. Yes, there did.

Q. When did this occur? A. Well, as I mentioned before, after our conviction and it was upheld by the Supreme Court, and the statement by a representative of the Department of Justice before a Congressional Committee, about the 12,000 pending prosecutions, and the passage of the McCarran Act.

Q. What action was taken and by what body, to bring about this change in the reduction of size? A. The national committee decided upon a reduction in the size of the clubs. It was decided upon the elimination of membership lists. We decided—and this took place in 1949—not to issue membership books for the time being.

Q. But prior to that time? A. Well, membership books were issued in 1948 and all of the years previous to that. In 1949 we did not issue membership books. In 1950 we did not issue membership books, and in 1951, up until the time that I went to jail in July of 1951 we had not yet issued membership books.

15022 As I said before, all of these measures were taken by us as defensive measures. We felt that we were compelled to do this, that we did it under compulsion, and that we did not wish to take measures of this sort. During all of this existence of the party that is, in the time that I have been a member of the party and during this period that I am speaking about particularly now, we have tried to achieve full legality for the Communist Party of the United States. By full legality I mean the rights equal to all other political parties in the United States. We have never quite succeeded at any period in achieving that full legality. The Communist Party of the United States has always been discriminated against to one extent or another in its entire history.

15038 Q. Are the leaders of the Communist Party subject to and do they recognize the alleged disciplinary power of the Soviet Government? A. I know of no disciplinary power of the Soviet Government over an American communist, and we recognize no such thing.

Q. Do the leaders of the Communist Party consider themselves subject to the alleged disciplinary power of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union? A. The leaders of the Communist Party of the United States?

Q. That is right. A. We recognize no such talk.

Q. Of the Communist International? A. No.

Q. And of the Communist Information Bureau? A. No.

Q. Or any agencies of the Soviet Government or of the Communist Information Bureau or the Communist Party of the Soviet Union or of the Communist International? A. No.

Q. Is there any principle or doctrine of Communism which binds the American Communists to execute the decision of foreign Communist leaders? A. There is 15039 no such principle. I know of no such decisions of foreign Communist leaders that were ever made with intent to be binding on American Communist leaders. And in any case, American Communist leaders are subject only to the discipline of the American Communist Party, subject only to the policies of the American Communist Party.

Q. And the decisions of the American Communist Party? A. And the decisions of the American Communist Party.

Q. Does the principle of democratic centralism bind all Communists in the United States to execute decisions of the so-called world communist movement? A. No: The principle of democratic centralism is as I described yesterday, and binds American Communists to carry out only those decisions which have been democratically arrived at by the Communist Party of the United States.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15042 Q. Now I am going to ask you a question which has been asked here by the Petitioner repeatedly. To your knowledge, has the Communist Party ever knowingly deviated from the views and policies of the Government and Communist Party of the Soviet Union?

* * * * * * * * * * *

15043 THE WITNESS: The central and chief aim, purpose, policy, and the sole purpose of the Communist Party of the United States of America, is never to deviate from the true national interests of the American people. That is the standard by which we operated. That is the straight line that we try to walk, and from which we try not to deviate. If it is true, as it is, that in many instances, particularly in the case of world affairs, that the views of the Communist Party of the United States of America are similar to or identical with views of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, that only goes to show that there is no difference, no contradiction, between the national interest of the people of the United States or the national interest of the people of the Soviet Union, or, for that matter, of any other people of the world. It is our position that the national interests of all peoples on earth coincide and are identical. And, therefore, it should not be surprising that any organizations or parties of any country that base themselves on the true national interest of the 15044 peoples of their countries should come to have similar or identical views.

Now, the Communist Party of the United States of America is a completely independent, a fully autonomous organization. We formulate all of our own policies without dictation or domination or control by anyone else outside of our country. And we formulate all of those policies on the basis of a scientific approach towards world problems and domestic problems, a scientific approach which consists of the general principles of Marxism-Leninism. But these general principles of Marxism-Leninism do not constitute the program of the Communist Party of the United States of America. They are general, theoretical principles. They are general, scientific principles. But they must be applied in every situation according to time, place, and circumstances. And only that is the program of the Communist Party of the United States of America, which is the result of the application of our understanding of the scientific principles of Marxism-Leninism to the particular concrete conditions in the United States of America and in accordance with the democratic and revolutionary traditions of the United States of America.

In dealing with the scientific approach, it is not 15045 surprising that adherents of a certain science, as very often happens in the field of physical sciences, may, independently, simultaneously in various parts of the world, come to the same scientific conclusions, and that is so because science is universal. Science knows no national boundaries. The famous apple of Newton drops at the same rate of speed to the ground in the Soviet Union as it does in the United States of America.

The Communist Party of the United States of America has not always—well, let me put it this way: The views, policies of the Communist Party of the United States of America are not in many respects similar or identical to the views and policies of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union for the very simple reason that different situations exist in two countries. In the United States of America we have capitalism in power, and the Communist Party of the United States of America has developed a program for struggle against capitalism and for socialism. In the Soviet Union you have socialism already in power, and capitalism has been abolished. The problems in this respect are very different, especially with respect to domestic affairs. For example, the Communist Party of the United States has a program and policy with respect to the Taft-Hartley Law. I don't know whether the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has a program with respect to the Taft-Hartley in that country. We stand for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. The Soviet Union to my knowledge has no 15046 position on the Taft-Hartley law in their country. They long ago did away with the situation where Taft-Hartley laws were possible.

Now, in saying this, I wish also to say that the Communist Party of the United States has often agreed with the views and positions of the Soviet Union on peace. And again, this has been because of the independent analysis and independent decisions of the Communist Party of the United States, entirely formulated by itself and not as a result of any foreign domination or control. And we have agreed with these policies of the Soviet Union on peace because we have believed them to be peaceful policies, and we have believed them to be policies which are in the interest of the American people, applying our own standard, and our standard is that we are devoting all of our efforts to the cause of peace, to the cause of preventing a third world war.

We apply that yardstick to any views or positions put forward by the Soviet Union on the issue of peace and world affairs. And if we have, as we have, agreed with such views of the Soviet Union, it is because we believe that they are views in the interest of peace and therefore in the interest of the American people.

15047 I wish to state, not to repeat at length what I have already testified and on previous days, that it is our view, because the Soviet Union is a socialist country, because it is a country where capitalism and production for profits have been abolished, that there are no forces in the Soviet Union that have any interests in conducting aggressive wars against the peoples of other lands or against other nations. And, therefore, it is but natural that in a country with such an economic and political structure as in the Soviet Union, namely a socialist one, that such a country can only be interested in peace and is opposed to wars of aggression. It is therefore not surprising that we should be in agreement with such peace views.

Furthermore, we are a working class party. And just as in the United States of America the Communist Party of the United States of America always takes the side of the workers against the capitalists in the conflicts that take place daily and the struggles that take place daily between those two classes, so too on an international scale, the Communist Party of the United States takes its side on the side of labor and against capital.

To conclude on this, I wish again to emphasize what I said in the beginning, that the sole determinant of the views, the programs and the policies of the Communist Party of the United States is our understanding of, "Will it be in the interest of the majority of the American People?" That is how we judge all events that take place in the world.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15048 Q. With respect to the question of deviation, have there been times when the Communist Party of the United States has taken a position before the Communist Party of the Soviet Union has taken a similar position? A. Yes, many times. And we take a position many times on things that, to my knowledge, the Soviet Union has never taken a position on.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15049 Q. Is it a part of the teachings of the Communist Party that the Government of the United States is to be overthrown by force or violence? A. It is not.

Q. Does the Communist Party of the United States have any position with reference to the role of force and violence in the process of social change? I will withdraw that question and ask instead first: What meaning does the term historic mission of the working class as used in the preamble of the constitution mean to you and your associates in the Communist Party?

MR. ABT: Does the witness have the constitution before him?

THE WITNESS: I have.

The meaning of this term, the historic mission of the working class to us Communists, the leadership of the Communist Party of the United States, is the eventual establishment of socialism in the United States. We mean by this the following methods and means by which socialism is to be established in the country. The Communist Party of the United States of America advocates the peaceful and constitutional road to socialism. The communist party of the United States of America believes that the Constitution of the United States and its bill of rights is an instrument that is 15050 capable of being used by a majority of the people of the United States led by the working class in the achievement, ultimately, of socialism. There have been at various times Communists who have not understood, or have not agreed with this interpretation of the constitution. The National Committee of the Communist Party of the United States believes that such Communists are wrong. And we base ourselves on the American history, in particularly the controversy that went on in the ranks of the abolitionists prior to the Civil War. At that time there were two factions among the abolitionists, one of which said that the constitution of the United States was a slave document, and, therefore, that all those opposed to slavery should have nothing to do with the United States constitution, should not participate in elections, and that the north should secede from the United States and leave the South to itself. There was another group of abolitionists led by Frederick Douglas which said that although the constitution of the United States at that time had made certain compromises with slavery, that, nevertheless, in the main, the constitution was a revolutionary document, was a profoundly democratic document, was a democratic instrument, and was very capable of being used by the people of the United States for the purpose of abolishing chattel slavery. We take that lesson for the present time in the United States, that the constitution which was born in revolution, which at 15051 that time was the most democratic document in the world, to which was added the bill of rights as a result of a struggle by the people, to which was added the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments as a result of the revolutionary struggle by the American people in the Civil War, that this constitution is a framework and presents, offers, channels, democratic channels, which, if they remain open, can be used by the American people led by the working class to establish socialism eventually.

Our position is that the issue before the American people now, or in the foreseeable future is not the issue of socialism or capitalism. It is our position that the issue before the American people is peace or war, democracy or fascism. Therefore, we lend all of our efforts and our resources towards the organization of the broadest possible coalition of class forces in the United States and of parties and organizations representing those class forces, against those who are responsible for the danger of war and aggression, against those who are responsible for the danger of fascism in our country, namely against the big trusts, monopolies, the few bankers, financiers and industrialists, who own and operate the industries, economy and the government of our country.

When I say we stand for the broadest possible coalition of class forces and the organizations that represent those class forces, we mean all of those forces in America 15052 who are exploited by the big monopolies of this country, and we mean in the first place the working class, we mean the farmers, we mean the Negro people, and we mean also the middle-classes, professional classes, small and independent businessmen—all of these are oppressed and exploited by the big monopolies and leave conflicting interests with the big monopolies. We stand for the uniting of all those forces, regardless of their political beliefs, regardless of their agreement or disagreement with Communism which is not the issue today, as the only way to prevent war and fascism. And to secure the victory of this coalition that I speak of over the monopolies, we advocate the method of participation in the election process, not only once every four years, but through the building up of the economic and political organizations of the people in the course of the periods in between elections every four years, in the course of their struggles for the improvement of their economic welfare, for the preservation and extension of democratic rights, for equal rights for the Negro people and for peace.

We favor participation in the election process and to bring about the election of a government based upon this coalition of which I have been speaking, and which we also advocate shall take the form of a new people's party, an anti-monopoly party, a party that stands for peace, 15053 for democracy and for economic welfare.

Now, such a government in our view, when elected, will not be elected on a Communist Party platform, will not be a party or a coalition or government that favors socialism. It will be a government that stands for peace, democracy, and the economic well-being of the majority of the people. It will be a government that is opposed to the monopolies, and a government whose aim will be to restrict and to curb those monopolies in their warfare against the interests of the overwhelming bulk of the American people. But it is then our view, as leaders of the Communist Party that once such an anti-monopoly government is elected that the monopolists in this country will not take that lying down and will not gracefully move over and accede to the wishes of the majority of the electorate.

By Mr. Marcantonio:

Q. Now, Mr. Gates, in answer to my question, is it a part of the teaching of the Communist Party that the government of the United States should be overthrown by force and violence, you answered no. Now I ask you this question: Does the Communist Party of the United States have any position with reference to the role of force and violence in the process of social change? A. Well, this is what I was—

Q. I know you were, and I wanted to interrupt you 15054 there so as to put that question in its proper place.

A. Basing ourselves upon past history, particularly upon the lessons of the American Civil War, and also upon the lessons of the Spanish Civil War of 1936 to 1938, and basing ourselves also upon the long, bloody history of the monopolies in this country, such as the violent thrusts against the workers, in the big trustified industries, it is the position of the Communist Party that the monopolists, the rich, the propertied, will resort to any means to preserve their power, and to preserve their profits, including the means of violence, to thwart the will of the American people, to prevent that will from being executed, or, failing this and such an anti-monopoly government being elected, as I said, to then use violence to bring about the overthrow of such a people's government.

Now, I said that we based this understanding upon American history. The Civil War—that was a war in which the people did elect a people's president, Abraham Lincoln, and this represented a big change in political power in the United States, transferred the political power from the slave owners to the young and growing capitalist class in the north. And the program of the Lincoln Government when it was elected in 1860, or platform of the Republican Party, was not at that time a revolutionary platform. The platform of the Republican Party in 1860 was 15055 against the extension of slavery to the territories and to other states from the ones in which they were then operating. The Republican platform at that time did not include the revolutionary provision of the abolition of chattel slavery which the Abolitionists were very much in favor of. At that time, the abolitionists, including the Communists of that day, were bitterly critical of the Republican Party and Abraham Lincoln for not being in favor of the abolition of slavery in 1860 although nevertheless they supported Abraham Lincoln, despite this criticism. Then what happened, as everybody knows, the armed rebellion of the slave owners—

* * * * * * * * * * *

15061 THE WITNESS: Well, I was interrupted at the very moment when I was coming to the force and violence. That is that force and violence did take place in the Civil War and it was on the part of the slave owners against the legally elected government of the United States. That is the first important lesson for us American Communists in the position that we put forward now with respect to what road the American people should take towards socialism. The second lesson of that Civil War was that this Lincoln government which had been elected on a reform basis, and not on a revolutionary basis, and which was opposed to the revolutionary method in 1860, prior to the Civil War, was forced by historic necessity, by military necessity, in the course of the Civil War, to take revolutionary measures and to become a revolutionary government through the emancipation proclamation and the abolition of chattel slavery in the United States of America. Now, our Communist Party applies that to the present period in this way: That, as I said, we favor the election of this peace government which is not a Communist Government, as Mr. Paisley stated, and I did not testify that, I said
15062 exactly the opposite—that it was not a government dedicated to socialism but was a coalition government with a program, a limited program, of opposition to fascism and to war, and it was for curbing the monopolies and not yet for abolishing capitalism, that we favored the election of such a government just as such a government was elected in the Civil War by the people, on a reform program and not on a revolutionary program.

But it is then the position of our party that to that extent that this new peace government and anti-monopoly government that has just been elected by the American people proceeds to put into effect these measures against the monopolies to curb the unrestricted profiteering of these monopolies in the interest of the people, to curb their pro-war and pro-fascist activities, that these monopolists will begin to resist and to resist with all means up to and including violence, just as the overthrown slave owners did in the Civil War.

But it will be violence by these monopolists against the legally elected government of the United States of America. And it is the position of the Communist Party with respect to this that we would warn this new government that unless it took measures to anticipate this possible violence on the part of the monopolists that these monopolists would organize an armed rebellion against the government just as has happened so many times in history, it happened 15063 in our Civil War, it happened in the Spanish Civil War as I have already testified.

The measures that we would advocate in warning this government would be that they should remove in the armed forces, from the leadership of all the armed forces, all of those generals and admirals and so on who are sympathetic to and agents of the monopolists, and to replace them with officers who are sympathetic to the cause of the common people.

And the same thing would go for the police force. So that it would not be possible for these monopolists to use the positions that they have in the armed forces, that they have built up over so many decades, against a legally elected government of the United States. We said that in the Civil War, in the United States, that most of the regular army of the United States Government went over to the side of the slave owners, and that in the Civil War in Spain most of the regular army went over to the side of Franco and Hitler and Mussolini, and against the legally elected government.

It is because the Spanish people's government didn't take the advice of the Spanish Communist Party, didn't clean the General Francos out of the Spanish army that he was successful in organizing a rebellion against this legally elected government. And it was our position that just as our 15064 Civil War reform government of Lincoln was forced by necessity, and finally military necessity, to take revolutionary measures, just so this peace government which we advocate the election of will be forced by necessity to take revolutionary measures in order to prevent the monopolists from trying to overthrow this peacefully elected government by force and violence.

Now, we do not predict, nor do we try to spell out in every detail the course of events with respect to the actual establishment of socialism in the United States. No one can do that, and we don't try to blueprint that. All we can do is to lay down the path that we want the American people to follow. The path that we think is the most peaceful path. The path that we think will be at the least cost to the overwhelming majority of the American people. And that path is the one that I have outlined, the path of taking the peaceful and the constitutional road towards election of a peace government, and then urging that peace government to take additional measures to thwart any attempt at armed rebellion against a legally elected government by the monopolists of this country.

Now, we state with respect to this, that this is in no way contradictory to Marxist-Leninist principles. We state that this is in no way contradictory to the principle of dictatorship of the proletariat according to which the bour-15065 geoise state must be shattered to make way for the new worker state.

It is no contradiction because in the course of the struggle of this peace government, this legally elected peace government, against the resistance of the monopolies and the attempts of the monopolies to organize an armed rebellion against this government, that the bourgeoise state in the course of this will be shattered in the sense of the principles of the dictatorship of the proletariat. When I say that we will advocate that this government take measures to remove from the leadership of the armed forces these agents of monopoly and replace them with agents of the working class, to place in the leadership of the police forces men who are sympathetic to the people and not to the rich, that is this shattering of the bourgeoise state. It is our position that this can be done peacefully by the legally elected government in the course of events. The only violence that will or can arise will come from the efforts of a small clique, and I do not include, as Mr. Paisley said, among the monopolies and industrialists and financiers of this country the small group whose policies run so counter to the majority of the American people, the small stockholders and small businessmen of our country, and small property owners. On the contrary, it is these small stockholders and small businessmen and small property owners that are fleeced every day of 15066 the year by the monopolies.

15069 By Mr. Marcantonio:

Q. Mr. Gates, to whom do you owe allegiance? A. I owe allegiance to the United States of America.

Q. Have you ever taken the oath of allegiance? A. I have, many times.

Q. Will you state the occasions on which you took the oath of allegiance? A. As I have testified before, I took the oath of allegiance as a child and in school, when I was in the Color Guard at this public school that I testified to; and, of course, throughout my school career.

There was one specific instance in which I led a meeting of functionaries of the Communist Party of New York City in an oath of allegiance to the flag of the United States of America.

Q. I didn't hear the last sentence, after the words "functionaries of the Communist Party of New York City." What was that? A. I led a meeting of functionaries of the 15070 Communist Party of New York City in an oath of allegiance to the flag of the United States of America.

Q. You mean in taking the oath of allegiance? A. Yes. Well, I will describe it. This was in December of 1941, immediately after I had been sworn into the armed forces of the United States of America. I was sworn in on December 17, and the Army then gave me three or four days' leave to take care of my affairs before I would actually be inducted. And in that three or four-day period, I think it was two or three days after, I don't remember exactly the date, after December 17, a meeting took place in New York of some 2500 leaders of the Communist Party in New York City. I think it was in St. Nicholas Arena of New York City. I was introduced at that meeting as having just become a member of the United States Army. I then asked the audience to stand and to have them repeat after me, and I faced the flag, the American flag that was on the platform. I saluted the flag, and I said—and they repeated after me—"I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands; one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

And, of course, in the United States Army, I have, of course, taken various oaths as required by the regu-15071 lations of the Army.

Q. At the times you took this oath, did you have any mental reservations? A. I had no mental reservations whatsoever. Moreover, that oath of allegiance meant much more to me as a leader of the Communist Party than it did when I was a school child taking an oath of allegiance, the same oath.

Q. Now, at this time, now, do you have any mental reservations with reference to the oath of allegiance? A. None at all.

Q. What does the oath signify to you and your associates in the Communist Party? A. It signifies that we owe our primary allegiance to the people of the United States of America. We understand by the flag of the United States of America, a flag that was born in revolution, a flag that became known to the entire world as a flag of freedom, a flag that was carried by the American people in the Revolutionary and Civil War, and to us that flag represents a flag of freedom.

There have been at various times in the history of the Communist Party of the United States, Communists who have felt that the American flag had become not a flag of freedom, but a flag of oppression. These American Communists felt this way because of the fact that on various occasions the monopolists who rule our country had made use of the American flag to cover up their own greed and selfishness, and to have the flag follow the dollar, so 15072 to speak, into other lands; and the position of the leadership of the Communist Party of the United States at the present time is that those American Communists who felt that way were absolutely wrong; that the American flag belongs to the American people, and notwithstanding the fact that there are some individuals in our country who do make use of the false cloak of patriotism to mask their own loyalty and allegiance to the American dollar, that we should not surrender this glorious flag and its wonderful traditions to these traducers and betrayers of that wonderful and glorious tradition of our American flag and the American people.

We further understood by this oath of allegiance and the phrase, "one Nation, indivisible," that we do not have in our country at the present time one nation indivisible; that this is a goal still to be achieved by the American people. And we Communists work for the achievement of that goal.

Our position is that we do not have one nation indivisible, because our nation is divided into rich and poor, into mutually antagonistic classes. We do not have one nation indivisible, because a small white ruling minority oppresses the Negro people of our country. It is our position that when socialism is established in the United States of America, and classes are abolished, and all people will work for a living,

15073 and when the oppression of the Negro people is wiped out and we have a free association of peoples on the basis of full equality in the United States, that then we will truly have "one nation, indivisible."

Furthermore, we understood by the following phrases of the oath of allegiance, the phrase "liberty and justice for all," that there does not exist at the present time in our country "liberty and justice for all;" that there is one justice in our country for the rich, and another justice for the poor; that there is one law for the white people, and another law for the Negro people; that there is one law for all Americans, and another law for the Communists.

It is our stand that when, ultimately, socialism is established in the United States of America, that we will then truly have "liberty and justice for all," one law for all.

Q. Have you taken an oath of allegiance to any nation other than the United States? A. Never.

Q. Do you owe allegiance to any nation other than the United States? A. No.

Q. Have you engaged in any activities which bear on the matter of your allegiance? A. I consider that all of my activities as a Communist for the past 20 years, and everything 15074 I have said and done in the course of those 20 years, in the two wars in which I have fought, have been in allegiance to the United States of America.

I would defy anyone to find anything in my life, anything in the deeds that I have done, which has ever run contrary to the interests of the people of the United States of America.

Q. What does "patriotism" mean to you and your associates in the Communist Party? A. "Patriotism" means to us a devotion to the best and highest interests of the American people. "Patriotism" does not mean, to us, loyalty to capitalism, and to the minority in our country which rules the capitalist system.

It is our position that the interests of this small capitalist class in our country are contrary to the interests of the majority of the American people, and that true patriotism, therefore, lies in devotion and loyalty to the interests of the majority of the people, the working people, rather than to this small group of indusfrialists and bankers.

Q. During your membership on the National Committee, did any of the teachings of the Communist Party of the United States deal with the question of patriotism? A. Yes.

Q. And during that period, what did the Communist Party teach with reference to the meaning of "pa-15075 triotism"? A. We taught that we were in full agreement with the sentiments of Mark Twain, who wrote, in the "Connecticut Yankee," that loyalty to the United States of America does not mean loyalty to outworn institutions. He said that outworn institutions are like rags, like clothing that has become rags, and that loyalty to outworn institutions is like being loyal to rags. He said, rather, it is loyalty to speak out and to oppose any institutions that ever become outworn institutions, and that never serve the people; and that it is disloyal to the people not to speak out loud and clear when anyone has an opinion that such institutions have become inimical to the interests of the American people.

We taught further, in the words of Carl Schurz, who was a Senator from Missouri in the Civil War Days, and who was a member of President Lincoln's Cabinet, the statement of Carl Schurz in contrast to the statement made by Stephen Decatur. Stephen Decatur made the famous historical statement, "Our country, right or wrong." Carl Schurz said, in connection with this statement of Stephen Decatur, "Our country, right or wrong. When right, to be kept right. When wrong, to be set right." And we express full agreement with this statement of Carl Schurz.

It is our position that it is not patriotism to support any and all policies of a particular Administration of the United States Government just because it is the United 15076 States Government. If those policies are wrong, they should be opposed. If they are right, they should be supported. And we have adhered to that position.

Furthermore, it is our position on the issue of patriotism that the failure of the people of Germany to follow the precepts stated by Carl Schurz, that is, the fact that the people of Germany under Hitler did follow the slogan of "My country, right or wrong," that they obeyed Hitler because he was the head of the government, whether they thought he was right or wrong—that this led the German people to disaster, and they betrayed their own interests, to say nothing of the catastrophe that they brought upon mankind.

We say, moreover, that it had been established, and we were in full concurrence, by the Nurnberg conspiracy trial of the Nazi war aggressors, the Nazi war criminals, Goering and Hess and Kuntze, in which the United States Government was an official participant, this Nurnberg tribunal laid down the principle that it was no defense on the part of anyone who was a member of a nation whose government had conducted an aggressive and criminal war, to say that, "Well, they participated in that war because they had to obey the orders of that government." The Nurnberg trial declared the complicity and the guilt of all those who took the position that they were not to blame because they were only carrying out orders.

And we understand from this, also, that if we un-15077 derstand that a war in which our government or a particular administration might plunge our country, that if that war was an unjust war, that if that war was a criminal war, an aggressive war, that we were duty-bound, in the interests of American patriotism, as well as international law as declared by the Nurnberg tribunal—in which our United States Government participated—that we were duty-bound to oppose such war.

15083 Q. Are you familiar with the slogan or phrase, "Convert the imperialist war into civil war"? A. I am.

. . . . . .

15084 Q. During your membership on the National Committee, has the Communist Party of the United States ever advanced this slogan? A. It has not, nor has the Communist Party of the United States ever advanced the slogan in any war that the United States has participated in during the life of the Communist Party in our country.

Q. How does the Communist Party of the United States characterize the present Korean War? A. It characterizes it as an unjust and unnecessary war of intervention of Wall Street against the people of Korea.

15085 Q. Has it called for converting the Korean War into civil war? A. Never at any time.

Q. What does it advocate with reference to the Korean War? A. It advocates, has advocated and does advocate, a peaceful settlement of that war on the basis of a just and democratic peace. It advocates a cease fire around the 38th Parallel. It advocates an armistice, to be followed by the withdrawal of all foreign troops from both sides; the peaceful settlement and unification of Korea by the people of Korea themselves, without interference from outside; the return of Formosa to China; the recognition of China by the United States; and the entrance of China, the admission of China, into the United Nations, on the Security Council.

. . . . . .

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Mr. Gates, you testified you were one of the defendants in the case of the United States versus Dennis and others, that you are now serving your sentence of five years, is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. You and the other defendants in that case were convicted of conspiring to teach and advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

. . . . . .

15124 Q. That in substance was the charge? A. The substance of the charge was merely our thoughts and ideas, that is correct. No overt acts.

Q. Weren't you charged with conspiring to teach and advocate the overthrow of this government by force and violence? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the other defendants in that case were all members of your National Committee, were they not? A. All of the defendants were members of the National Committee, that is right.

15130 Q. And you say at college you learned that the capitalist system was destined to be superseded by a higher form of society, socialism, and that has actually taken place in one country on the face of the earth, is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, that country, of course, is Russia, Soviet Russia, right? A. It is the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, yes.

Q. Now, you Communists claim that they have socialism in Russia now? A. Yes.

Q. And that Communism has not yet even been attained there? A. No.

. . . . . .

15137 Q. Now, Mr. Gates, you will admit, will you not, that there is a world Communist movement? A. Well,

I won't admit it just like that, in terms that you understand the world Communist movement, or in the terms that the world Communist movement is stated in the allegations of your petition. I don't admit there is any such kind of world Communist movement.

Q. Do you admit that there is a world Communist movement of any kind? A. Yes, I do.

Q. You have written that many times in your own writings in Political Affairs, have you not? A. Of course.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15156 Q. There is no doubt, Mr. Gates, about your joining the Communist Party in Youngstown in 1933, is there? A. No.

Q. Didn't you tell the Senate Judiciary Committee on May 28, 1948, that you joined the Communist Party in 1941? A. I said nothing of the kind. There is a misprint in that Senate Judiciary Committee meeting. It wasn't the only misprint in that testimony. It is ridiculous.

Q. Had you noticed that before? A. I never noticed it until it was brought to my attention at Foley Square when I testified at Foley Square, and I made the correction at that time, as I am doing again now.

Q. You did see it in the Senate reports? Did you see that answer, 1941? A. When it was brought to my attention at the Foley Square testimony.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15160 Q. And you left Youngstown in January, 1937, and volunteered as a member of the International Brigade in Spain? A. I volunteered to fight in Spain, yes.

Q. And you had no training as a soldier? A. None whatsoever.

Q. And you say you fired three rounds of ammunition during the time you were there? A. In my period of training, before I went into combat, yes.

Q. Did you fire any ammunition in combat? A. Yes.

Q. Well, that three rounds of ammunition, you meant to restrict that to training, before combat? A. That is what I testified in answer to a question asked me by Miss McHale.

Q. And you became the top ranking officer of all Americans in Spain? A. That is right.

Q. How many Americans were over there? A. Some 3,000 Americans volunteered to fight in Spain.

15161 Q. You were in charge of instruction and training? A. With respect to those Americans. I was in charge of military instruction and training, and I was in charge of political instruction and training in the program of the Spanish Republican Government.

Q. You say the Communist Party in the United States did not send you over there? A. It did not. I volunteered to go over there of my own free will.

Q. But they approved of you going; applauded your going? A. They were very proud of the fact that I went.

Q. And you got your passport in the name of Israel Regenstreif? A. I got my passport in the name that was on my birth certificate, yes, sir.

Q. It did not list Spain as a place to be visited? A. I did not.

Q. Did you swear to this passport? A. I did.

* * * * * * * * * *

15162 Q. And you were willing to make a false oath on this passport in order to go over there and fight this rising Fascism in the world? A. I did make some false statements on that passport.

Q. Well, that is why you were doing it, wasn't it? Isn't that what embued you, this desire to fight Fascism? A. I have already testified several times why I went to Spain, and if you want me to I will testify again.

Q. Now, you regard the McCarran Act as a Fascist Act, don't you? A. I certainly do.

Q. Well, wouldn't you give false testimony in this proceeding under the McCarran Act if it would further the fight on Fascism? A. No, I would not, because it is not necessary.

Q. But you did in this other instance? A. What I did in Spain in connection with my going to Spain, I am proud of.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15167 Q. Weren't you fighting for Communism in Spain? A. No, I wasn't fighting for communism. I was fighting in defense of the Spanish Republican government.

Q. But you admit you were fighting for it in this country? A. Mr. Paisley, everything that I have done, everything that I do in defense of democratic rights, in defense of the economic welfare of the American people, in the defense of peace, is all ultimately in the interests of my ultimate objective of the establishment of socialism; yes.

Q. Isn't socialism a step toward Communism. A. It is the first stage toward Communism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15170 Q. There are not many people in this communist group who are quite as well educated in it as you are, are there, Mr. Gates? A. You flatter me.

Q. That is right, isn't it, without flattering you or not? A. So what. What is your point? Get to the point.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15181 Q. Well, you were Editor of the Daily Worker when you were on the National Committee of the Communist Party and Chairman of its National Legislative Committee, weren't you? A. That is right.

Q. And you say you are still Editor? A. So far as I know.

Q. And you were Editor even after you were made Chairman of the National Review Commission? A. I have been Editor from July 1947 up until the present time.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15183 Q. Mr. Gates, I show you the Daily Worker for Monday, April 23, 1951, being Petitioner's Exhibit

No. 14. I ask you to look at it. (Document handed to witness.) A. To look at the article, "It Must Be Stopped Now"?

Q. Yes. You were Editor of the Daily Worker at that time, were you? A. Yes.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Did you approve its publication in the paper? A. Well, as Editor of the paper, I am responsible for everything that appears in the paper. I don't necessarily approve every single line or every article that appears, but I am responsible, as Editor, for everything that appears in the paper, yes.

Q. Did you know that that particular advertisement was going to be there? A. I believe so.

Q. What? A. I believe so.

15184 Q. That was the day that the hearings in this case commenced before this Panel, was it not? A. Well, you are a better judge of that than I am. I don't recall. I will take your word for it.

Q. Did you regard that as a day in infamy, and that this was a fake hearing? A. I certainly do and did.

Q. You did and you do? A. That is correct. I think this is a farce.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15189 Q. Physically, where are they, do you know? A. Mr. Paisley, if you are looking for stoolpigeon testimony, you ought to apply to J. Edgar Hoover. He is the keeper of the rats.

Q. Do you know where they are? A. If I knew, I wouldn't tell you in a million years.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15233 Q. Well, they have an organization they call the Cominform, don't they? A. There is an organization that is called the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. And it is a part of this world Communist movement, is it not? A. In the sense that I have outlined, yes.

Q. The Communist International was at one time, was it not? A. The Communist International was an actual organization of the World Communist movement, and we were affiliated at one time.

* * * * * * * * * *

15239 Q. Have you ever denounced the Soviet Union in your life? A. Well, I can't recall whether I might have before I joined the Communist movement.

Q. Well, since you joined the Communist movement? A. I certainly have not, because I think in my experience during that period everything that the Soviet Union has done has been for the best interests of its own people and for the best interests of mankind as well.

15240 Q. Not one word denounciatory of the Soviet Union has ever appeared in the Daily Worker or Political Affairs, is that right? A. Not that I can recall, nor do I see why there should be.

* * * * * * * * * *

15259 Q. Name this Panel one instance when the Daily Worker or Political Affairs has supported the foreign policy of the United States government when it was in opposition to that of the Soviet Union? Give me one instnce. A. Well, we have supported the foreign policy of the Roosevelt Administration when it was for the friendship and collaboration of the United States and the Soviet Union. This has not been a contradiction to the views of the Soviet Union, I grant you. But why should it be? That was a policy that was in the interests of the American people.

Q. Can you give me one instance of the Daily Worker, either while you were editor or any other time, that has supported this government in opposition to Soviet Union? A. I can't think of any such instance because of the fact that it is my opinion that the Soviet Union has never put forward policies which were in any way contrary to the interests of the American people, and our sole standard for judgment in this respect is a particular policy of any government, anywhere in the world, in the interests of 15260 the people of the United States of America. If it is, we support it. If it isn't, we oppose it. That is our standard.

Q. Mr. Gates, would such a paper with such an editorial policy, be permitted if the Government which you espouse would come to power in this country? A. Well, I can only answer that the same way as I already answered it, and that is that when socialism is established in the United States of America there will be no need for the type of criticism that the Daily Worker makes at the present time of the capitalist system in the United States.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15277-A Q. Is that the same Gus Hall who was convicted with you? A. That is.

Q. He is the one who signed the answer that was filed to this Board, isn't he? A. I believe so.

Q. Well, is there any doubt in your mind about 15278 it? A. No. I just believe so.

Q. You wouldn't dispute that, would you? A. I didn't say I would dispute it.

Q. By the way, where was that answer drafted?

MR. ABT: I object, Mr. Chairman. That is immaterial, where a legal answer to a petition in this proceeding was drafted.

MR. BROWN: Overruled.

THE WITNESS: It was drafted by Mr. Gus Hall.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Did you collaborate in the drafting of the answer? A. I assisted, yes.

Q. Do you subscribe to everything that is stated in there? A. Yes.

Q. Everything that was said about this Board and the McCarran Act? A. Definitely.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

15297 Q. Are you sure that copies of For a Lasting Peace weren't received over here by you Communists before they were published? Before November 10, when the first issue came out? A. We received copies of For a Lasting Peace over here before Lasting Peace was published?

Q. Before it was issued to the public. A. Well, I don't believe in the supernatural, but if you do that may have been possible.

MR. BROWN: That is unnecessary.

THE WITNESS: I can only answer a stupid ques-15298 tion in such a way.

MR. BROWN: That is not necessary. You are here to answer the questions. Let's not have any observations or comments.

THE WITNESS: We saw no copies of For a Lasting Peace before For a Lasting Peace was published.

MR. BROWN: The question was before it was issued to the public.

THE WITNESS: That is your version. It is the reporters version, too.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

15311 Q. Has the Daily Worker or Political Affairs, or has any Communist Party leader in the United States ever denounced or criticized the Cominform or Lasting Peace? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Well, you would know about it, wouldn't you? A. I have answered not to my knowledge.

Q. Has the Communist Party in the United States or the Daily Worker or Political Affairs ever deviated from the express views and policies of the Cominform? A. Well, I will answer this question again as I have answered it in the past, and that is that we try in the Communist Party, and this is a separate question and a separate answer, and we try also in the Daily Worker, never to deviate from what we consider to be the true national interests of the American people. We judge everything in the world by that standard. And if we have not expressed any disagreement with any views that have been put forward in For a Lasting 15312 Peace, that is because we believe that those views have not been in contradiction to the interests of the American people.

Q. Well, a short answer is that you have not deviated, isn't that right? A. No, that may be a short answer but it wouldn't be a truthful answer on my part.

A. The truthful answer is the answer that I have just given.

Q. Give the Panel any instances of deviation. A. I have answered the question.

MR. BROWN: Are there any instances of deviation, Mr. Gates?

THE WITNESS: I said that deviation—

MR. BROWN: I know, but can you answer my question yes or no?

THE WITNESS: The question is a loaded question.

MR. BROWN: It is not a loaded question.

THE WITNESS: You may not think so, but I think so.

MR. BROWN: Well, I think it isn't, because it obviously is not.

THE WITNESS: After all, I am the one who is on the witness stand and not you.

MR. BROWN: And we are trying to get you to act like a witness, which you have not done. The witness is 15313 here to answer questions and not make observations.

15318 Q. And you said you did know Eisler. A. I said I first met Eisler, and met him several times afterwards, in 1946.

Q. Did you mean to tell the Panel that it was simply by chance that you met this man Eisler early in 1946, when you returned from the army just because you happened to live a few blocks from each other? Was that what you were trying to tell them? A. That is not what I testified to. What I testified to was that Mr. Eisler sent word to me that he wished to see me, if possible, in order to discuss with me my experiences in Germany while I was in Germany as a member of the United States Army. And I accepted his 15319 invitation, I accepted his invitation and since he lived only a few blocks away I visited him in his home, and we did have such a chat.

Q. And you were a member of the National Committee at that time? A. Yes.

* * * * * * * * * *

15320 Q. Did you publish any of his writings in the Daily Worker? A. I can't exactly recall whether we published—you are specifying of the time that I was editor of the Daily Worker?

Q. Yes.

15321 A. As editor I don't recall whether we actually printed articles written by him and signed by him. I know we carried news stories giving accounts of speeches that he had made at various times during this period. But it may have been that on some occasions we also printed articles by him. I am not certain of it.

Q. Where is he now? A. In Germany.

Q. What is he doing? A. He is, I believe, director of public information in the Government of East Germany, the People's Democratic Republic of Germany.

* * * * * * * * * *

15325 Q. Is it the custom in the International Communist movement for Communists in one country, when they move to another, to change their membership?

* * * * * * * * * *

A. I know of no such general custom. It has some-15326 times happened. It all depends. If a man comes here to America and becomes an American citizen and wishes to join the American Communist Party, he is eligible to do so, yes.

Q. Well, did Eisler become a member of the Communist Party of the United States? A. No to my knowledge.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Was he a Communist? A. I believe he was a member of the German Communist Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15330 Q. Is the fact that you considered the Soviet Union the leader of the world Communist movement have anything to do with it? A. The fact that we consider the Soviet Union to be the outstanding socialist country of the world, the outstanding force for peace in the world, had a great deal to do with it, yes.

Q. You frequently said that it was the leader of 15331 the world Communist movement, haven't you, Mr. Gates? A. We said it was the leader of the world Communist movement in the sense that I have explained it, and the outstanding force for peace—

Q. Let me ask a question. A. Let me answer your question first, before you ask another question.

Q. I thought you were through. A. Will the stenographer please read back to me where I was, so I can continue my answer?

(The reporter read from his notes as requested)

THE WITNESS: That is all. I have nothing further to say.

Q. Time and time and time again in your writings in the Daily Worker and Political Affairs, you have referred to the Soviet Union as the leader of the world Communist movement, haven't you? A. I have on several occasions, yes.

Q. Did the Daily Worker, to your knowledge, ever deviate in its views and policies from those of the Soviet Union?

* * * * * * * * * * *

15332 THE WITNESS: On the Daily Worker we have always tried, to the best of our ability, never to deviate from what we considered on the Daily Worker to be the true national interests of the American people. That is what we try not to deviate from. Our purpose is never to deviate from anything else. That never occurs to us. Now, whether we have agreed with policies that have been put forward by the Soviet Union from time to time, we have agreed with such policies, yes, because we have considered them to be policies, yes, because we have considered them to be policies in the interest of the American people. But the fact that this takes place within our minds and in our actions has nothing to do with the question of do we deviate from the Soviet Union or from policies of the Soviet Union. That is not our approach to the problem. We don't sit down and say well, this is what the Soviet Union says, now we have to make sure that we must not deviate from what the Soviet Union 15333 says. That is not the process that takes place in our minds. That is not the way we think, and that is not the way we formulate our policies. The way we formulate our policies is: Is something in the interests of the American people. If it is, we are for it, if it is against it, we are against it.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. Then all views and policies of the Soviet Union of which you have any knowledge are in the interests of the American people, right? A. As far as we know, and as far as I have studied them, since they are views and policies which are truly in the interests of their own people, they are also in the interests of our own people.

Q. Has the Daily Worker ever expressed any disagreement with the views and policies of the Soviet Union? A. With the views and policies of the Soviet Union that have had to do with world affairs, particularly to my knowledge we have never expressed any disagreement. On the contrary we have expressed agreement with them because we have felt them to be in the interests of the American people.

Q. And that includes all of those instances in which the views and policies of the Soviet Union are in conflict with those of this government? Right?

* * * * * * * * * * *

15334 THE WITNESS: I am sorry, you are going to have to give me concrete instances of where there are conflicts, where there have been conflicts between a particular administration in this country and views and policies of the Soviet Union. Then I will answer the question as to what our position was on those concrete bases.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. I am asking you, do you know of any instance when there was a conflict, in which the Daily Worker took the side of the United States government? A. As I said, we determine what our position is to policies of a particular administration, that is in power in the United States government, on the basis of whether we consider those policies to be in the interest of the majority of the American people or contrary to the interests of the people.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15355 Q. Did the Communist party have any policy with regard to secrecy of membership?

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE WITNESS: Our policy is that a member of the Communist Party has full authority to decide for himself as to whether or not he or she wants to keep their membership in the Communist Party secret or not secret, and that if a member of the Communist Party feels that it is necessary to keep his or her membership in the Party secret as a means of protecting him or her against illegal or on unconstitutional victimization or persecution, our policy is that they have a perfect right to do so.

By Mr. Paisley:

Q. You say that these measures that you took to meet the so-called repressive measures were not voluntary, that they were forced upon you by those people who rule this country, and government? A. Yes.

15356 A. That is correct.

Q. And it was not your choice? A. That is correct.

* * * * * * * * * *

15375 Q. Isn't it a fact that the Soviet Union is frequently and almost—well, frequently—in literature

15376 that you put out referred to as the fatherland of the world proletariat? A. I don't remember and I don't believe there has been any literature that the Communist Party of the United States has put out in the time that I have been a member of the National Committee that has stated that, although I will say that in previous years there have been occasions when that has been stated, yes.

Q. Well, that has been stated many times, has it not? A. There have been occasions when it has been stated, yes.

Q. You don't repudiate it now, do you? A. I have stated in my testimony here to which country I owe my primary allegiance, the United States of America, and I stand on that testimony.

Q. Do you regard Soviet Russia as the fatherland of the world proletariat or don't you? A. I do not regard the Soviet Union as my country and I do not owe my allegiance to the Soviet Union but to the sovereign power of the majority of the American people.

Q. Will you answer my question? A. I have answered it.

Mr. Brown: You have not answered Mr. Paisley's question, Mr. Witness.

15377 The Witness: Well, you and I, it is not the first time you and I have differed, Mr. Brown.

Mr. Brown: You are not going to lecture me, now.

The Witness: Well, don't lecture me. I have answered it.

Mr. Brown: You have not answered the question.

MR. ABT: We submit that the question has been answered, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWN: Very well, the record will so show, and the record will likewise show that the question was not answered.

THE WITNESS: I am content to rest on the record.

15384 Q. Don't you know as a fact that Earl Browder takes the position that the entire national leadership of Communism had knowledge of, consent and support of all of his policies up to 1945? A. That is Browder's position, yes.

Q. And he stated that in a series of articles answering Gil Green's attack upon him, did he not? A. He stated that in a series of articles that he wrote subsequent to his expulsion from the Communist Party of the United States of America.

Q. Did he not say during the 15 years of the Browder leadership of the Communist Party USA all major policies put into effect had the previous knowledge, consent and active support of the decisive international Communist leadership which thereby fully shared responsibility for those policies, including those of 1944 later challenged? Did he not make that statement?

15385 THE WITNESS: Browder wrote those statements or that statement and these articles that he wrote subsequent to his expulsion from the Communist Party of the United States, and I have expressly denied them in a speech that I made to the 15th National Convention of the Communist Party in 1950.

. . . . . .

15394 THE WITNESS: First of all the reference by the question to why did Stalin have over here Communist International representatives, I deny categorically that Stalin ever had over here Communist International representatives, and I have no knowledge of such.

15429 Herbert Aptheker called as a witness by the respondent herein, having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

* * * * * * * * * * *

15430 Q. Will you state your formal education? A. Well, I graduated from the public and high schools in New York, and received a Bachelor of Science at Columbia, a Master of Arts at Columbia, and a Doctor of Philosophy at Columbia.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15431 Q. In what field did you obtain your Ph.D. degree? A. The major was American History; the minor was British History.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Have you any other occupation? A. Well, I serve also as managing editor, at the moment, of Political Affairs.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Have you published any books, other than the ones you have already mentioned? A. Yes, I have.

Q. What books, and when were they published? A. In terms of books published, that is, written by me and published by others, there are, in addition to those 15439 mentioned, a book called Essays and the History of the American Negro, that appeared in 1945. Another book was called "The Negro People in America," which is a critique of Gunnar Myral's "An American Dilemma," that appeared in 1946.

In 1948, the book called "To Be Free;" and in 1951, a two-volume work, "The Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States."

Those were the books which I have written so far.

Q. Now, what pamphlets have you written? By the way, on the book entitled, "To Be Free," on what subject was that written? A. It is in the field of American Negro history.

Q. Now, so that we may have for the record, now, who were the publishers of these books? "Essays and History of the American Negro People"? A. That was published by International Publishers.

Q. And "The Negro People of America"? A. International.

Q. And "To Be Free"? A. International.

Q. And "Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States"? A. That is published by Citadel Press, in New York.

Q. Now, you will tell us what pamphlets of yours have been published, and at the same time give us the 15440 publishing house? A. The first pamphlet of mine is called "The Negro in the Civil War." That was published by International Publishers in 1938.

The next was called "Negro Slave Revolts in the United States, 1526 to 1860," the same publisher, in 1939.

That was followed by "The Negro in the American Revolution," the same publisher, in 1940.

Then appeared "The Negro and the Abolitionist Movement," the same publisher, in 1941.

I believe that the next pamphlet, a rather long one, was "Negro Casualties in the Civil War," which was published by the Associated Publishers here in Washington.

That was followed by "The Negro in the Union Navy," in 1946, I think, also Associated Publishers here in Washington.

There are one or two more. One was called "Why Defend the Rights of Communists?" That was published by New Century Publishers in 1949.

Another pamphlet was called "The Schle ıger Fraud," a critique of his "Vital Center." That was in 1950.

The last pamphlet was called "America's Racist Laws," 1951, published by Masses and Main Stream.

Q. Do you have now any books in preparation for which publications you have already contracted? A. Yes.

Q. What are they? A. One contracted for is "A 15441 History of the People of the United States." That is due next year, if I can finish it.

Q. Contracted with whom? A. It is contracted with International.

The other is another volume in the "Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States." That is contracted by Citadel.

Another is a book of essays, which is almost done. It is called "After Reconstruction," and it is contracted for with International Publishers.

There are others scheduled, but not contracted for.

Q. Those are books that you are working on but not contracted for? A. That is right.

Q. On what subjects? A. Well, I am working on a collection of my essays in the field of Marxism-Leninism generally, and in the field of current events, which I have published in various publications.

I also was asked by Dr. DuBois to edit his letters, of which there are over 100,000, and I am actively engaged in that, for publication.

15442 Q. Now, I am not going to ask you to name all of your articles, but can you give us an estimate of the number of articles that have been published in various publications? A. Certainly scores; possibly hundreds: I frankly—I have never counted them. Many and many score, let me answer it that way.

Q. Well, will you tell us the names of the publications in which these articles have appeared, not all, but—A. Some of them?

15443 Q. —some of the highlights. A. I have had articles and reviews in The American Historical Review; in the Political Science Quarterly; in The American Scholar; in The Journal of Negro History; the Journal of Negro Education; in the old New Masses; Political Affiairs; Masses and Main Stream; Main Stream; Opportunity, which is published by the National Urban League; Phylon, which is published at Atlanta; Pennsylvania Magazine of History, which is published by thte Historical Society of Pennsylvania; and others.

Q. Have you had anything appear in the American Scholar? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in Political Affairs? A. Yes. I believe I named that.

Q. Now, what has been the field of these articles, in general? A. Well, in general, they have been history, economics, philosophy, sociology, one or two in psychology.

Q. Any dealing with current events? A. Oh, yes, a great many.

Q. Have you written any articles on Marxist-15444 Leninist theory? A. Yes, articles specifically devoted to this, many, and most of the articles based upon this science or concept.

. . . . . .

Q. Now, will you tell us some of the places where you have been invited to lecture and on what subjects, and where you have lectured? A. I have lectured at dozens of universities in our country. Shall I name some of the universities?

Q. Yes. A. Well, I have lectured at Columbia University; Brooklyn College; Yale; Harvard; at Boston College; University of North Carolina; Wayne; University of Minnesota; of Michigan; San Francisco City College; North Carolina College for Negroes; Benedict College in South Carolina; Allen University in South Carolina; and more.

15446 Q. Have you received any scholarly awards; and if so, what are they? A. I have received some honors of that nature.

Q. Besides the Guggenheim Fellowship. A. Well, for example, I received the History award of the Asso-15447 ciation for the Study of Negro Life and History, in 1940. There have been such occasional awards.

Q. Have you been a teacher? A. Yes, I have been a teacher.

Q. Do you now teach? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Where do you now teach? A. I now teach at the Jefferson School of Social Science in New York City.

Q. What is the Jefferson School of Social Science? A. It is a school of adult education with a generally Marxist-Leninist orientation in terms of its faculty and the direction of its teaching.

Q. How long have you been teaching there? A. Since my return, which would be 1946; since 1946.

Q. What courses do you teach there now?

Well, let me put it this way: What courses have you taught there since 1946? A. I have taught the following: History of the American Negro People; History of the United States; A History of the Americas, which was based on Mr. Foster's Outlined Political History—of course, we use many other books; a course on The Philosophy of History, which is an analysis of current philosophies of history, and of historical materialism. There was also a course which I teach, of a somewhat advanced nature. It is a 15448 seminar course, on Methods of Writing History and Methods of Performing Research in History.

I think that covers what I have taught at the school.

Q. Where else have you taught? A. I have also taught at regular Communist Party schools; National Training Schools, State Training Schools.

Q. And what subjects have you taught there? A. A great many; many of those that I have indicated at the Jefferson School, and particular lectures that I have been invited to give before Party schools on certain aspects of Marxism-Leninism—the theory of revolution, for instance. I have discussed that several times.

Q. Have your writings and teachings been in any particular recognized school of thought? A. Yes. Ever since I have begun writing, the orientation has been Marxist-Leninist, growingly so, I hope.

Q. Do your writings and teachings reflect the principles of Marxism-Leninism? A. Yes.

Q. Have you studied Marxism-Leninism principles and history? A. Yes, I have.

Q. And in what way have you studied the prin-15449 ciples and history of Marxism-Leninism? A. Well, I devoted my whole life to that. I am not positive when you say "in what way." I read it, conversed about it, conferred about it, written about it, and lived it. That has been my life.

Q. Well, do you make use of Marxist literature in your work? A. All of the time.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15480 Q. Did Marx and Engels take any steps to obtain adherents to their principles?

* * * * * * * * * * *

15481 A. They helped organize Communist leagues, the international workman's association, clubs. They helped organize Communist clubs in this country in 1857. The first Communist club that was founded was called that, in New York City. This was founded by a man who was a friend of Marx, a Marxist, Weydemyer. . . .

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. What else was done by Marx and Engels in their relationship to the United States in that period? A. Marx and Engels both had close relationship to the United States throughout their lives. Both wrote for American newspapers. I think I said they corresponded, I said Marx did. Engels did, also, for the New York Tribune. Many of the leading features in the editorial pages of the New

Marx and Engels were leaders in organizing the European working class and especially the British working class, they were living there, in resisting efforts by the reactionary governments of England and of France, the efforts of those governments to fully support the confederate government. Indeed to the point of open recognition and even war against the United States. The governments were anxious for this on the whole. The working class of England and France resisted this, and indeed said that if England and France went into such a war on the side of the Confederacy it would be unjust because it would favor slavery, and the 15483 working class said that they would not support such a war. There were great strikes, demonstrations, petitions and so on. The historic fact is that Marx and Engels led in the organization of that, through the International Workingmen's Organization, which by the way the United States Government knew and appreciated. Marx corresponded with Lincoln, Marx with Lincoln, Lincoln with Marx. The ambassador of the U. S. in London personally saw Marx and handed him correspondence from Lincoln, personally expressing gratitude on behalf of the sovereignty of our country. This is another typical example of this type of relationship.

Let me if I may mention one more, and these are by no means exhaustive, just to indicate this. As I said, Marx and Engels devoted their lives to working class activity and trade union activity. It is a fact that the trade union movement here grew very much during and after the Civil War, and Marx was especially interested in that and corresponded with the leading American labor figures and trade union figures, especially William H. Sylvis, who was the founder of the National Labor Union in this country. That was the first national federation of trade unions.

Sylvis, as a matter of fact, was moving close to the ideas of Marxism before his early death in 1869.

Now, they corresponded and they correspond especially as to the nature of trade union activity, and such things as the 8-hour demand in the movement. As a matter 15484 of fact, there is a reference to that even in Capital, and if I will be permitted to do so, I will just briefly mention it, even in this basic work. It happens to be on page 329. I noted it here where Marx refers to the Civil War in the United States and issues his classical formulation, labor can not emancipate itself in the white skin where in the black it is branded, and then he points to the developments of the trade union movement as I have just done, and he specifically mentions with pride the fact that the national labor union convention in Baltimore, in 1866, had a program similar to that of the International Workingmen's Association, which met the same year in Geneva, both of them coming out for an 8-hour day and so on.

Now, this was a reflection of the actual demands of the working class in both countries, but it was also a reflection of the interests of Marx in the United States and actually working together, and as I repeat, they corresponded with the other until Sylvis' death in 1869.

These are some examples. There are others, throughout the lives of Marx and Engels.

Q: Will you tell us something more about the American Marxists of that period? You told us about Weydemeyer.

Did he become a general later? A. He rose to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Union Army under Lincoln. He was stationed in St. Louis with General Fremont.

15485 There were others, Jacoby, Sorge, a man named Douai, who was a physician, lived in Texas and other Communists. They called themselves Communists then, a hundred years ago, lived in this country, organized and took prominent part in democratic working class movements, including the formation of the Republican Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15491 Q. At the time of the recess, Doctor, we had the following question. I said in their time, that is Marx's and Engels', were there any rival theories which attempted to attract the adherents of the working class, which purported to be in the interests of the working class, and what were those rival theories? To save time, if there were such rival theories, after you tell us what they 15492 were, tell us what the controversy was between Marxism and these theories.

* * * * * * * * * * *

A. I would like to mention the names of one or two of the leaders of these movements because they directly impinge on Marxist development. For example, Bakunin, a contemporary of Marx, was an anarchist. Most, also a contemporary, was an anarchist. But Baukunin was a Russian, Most German. Another is Blanqui, a Frenchman. Another is Sorel, also a Frenchman.

Now, these men appear and reappear in Marxist-Leninist literature. The men also appear in terms of the biography of Marx and Engels, that is, they were contemporaries and they were in conflict, organizationally and ideologi-15493 cally.

Now, the fact is that Marxism from its beginning denounced concepts of conspiracy, denounced and bitterly fought, and always has bitterly fought, against concepts of anarchism and against concepts of terrorism. This was true in the founding of Marxism. It is one of the ways, in fact, that Marxism was founded. It came into being in opposition to such theories. And its history, throughout in every country, not least in our country, has been history of opposition to these concepts.

In terms of your question as to the fundamental reasons for the argument, what they had at issue, the fundamental point is that Marxism, from its beginnings, as is stated in the Communist Manifesto, the Communist movement, says the Manifesto, is the movement of the vast majority in the interests of the vast majority. From its very beginning it has thought of itself as a democratic mass movement. If it is a democratic mass movement, that means that you have to win the consent of the people. It means, therefore, that it not only can't advocate conspiracy, but it must fight against the concept of conspiracy. It means also from the same point of view that it must be opposed to anarchism and to terrorism, because it is a movement which is grounded in mass persuasion, in winning over the mass of the people, to their point of view.

15494 Now, if it is such a movement, obviously terrorism, anarchism, conspiracy, are not only not part of Marxism, but the point I am trying to get the Panel to see if I can, not only that they are not part of it but that Marxism is organically, philosophically, opposed and must be to concepts of conspiracy, and anarchism, terrorism and so on.

If I may just put my finger on one or two very brief citations to give some idea of this, it will take a minute. But as I say, it recurs throughout Marxist-Leninist literature. Let me give one or two examples.

I remarked that Marx wrote for the Tribune. Here is an article which Marx wrote for the New York Tribune November 25, 1851, and he says: "The times of the superstition which attributed revolution to the will of a few agitators have long passed away. Every one knows nowadays that wherever there is a revolutionary convulsion there must be some social want in the background which is prevented by outworn institutions from satisfying itself."

Or to take another example. Here is Engels in a letter dated London, April 23, 1885. He is referring to Blanquism. I have already mentioned Louis Blanqui. Blanquism was the concept of the conspiratorial seizure of power by force. Engels' letter, which is quite typical, refers to Blanquism: "The fantasy of overturning an entire society through the action of a small conspiracy." I have one or two 15495 others. For instance, there is a well known classic in Marxist literature by Lenin which is called "What Is To Be Done." It is written in 1902. One of the main points of "What Is To Be Done" is the expression by Lenin in the time of the Czarist tyranny, where there were movements of terror, the expression by Lenin of the typical, well understood, Marxist opposition to terrorism. In this case in Russia it took the form of what was called Nihilism, and as I say, one of the points of Lenin's book, and especially if anyone wants to look at it, page 52 of this book, takes specific opposition to the ideas of terrorism.

* * * * * * * * * *

15505 Q. Give us a contribution to the science of Marxism and Leninism, by Foster, William Z. Foster. A. Here there have been several. Let's see if I can put this very briefly and in a nutshell. I would say that one of the greatest contributions of William Z. Foster was his genius, which is not asserted only by Communists by any means, his genius in terms of trade union organization, particularly industrial organization. William Z. Foster is an historic name in American history, not only or simply because of his leadership in the Communist movement, but, as I am confident any historian would say of any persuasion, in terms of his help in the development of the American trade union movement. Foster, of course, was the great organizer of the great steel strike of 1919. This is one.

I would say that a second great contribution of Foster, specifically in the United States, was his keen principle of continuous resistance to any concept of exceptionalism, which has a particular hold, it still has, in the United States. That is, Foster's insistance upon the universality of Marxism-Leninism, upon its full applicability to the United States, the United States is not exceptional, and that Marxism-Leninism applies here as it does to the rest of the world.

He has a genius of persistence, of consistency, in 15506 this, and his concept of class struggle, that this is the core of society, reaches tremendous heights in terms of its devotion and selflessness, and clarity, so that tactically and theoretically Foster's contributions to Marxism-Leninism have been nothing short of remarkable.

One other instance, again as a footnote, his fight, for instance against Keynesism, a leading theoretician of certain approaches to capitalistic economics, a British economist.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15515 Q. Does this mean that Marxism-Leninism does not distinguish between capitalist governments? A. No, on the contrary.

Q. Does it distinguish? A. Yes.

Q. Will you illustrate that? A. Well, Marxism-Leninism is filled, for instance from the very Communist Manifesto up, with great concern for the development of the rights of the people. May I just indicate, for instance: Lenin writes a letter to the American workers, it was published in pamphlet. One of the main points of his letter is to hail the American people, the American working class, because they have an advanced kind of a democratic government, bourgeois but with great democracy, and he refers to the liberating influence of our American revolution and our civil war. In other words, Marxism is partisan from principle to democracy, and the greater the rights of the people, 15516 the more Marxism loves it and fights for it and is devoted to it. So it distinguishes between bourgeoise governments.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15537 Q. Now, you have testified concerning these changes in Marxist-Leninist theory as the years have gone by. You have told us of the various changes and given us some illustrations of the various changes.

15538 In teaching Marxism-Leninism do you have occasion to use works which antedate these changes? A. Yes.

Q. Published works? A. Yes.

Q. Well, why do you use these works that antedate these changes and how do you use them? A. They are used to illuminate the changes. For example, that is if something changes and you want to understand the nature of the change, you want to know what was it that changed. You can't just present somebody with something and say, "This is the change." Anybody with a normal amount of curiosity would say, "Well, what was it before so that I can understand it." This is one very simple usage. The other is historic. You want to have some knowledge of the whole Marxist-Leninist development. That is the very simple reason for using that.

Q. Well, can you tell us what use is made by the Communist Party during your period as a teacher in the Communist schools of the 21 conditions of the Communist International? A. Purely historic, purely historic, and that is all they are. To indicate this period, very early period—what is it, about 30 years ago or more than that?—of these conditions 15539 of the International at that time. That is the only use, basically.

Q. And what use has been made and is made by you and other teachers and by members of the Communist Party, leaders, of the Communist Party, of the resolutions of the 6th World Congress of the Communist International? A. They are studied, some elements in them have some applicability, but there has been a 7th—

Q. Seventh what? A. World Congress, and the whole content, the essence of the content of the 6th World Congress is outmoded and is not taught—certainly I never taught it in any Communist school, in any sense very much more than an historic document of the history of the Communist.

Q. What about J. Peters' Manual? A. I never saw that. I never saw J. Peters' Manual personally. I know that I never used it in teaching. I know it has never been used in teaching by me.

Q. Do you know if others use it in the schools? A. Sir?

Q. Do others use it in the schools? A. No, it is never used. I have never seen it. I have never seen it. I have never seen it used.

Q. What about Olgin's "Why Communism"? A. The same is true. I saw that, it is not correct to say I 15540 never saw it. I saw it, although I may have glanced through it. But it most certainly was never used in schools, never used in teaching.

Q. What was the occasion of your seeing it? A. In the course of general studies.

Q. Did you teach from it? A. No.

Q. Did others teach from it? A. No.

Q. Do they teach it? A. Pardon?

Q. Do they teach it? A. No.

Q. What about Foster's book "Toward a Soviet America"? A. That is another rather early book, which, as it happens, I have not personally read, which Mr. Foster, I know, had several times to say was obsolete, and which was not used in teaching.

. . . . . .

15545 Q. Will you mention some of these working class parties besides the one that you have just mentioned that have taken place in the United States? A. In addition to the Workingmen's Party, there was, for example, the Labor Reform Party, of which Wendell Phillips was a leader in the post-Civil War period. There was the Union Labor Party which was led by Henry George, the writer of Progress and Poverty in New York City. There has been the Social Democratic Party, which was formed in the 1890's. This merged with other groups in 1900, as the Socialist Party, in 1919—the Communist Party. Back in the year 1870 there was a Socialist Labor Party, which later was headed by Daniel DeLeon, 1870. There have been many workingmen's parties, as well, of course, as farmers' parties, and sometimes farmer labor parties as there are still, for instance, in Wisconsin.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15546 Q. Now, what does the Communist Party teach are the democratic traditions of Jefferson, Paine, Lincoln and Frederic Douglass which are carried forward? A. Essentially the following: It points out that Thomas Jefferson and Thomas Paine were great leaders of the great democratic revolution. It points out, of course, that Jefferson was the leading author of an immortal manifesto of revolution, the Declaration of Independence. It points out, and I have pointed it out in my teaching many, many times and in my writing, that some of the essential traditions of Jefferson and Paine, democratic traditions, are, first 15547 of all, the urging of political freedom, the essence of no taxation without representation, the urging of the right to national self-determination. Jefferson and Paine were leaders of the revolution which had as one of its bases the coming into being of a new nationality, the American, and the democratic right of that new nationality to self-determination, to freedom, to freedom from British monarchial rule. That is the second great democratic tradition.

15549 The point that we emphasize is a classical example of the force and violence coming from the reactionaries with a mass of the people legally, even within the constitutional limits of the British monarchy, demanding the rights of Englishmen. The crown is the one which uses the force and violence, and the people, finally, after much provocation, take up arms in defense of what? In defense of their lives, and their being and their rights of Englishmen. We emphasize time after time that it is important to observe that the revolutionary demands of separation from England does not come in until July, 1776, and the battle of Lexington is fought in April 1775. In other words, it does not come except as objective conditions, and the fact that the King has sent soldiers and has outlawed these people and said if we catch Jefferson we will hang him, it doesn't come until there is no alternative, just the self-defense, this organization of resistance. This we point to as one of the contributions of Jefferson.

15637 Q. Now, as a Marxist-Leninist scholar, will you tell us how Marxists understand Lenin's reference to aesopian language? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us, please? A. It occurs in a footnote, I think, in the very beginning of Imperialism, as I recall.

Q. It is in evidence. I will show you the exhibit.

MR. ABT: Exhibit 140. (Document handed witness)

THE WITNESS: Yes, it is right at the beginning.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Go ahead. A. Marxist-Leninists understand it in the way in which it is printed here, which seems to be clear to me, 15638 and that is this way: Not in terms of deception, just as Aesop himself, from which this derived, did not write in terms of deception. In his stories he was not trying to fool anybody, he was trying rather to illuminate by the use of allegory. That is the fundamental point, to illuminate, not to confuse and not to distort but to light up.

Now, in terms of the use of this under czarist tyranny and under censorship only, and in such cases even there, and as it must be, the use, I think, specifically—For example, Lenin cites Japanese imperialism instead of citing Russian imperialism.

I think, as a matter of fact, that is the specific and only usage that he makes, which is what he is talking about.

Now, is there any distortion in this, any hiding? He is analyzing imperialism. There is the czarist tyranny. If he says Russian it will not be allowed, you cannot distribute it, you cannot get your message at all. If he says Japanese under such conditions, the analysis of imperialism is in no way hidden or distorted.

In other words, there is no substantive deception, there is no deception at all in this sense. This is what the aesopian means.

It is a means of getting through so that you can illuminate and get your message to the people notwithstanding 15639 even czarist tyrannical censorship. Not to keep the people from getting your message, or some sort of double talk, or see that you missinform them and they don't know what you are talking about—no. It is the contrary. It is to get to them and tell them what you are talking about despite this obstacle placed by the czar.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15646 Q. How does Marxism-Leninism define imperialism? A. Marxism-Leninism puts its definition very briefly right on the title of this exhibit (Indicating) Lenin called Imperialism, in his classical work, the subtitle, the highest stage of capitalism. That is, we see it as the moribund stage, the stage where it is on its way out, the last stage. That is part of our definition.

We see imperialism in terms of our definition as the time of monopoly capitalism, this is central to our definition, monopoly capitalism. We define imperialism, then, in this way: A social order is imperialist when its basic economy, its fundamental means of production, its industry and so on, is controlled, monopolistically, by a handful.
15647 That is number one.

Number two, when the monopolistic control of industry merges with the financial control of the same industrial monopolists, that is, a heightening of the oligarchy, so that the financiers are the center of control. Marxism-Leninism also defines imperialism in terms of this stage of monopoly capitalism where the territory of the world is already completely divided, it is already parceled out.

This is characteristic of the era of imperialism, characteristic also of imperialism in terms of the definition is the glaring fact and the glaring necessity for the imperialists, of the exportation of capital, especially the exportation of financial capital, that is, of investments overseas.

Fundamental also to our concept of imperialism is following from this its aggressive expansionistic, fundamentally war-like nature in terms of getting colonies held by others, taking them, for power, for investment, for strategic materials.

This is the essence of the definition of imperialism, added to which ideologically are such things as typical reflections of racism and chauvanism, in imperialism.

15668 Q. Was there ever a period when the Communists of the United States ceased to characterize the United States Government as imperialist? A. No.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15669-A Q. Have any non-communists, Americans, taken a position on the relation of American imperialists, and the danger of war?

MR. PAISLEY: I object to that. Many people might take the same view that the Communist Party does.

MR. BROWN: Objection sustained.

MR. ABT: May I ask for the record, Mr. Chairman, because this question came up as the Panel will recall, during the cross-examination of Dr. Mosely, when we attempted to bring out the same facts, that is to say, that non-Communist Americans took the same position on one subject matter or another, one policy or another, as the Communist Party, and a similar objection was made by the Petitioner at that time. After lengthy argument, the Panel sustained the objection of the Petitioner at that time. Do I understand the Panel is making the same ruling at this time in our affirmative case and for the reasons indicated then that it did in connection with our cross-examination?

MR. BROWN: Yes, sir.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Have non-Communist Americans taken a position on other aspects of American imperialism similar to that position taken by the Communists of the United States?

. . . . . .

15670 MR. PARLEY: Same objection.

MR. BROWN: Sustained.

MR. ABT: Mr. Chairman, I think in view of the Chair's ruling we will eliminate any further questions along that line.

MR. BROWN: Very well.

. . . . . .

15699 Elizabeth Gurley Flynn was called as a witness, and having been first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

. . . . . .

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

15750 Q. Are you now a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party? A. I am.

Q. When were you first named to that post?

15751 A. I was elected to that post in the 1938 convention of the Communist Party.

Q. Have you been a National Committee member continuously since that time? A. I have.

Q. Will you state the times when you were re-elected? A. I was re-elected at every convention of the Communist party where elections were held. I think there was one or two conventions that were emergency conventions that we didn't hold elections. But whenever elections were held, that would probably have been 1940, 1942, '44, '46, '48 and '50.

Q. Were you also a member of the National Committee of the Communist Political Association? A. We didn't call it National Committee.

Q. National Board. A. During that period it was National Board, I think, or there was some title of vice president that went along with the change, something like that.

Q. But you were a member of the National Board? A. Yes, whatever the governing body was, I was a member of it. I have been uninterruptedly a member of the governing body of the Communist Party since 1938.

15752 Q. Have you been a member of the National Board of the Communist Party? A. Yes, I have been.

Q. During what period? A. It was then called the Political Bureau, and I was elected to it in 1941, when Earl Browder went to Atlanta. I replaced him on the Political Bureau. Subsequently I was re-elected up to and including 1946. Then there was an interim period when I was not a member of the Board, and was re-elected to the National Committee which replaced the Board in 1948.

Q. What other positions have you held in the Communist Party? A. I have also been Chairman of the Women's Commission of the Communist Party since 1945, and Chairman of the Defense Commission of the Communist Party since 1948.

15756 Q. Have you ever been a candidate for public office? A. Yes, I ran for Congress at large here in New York in the year 1942.

Q. On what ticket? A. On the Communist Party ticket.

15757 Q. Did you campaign? A. I campaigned very actively and energetically. Q. What was your platform? A. It was win the war. I made a special appeal for the votes of women, that there should be provision made for child care facilities for women workers. I particularly campaigned on that, because it was a burning need of the women workers in the war production industries.

Also for price control, and for the popular issue which particularly concerned women as voters, and also naturally appealing to the men as voters as well. It was a win the war year, and it was a year in which the Communist Party was identified with the struggle against fascism in every way.

Q. How many votes did you receive? A. I received about 50,000 votes.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

15761 Q. Have you ever been abroad? A. Yes, I have been abroad three times. That is abroad in the sense of going to Europe, I mean.

Q. Yes. A. Because I had been to Canada quite a number of times.

Q. Other than Canada. A. Other than Canada, yes.

Q. Will you tell us the years that you went abroad? A. The years 1945, 1949 and 1950.

Q. Did you obtain passports for these trips? A. Yes, I obtained a passport in 1945, which I renewed in 1949 and then another passport because the first one had expired in 1950.

Q. Under what name did you obtain these passports? A. Under my own name, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn.

Q. In your applications did you advise the State Department of the countries you intended to visit? A. Yes.

Q. Did you advise them truthfully? A. I did.

Q. What was the occasion for your 1945 trip? A. In 194.. I was one of a delegation, I think about 12 or 13 women, who went to a women's congress for peace in Paris.

15762 It was called by a number of women of European countries who had been in concentration camps and prisons and who issued this call, the largest number of whom were French women. A nonpartisan delegation was organized here, representing various organizations, and I went as a representative of the Communist Party on that delegation.

Q. What was the name of that organization? A. The organization that was formed there at this Congress of Women was the Women's International Democratic Federation. It was set up at that convention and conference and has continued to exist to the present time.

Q. Will you give us the name of some of the other members of the American delegation? A. Yes. Mrs. Muriel Draper, Dr. Jean Wellfish, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot.

. . . . . .

THE WITNESS: Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown, Miss Thelma Dale, Mrs. Jeanette Turner. There was a young newspaper woman whose name I don't remember. Mrs. Vivian Mason, and then a WAC in the Army joined us in Paris who represented the CIO auxiliaries from Los Angeles.

15763 BY MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Was Mrs. Frederick March on that delegation? A. Yes.

Q. And Dr. Beryl Parker? A. And Dr. Beryl Parker, 13 in all.

Q. Henrietta Buckmaster, the writer? A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Charlotte Hawkins Brown? A. Yes, I mentioned her, educator from the South.

15765 Q. How long did you remain abroad that time?

A. We were gone about three weeks, maybe a little longer, because it took a long time to come back.

Q. What country did you visit other than France? A. On the way over we stopped in England overnight or from Saturday night to Monday morning. That is the only country that I visited.

Q. Did you attend a convention of the British 15766 Communist Party there? A. Yes.

Q. And how did you happen to attend it? A. It was by accident. I called up Mrs. Pollitt, the wife of the General Secretary of the Party, and she told me that there was a Party Congress going on. So I asked the other delegates if they would like to come with me and some of them said they would and some preferred to see Westminster Abbey, so we took those who wished to go to the Congress, and we were guest visitors there for Sunday afternoon and part of Sunday evening.

Q. So that your capacity at that convention was that of what—a visitor? A. A visitor, yes.

Q. Did you see John Gates there? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Under what circumstances did you see him? A. He apparently was sitting in the gallery and he sent me down a note, "For heaven's sake, don't leave until I see you." So I waited for him in the lobby, and I took him with me to our hotel, the Ravener, I think it was, where we were meeting with a group of the British women who were also going to the convention, and he stayed for a while at the meeting of the American and British women who 15767 were assembled there.

Q. And then he left? A. Yes. He was quite embarrassed to be the only man among all this group of women. We were discussing all women's problems, so after he had asked a lot of questions about family and friends, and what is going on in the United States, he left.

Q. In France, did you meet any leaders of the Communist Party? A. Yes, I did. I think I met the top leaders of the Communist Party and quite a number of the women leaders of the Communist Party, as well.

Q. Did you meet Duclos? A. Yes. Andre Marty, Thorez and his wife, Jeanette Vermersch. She was involved in the Congress. I met quite a number of the French women who were members of the Constituent Assembly. In fact, they took us as their guests.

Q. The constituent assembly of the French Republic? A. Yes, they had not set up the final government yet. It was a temporary government.

Q. What was the occasion of your meeting these Communist leaders? A. There was a very large reception given for the entire group of delegates to the Women's International Democratic Federation by the French dele-15768 gation, and I met all three of them at this reception.

Andre Marty spoke English very well, and so I had a good deal of conversation with him. He introduced me to Duclos and Thorez, and I had short conversations with them because naturally other people wanted to talk to them.

Q. You say you did have a conversation with Duclos? A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was said, do you recall? A. As well as I recall, he asked me, "How is Browder's Utopia getting along in America." I said, "It is not doing so very well right now." He asked me how things were in our country, and I told him we had reconstituted our party and that our party was back on its sea legs again, and that we appreciated very much the contribution which he had made to our discussion. He looked a little surprised, and he said, "I didn't write it for you; I wrote it for our French party—"

15769 The Witness: It was a very short conversation and he said, "I wrote it for our French party because they were in danger of doing the same thing—of coming up out of the resistance movement, and many comrades advocated that we should not reconstitute the Communist Party of France, but we should be a part of the United Popular Front Government. It was necessary for us to carry on a very strong polemic, and we used you as an example." I made an appointment to meet him at a later date, but he had to go away to speak some place, and I did not see him on that trip again.

15770 Q. What was the occasion for your 1949 trip? A. In 1949, I went over to attend a birthday party, the 80th birthday party of Marcel Cachin, who was the chief editor of Humanite, the Communist daily of Paris. From all parties all over the world people came there, mostly Communists who were connected with newspapers, although we brought the greetings of our party, too, but since he was an editor, the editors of the papers, like L'Unita, of Italy, and other papers were represented there at this very festive and gala occasion.

Q. How long did you remain? A. I stayed a week that time and returned.

Q. What did you do during that week? A. During that week I saw the leaders of the Communist Party. I don't think I saw Marty this time. I think he was away. I saw Thorez and Duclos and the women leaders of the 15771 Party. I had consultations with the women leaders.

Q. Did you visit any other country in 1949 when you were in France? A. No. In 1949 I returned immediately.

Q. What was the occasion of your 1950 trip? A. On the 1950 trip, I went to the Congress of the French Communist Party, which was held at a suburb of Paris, Glennvilliers. On all of these occasions I went to write articles for the Daily Worker. I wrote a large number of articles on all of these occasions. I also went fraternally representing the Communist Party, in a dual capacity.

Q. How long did you remain abroad? A. That visit was, I think, about three weeks, too, I believe. We were there over Easter holiday.

Q. Did you visit any other countries? A. Yes, over the weekend I went over to London, England, and again it seems coincidental, but it is a fact that there was a London Party Congress going on which I had not known about, and which they whisked me off to, a postman's holiday, and I made a speech at that Congress.

Q. What did you speak about, incidentally, at that Congress? A. I brought greetings from the American 15772 Party to the British Party, and I spoke about our common interest to establish peace in the world and spoke about some of the problems that we were having in our country which were analogous to some of the problems which they have there, of building a united front, and fighting for the economic demands of the workers. They were still very bad off. They still had rationing and many grievances.

Q. When you were in Paris in 1950, what did you do? A. You mean besides the Congress or at the Congress?

Q. You attended the Congress. A. Yes, and I spoke shortly, about five minutes, greetings from the American Party to the French Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15773 Q. Did you meet any representatives of the Communist Information Bureau on any of these trips? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you make any report on the work of the Communist Party of the United States to any Communist of a foreign country on any of these trips? A. No, I would not consider my conversations were reports. They were merely an exchange of experiences, conversations like any two people would have with certain common interest, in which I asked questions and they asked questions.

Q. Did you on any of these occasions receive any instructions or in effect on any of these occasions receive any instructions or directives from any Communist of a foreign country on any of these trips or any other time? A. No, emphatically not.

* * * * * * * * * * *

15774 Q. To whom do you owe allegiance? A. I owe allegiance to the American people.

Q. Do you owe allegiance to any foreign power? A. No, no foreign power whatsoever. I admit I have a soft spot for Ireland.

Q. Do you consider that there is any relation between allegiance to the United States of America and support of the national administration that is in power at any particular time?

* * * * * * * * * * *

15774-A A. They are not necessarily synonymous, no. I would consider that sometimes my allegiance to the American people, to my country, might be at variance with a particular administration's policy.

Q. Do you consider that there is anything inconsistent or contradictory between your allegiance to the United 15775 States American people and your membership in the Communist Party? A. No, I do not. In fact, I consider that my membership in the Communist Party is part of my devotion to and allegiance to the best interests of the American people.

Q. Do you consider that there is anything inconsistent or contradictory between your allegiance to the United States of America and your opposition to the foreign policies of the present administration? A. No, I do not consider that there is any opposition or any inconsistency between my allegiance to the American people and the foreign policy of the Truman administration. Rather the other way around, that anyone, it would seem to me, who is truly devoted to the best interests of the American people must challenge the foreign policy of the Truman Administration and the bipartisan policy which it exemplifies at the present time.

Q. Has the Communist Party ever knowingly deviated from the views and policies of the Soviet Union?

15776 THE WITNESS: I don't think that is a question that you can answer yes or no, Mr. Marcantonio. I think it requires an explanation.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Give us the answer as you want to give it. A. It depends upon what standard one has from which there is an alleged deviation. My standard is, as I have said, whatever is for the benefit of the American people as I view it, and as my Party views it may coincide with the policies of other peoples and other governments, and if it so coincides, it is not necessarily prearranged or pre-decided, but it is because the best interests of other peoples and the American people are synonymous.

I couldn't say whether we have deviated from everything that the Soviet Union has stood for or not, because I don't know everything that the Soviet Union stands for.

On foreign policy, it is very likely that we have not differed where the Soviet Union stood for peace and stood for the best interests of their people, it would coincide with the best interests of other peoples in the world. That is to say, I think the interests of peoples everywhere in the world are bound to be more or less identical.

. . . . . .

15777 Q. Have you completed your answer on that question? A. I could answer at considerable length. I tried to make it brief If you want me to elaborate, I certainly would be glad to do so.

My understanding of the foreign policies of the Soviet Union, as enunciated in the press, are that they are policies for peace. Our policies, that is, the policies of the American people and of the Communist Party are policies for peace. In that sense, they coordinate or agree, and I see no reason why they should not.

Other peoples, the peoples of France and Italy are also peoples who are struggling for peace, and there are many times, like on the question of quarantining the aggressors, opening up the second front, and things of that sort, where it seemed that there was agreement among the peoples of the world, including the peoples of the Soviet Union, on how best to defeat fascism.

. . . . . .

15778 Q. Did you attend the special convention of the Communist Party in 1940, at which a resolution was adopted disaffiliating the Communist Party from the Communist Internationale? A. Yes, I did. I think I was Chairman of that Convention.

Q. Was the subject matter of such disaffiliation discussed by the National Committee prior to the convention? A. Yes, it was discussed at considerable length by the National Committee prior to this convention and the convention was called an emergency, special convention for the purpose of presenting it to the delegates of the Party from all over the country, that is, the motion of disaffiliation.

Q. Was anything said at the National Committee meeting with reference to the relations which would exist after disaffiliation between the Communist Party and the Communist International. A. It was clearly understood that there would be no further relations between the Communist Internationale and the Communist Party of the 15779 United States as a body. That did not mean that we did not have comradely feelings towards the Communist Parties of the other countries in the world and were no longer interested in anything that they were doing, but that we had no further official delegation, representation on the Communist Internationale, and that we had no further official relationships with them of any sort whatsoever. It was an open and public disaffiliation.

Q. Did Browder say at the National Committee meeting that after disaffiliation, the relations between the Communist Party and the Communist Internationale would remain exactly as in the past? A. No, he definitely did not say that.

Q. Did he say anything to that effect? A. No, he didn't say anything to that effect. But he said something that might be misinterpreted or deliberately perverted to mean something like that if one wished to twist his words.

Q. If you recall, will you give us the words Mr. Browder used? A. I recall quite clearly what he said. He said that the Communist Party of the United States still believes in international solidarity, and that wherever we were called upon we would express this solidarity for the aims and purposes of other Parties, but there was no such remark that the relationships would remain unchanged, because 15780 the action definitely changed the relationships.

Q. This statement that you are quoting of Browder was made by him where—at the National Committee?

A. At this special convention, and also at the National Committee meeting.

Q. That preceded the convention? A. Which preceded the convention, yes.

Q. Did any other leader of the Communist Party ever state in substance and effect that there would be no changes in the relationships between the Communist Party and the Communist International after disaffiliation? A. I heard no leader of the Communist Party make any such remark at any time or place.

Q. To your knowledge, what were the relations between the Communist Party and the Communist International after the 1940 special convention? A. There were no further relations, no further delegates went over there to meet in their official meetings, there was no further communication as there would be with an affiliate between the Communist Party and the Communist Internationale, and whatever we knew of them, we knew through the press.

15781 Q. When was the Communist International dissolved, do you know? A. The Communist International was dissolved, I believe, in 1942, that is, two years after our disaffiliation from them.

Q. Are you sure it was 1942 or was it 1943? A. '42 or '43. It was several years later, not too long a period later, but several years later.

Q. How did you first learn of the dissolution? A. I was traveling at the time, and I read a paper in Denver, Colorado. The newspaper reporters brought me a report and asked me to comment on it.

Q. Since 1943, which is the date of the dissolution of the Communist International, had there been any organization which has carried on the functions and activities of the Communist International? A. Not to my knowledge there has been none to carry on the functions of the Communist Internationale.

Q. Have you ever heard of an organization known as the Communist Information Bureau? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Is the Communist Party affiliated with that organization? A. The Communist Party of the United States is not affiliated with the Communist Information Bureau.

Q. Does the Communist Party of the United States pay a part of the money it receives as dues to the Communist Information Bureau? A. No, it does not.

15782 Q. Does the Communist Party of the United States pay or contribute any funds or give any financial assistance directly or indirect or in any manner, shape or form to the Communist Information Bureau? A. No, it does not.

Q. When and how did you first learn of the coming into existence of the Communist Information Bureau? A. As I say, I read of it in the newspaper when I was traveling. It was called to my attention. I think I was at a radio station.

Q. I am not talking about the dissolution of the Communist Internationale. I am now talking of when did you learn of the coming into existence of the Communist Information Bureau? A. The Communist Information Bureau, I think we first heard of that in the press somehow. I don't remember which paper, but in some newspapers.

Q. Did any representative of the Communist Party of the United States attend the first meeting of the Communist Information Bureau back in 1947? A. No, no representative of our Party attended.

Q. Has any representative of your party attended any subsequent meeting of the Communist Information 15783 Bureau? A. No, we have not attended. We have not been invited, and we have not attended.

Q. Has any representative of the Communist Information Bureau visited the United States? A. Not to my knowledge no such person has ever come to this country.

Q. Has the Communist Party of the United States received any written or oral directives or instructions from the Communist Information Bureau? A. I have never heard of such things. No, not to my knowledge. I would know as a member of the National Committee.

Q. You are in a position to know? A. Yes, I would know if there were any such communications.

Q. And your answer to my question is in the negative? A. Absolutely.

Q. Let me ask you this question: Has the Communist Party received any written or oral directions or instructions from any representative of the Communist Information Bureau? A. No, we have not, not anything that I have ever heard of.

Q. And you would be in a position to know? A. I would be in a position to know. Many requests for greetings, conventions, and things like that, and we always 15784 know exactly what they are from brother or sister parties.

Q. Has the Communist Party of the United States received any written communications of any kind from the Communist Information Bureau? A. Not to my knowledge, they have not.

Q. Do you read "Lasting Peace"? A. Quite regularly. I wouldn't say I read every issue of it, but quite regularly.

Q. Does "Lasting Peace" contain any directive or instruction to the Communist Party of the United States? A. It does not, no.

Q. Do you or your fellow members of the National Committee consider any of the contents of "Lasting Peace" as constituting a directive to the Communist Party? A. We do not. We do not, absolutely.

Q. What is your purpose in reading "Lasting Peace." A. It has news of the activities of the various Communist Parties in all parts of the world, especially in Europe. It has news of the trade unions and the working class movement. It has news of the struggle for peace. Occasionally it has news about the activities of women's organizations, and generally it has news of activities of progressive 15785 character in other countries that you would not read in the ordinary American newspaper. So it is of value to a speaker and a writer connected with our Party to read such an organ.

Q. What is the source of your knowledge of the policies and activities of the Communist Information Bureau? A. What is the source of my knowledge?

Q. That is right. A. Just the paper itself, what the paper reports.

Q. When you say the paper, you mean "Lasting Peace"? A. "Lasting Peace," yes.

Q. And with respect to your knowledge as to the structure and methods of functioning of the Communist Information Bureau? A. There are occasional reports from time to time of meetings which they hold in different countries, the representatives of approximately nine Parties, I believe, who are affiliated with it, and reports of what their discussions are and any decisions that they arrive at in connection with their organization are from time to time reported in "Lasting Peace."

Q. Since you have assumed your duties as a member of the National Committee in 1938, has the Communist Party of the United States received any directives or instructions from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union?

15786 A. No, we have not; absolutely not.

Q. From any representative of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union? A. No.

Q. From any official of the Soviet Government? A. No.

Q. From any official or representative of the Communist Party of any other country? A. No.

Q. Or from the Communist Party of any other country? A. No.

Q. Since you assumed office as a member of the National Committee in 1946, has there been a representative of the Communist Internationale in the United States? A. Not to my knowledge there has not been. I never heard of one.

Q. Since that date, has there been any person in the United States who was the equivalent of a representative of the Communist International in the United States? A. No, there has not been.

15790 Q. Since you assumed your duties as a member of the National Committee, how have the funds of the Communist Party been obtained? A. There are two ways that funds are obtained for the Communist Party. One is through dues, and possibly an assessment around election time, that is, an election assessment, through contributions from a fund drive which is usually held once a year. Sometimes it is necessary twice a year, depending upon how many cases we have and what the needs of the Party are. It is a public fund drive to which we appeal to members 15791 of the Party, sympathizers, friends and anybody else who wants to contribute to the Communist Party's work.

Q. Since you assumed your duties as a member of the National Committee and a member of the National Board, has the Communist Party received any financial aid from the Soviet Government? A. It certainly has not to my knowledge, and I would certainly know.

Q. From any agency of the Soviet Government? A. No.

Q. And from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union? A. No.

Q. And from the Communist Internationale? A. No.

Q. Or from the Communist Information Bureau? A. No.

Q. Or any agency or representative of either the Soviet Government, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Communist Internationale, or the Communist Information Bureau? A. No to all of those questions.

Q. Since the commencement of your tenure of office on the National Committee, has the Communist Party 15792 received financial aid at the direction of any of those that I have mentioned? A. No, we have received no outside financial aid whatsoever from any place outside of the United States.

Q. I will ask the question specifically. Has it received financial aid from any source outside of the United States?

A. No, it has not.

Q. Or any financial aid at the direction of any person or organization outside of the United States? A. No, it has not to my knowledge, and I think I would be in a position to know.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15794 Q. During the period of your membership on the National Committee, has the Communist Party ever sent any representative or member to any school, class or institute in the Soviet Union? A. Not during my membership in the National Committee no. That is since 1938.

Q. Has the Communist Party during your membership on the National Committee sent anybody to any Communist school or class or institute in any foreign country? A. No, not that I know of, not in any other country.

Q. To your knowledge, during this period of your membership on the National Committee, has any member or representative of the Communist Party attended 15795 any such school, class or institute? A. You mean Communist schools?

Q. That is right, Communist schools. A. No. Communist GI's attended a lot of schools all around the world, but they were different kinds of schools.

Q. I am talking about the Communist schools abroad. A. Communist schools, no.

Q. During this period has the Communist Party sent any member or representative to the Soviet Union for instruction or training in the principles, policies, strategy or tactics of Communism? A. No, not in the period that I have been a member of the National Committee, there has been no such transaction.

• • • • • • • • • • •

15801 Q. When and where did you first learn of the Duclos article on the subject of the dissolution of the Communist Party of the United States? A. I think it was from a story in the World Telegram that appeared about April of 1944.

Q. Was that 1944 or 1945? A. 1945.

Q. I want to refresh your recollection. A. You jumped me a year.

Q. The period of May, 1945. A. Yes.

Q. Prior to May 1945, had you heard any discussion of the Browder policy from rank and file members of the Communist Party? A. Yes, I had. There was a good deal of discontent among many of the older members of the Party over the formation of the Communist Political Association. There was a considerable feeling on the part of the foreign born that had been told that they could no longer be members of the Party, many of whom were charter members of the Party. There was discontent among trade unionists, who felt that Browder's concept of a progressive capitalism which would solve all the problems of labor without struggle was a Utopian one, was a fantastic one. As I traveled around speaking, I met quite a good deal of difficulties in 15802 answering questions to Party members and non-Party members. I remember in Camden, New Jersey, for instance, the shipyard workers said to me, "How do you know there are going to be 60 million jobs, just because Browder said so?" "We know the shipyard owners. You don't know them."

I was in Connecticut and heard similar comments the factories are beginning to shut down, and where is this prosperity that we are so sure of. Then I heard a great deal of anxiety among women workers who are being laid off as to whether they would be all thrown out of work and the veterans replace them, and as to whether they would keep their seniority in industry which some of them had won. So there was this sort of general questioning and anxiety among Party members and non-Party members alike as we approached the end of the war, as to just what the postwar period held, and as to whether Browder's prophecies in relation to the postwar period were valid or whether it was just a lot of fantasy on his part. I think the workers had the feeling that there was a lot of fantasy connected with it.

Q. Prior to May, 1945, when you first learned of the Duclos article, were there any discussions in the National Board with reference to the Browder policy? A. Yes, there had been.

Q. Will you tell us about them? A. Yes. Several 15803 members of the National Committee — because a good many of them traveled around, John Williamson traveled around a good deal and he got the same union reactions I got, and he also was organization secretary of the Party—and he said the Party membership was falling off, that is, the CPA membership, and that there was not the same enthusiasm for the Party that there had been previously. He felt that there had to be organizationally a reevaluation of policies. Then I remember that Eugene Dennis and Gil Green, at one meeting, proposed that there should be a special gathering of the National Committee, a plenum, a large meeting of the National Committee, where the whole question of postwar prospectives would be reviewed in light of the changes that were taking place in the country. Benjamin J. Davis, Jr., the Negro leader of our Party, was very much concerned and raised the question as to the rights of the Negro people—were they being properly safeguarded, were there guarantees that they would be safeguarded after the war was over, and what would be the place of Negro people in industry after the war was over, and the returning GI's, especially the Negro GI's were a matter of great concern to Benjamin J. Davis.

I remember some questions on the part of Stachel, but 15804 William Z. Foster, the Chairman of the Party, at every meeting of the National Committee, in one form or another, raised objections to the Browder policy and questioned it.

I remember once he had a list of something like 50 questions that he said the Browder policy did not answer, and would have to be answered before our Party went into the postwar period approaching workers, Negro people, women workers, et cetera, that these questions just simply had to be answered, and that the Browder policy had not answered them.

So I would say that there was quite a ferment and at the same time because we were still in the war and there was a question of winning the war, it was a controlled and disciplined ferment, because no Communist wanted to do anything to upset the war effort. It was projected to the postwar period, what is going to happen in the postwar period, and will the Browder policies fit the postwar period, and a scepticism, a questioning as to whether that would be possible.

15807 Q. Were you ever told by anyone that Manuilsky had said that the Communist Party should take guidance from the French Communists? A. No, sir, I never heard of any such thing.

Q. Did anyone ever tell you that Manuilsky had used words to that effect? A. No, not until the witness said so from the stand at Foley Square.

15808 Q. When he was testifying for the government in that case? A. Yes, he was the government witness in that case against the 11 leaders of the Party.

Q. After you first learned of the publication of the Duclos article, did you receive a copy of it? A. Yes, I think first we had mimeographed copies of it, and then it was published in the Daily Worker with an introduction or something by Browder.

Q. Did you read it? A. Yes, I read it very carefully.

Q. Did you consider it a directive or instruction or an order to the American Communists? A. No, I did not. I considered it an article which had been written in a theoretical magazine in France by a leading French Communist, a leader of the resistance movement, a man who was greatly respected, and that naturally we should give it consideration. But I didn't consider it a directive to our party.

Q. And was the Duclos article discussed by the National Committee and the National Board of the Communist Political Association? A. Yes, it was. It was discussed.

Q. You attended the discussions? A. Yes, I at-15809 tended all of the discussions.

Q. You participated in the discussions? A. Yes.

Q. In that discussion did anyone say that the Duclos article constituted a directive, instruction or order to the American Communists? A. No, quite to the contrary, it was in the spirit which I have expressed, that it was given consideration, that it was an article which was critical, it dealt with certain American policies which we should read and could accept or reject, just as we pleased. It was no directive; it was his opinion. It was one man's opinion in another country.

Q. Did anyone say that it should be considered as a directive or order to the American Communists? A. No, quite to the contrary, that it was not such.

Q. Did anybody say that it was such in that discussion? A. No.

Q. Did anyone use words that were in substance or effect that this article was to be considered as an instruction, directive or order? A. No, no such language was used.

Q. What was the significance of the Duclos article 15810 to you and the members of the National Committee or the National Board of the Communist Political Association at that time? A. As I said, there was a great deal of ferment and discussions going on in our Party, and it was of great interest to us, naturally, that in a sister Party in another part of the world that such an article should be published in a theoretical magazine, and we would give it our attention. I doubt very much if we would have given it the same attention, possibly six months before, but the changing conditions of our country as reflected in the discussions in our own Party sharpened our interest in what the leader of a sister Party had to say. In that sense, and in that sense only, was the article read and discussed.

Of course, the text of the article deals a great deal with what Browder said and what Foster said. In fact, the totality of the article is almost entirely quotations from what Browder said and what Foster said and then comment of Duclos. Included in the article was the purpose of the article which he later, as I testified, he said to me in Paris that it was the fear that the French Party membership might go the same way and follow the Browder line, which they considered to be a great disaster to their Party and that is why they were so sharp in their criticisms. It was their own Party business that they were concerned with, that their Party should not make such a mistake 15811 as they felt that the American Party had made in dissolving the Communist Party and setting up some kind of a non-political association.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

15815 Q. Were you ever advised by anyone that Browder's position had been upheld or approved from abroad? A. No. In fact, contrary-wise we knew some parties did not approve of it, notably the Australian Party, which had gone on record as opposing the policies of Browder. Browder, I believe, had written them a letter asking them their views, and they had very sharply dissented from Browder's views.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

15848 Q. Miss Flynn, have you ever read any of the following: The 21 Conditions for Admission to the Communist Internationale? A. No, I haven't read all of those. I have heard some of them read in proceedings, but I have not read them all.

Q. The Resolutions of the Sixth Congress of the Communist Internationale? A. No, I don't know about that.

Q. Peters Manual on Organization? A. Only the sections that I have heard read in court proceedings.

Q. When you say sections read in court proceedings, what do you mean by that? A. In our trial downstairs, the government has been reading sections and sections 15849 were read in the trial of the first group of Foley Square and I have read the record.

Q. So that that is the first and only time that you have had occasion to read of anything in Peters Manual on Organization? A. That is correct.

Q. Have you ever read Odgen's book entitled, "Why Communism"? A. No, the answer would be the same. Those sections which have been read into proceedings, I have read. But the pamphlet or book or whatever it is, as a whole, I have not read.

Q. And Foster's Book "Toward a Soviet America? Have you read that? A. I have not read that in full either.

Q. In your speeches, writings and lectures at the Communist Party schools, have you made references to any of these books or pamphlets that I have mentioned? A. No, I never have.

Q. Since 1938, when you became a member of the National Committee, has the leadership of the Communist Party considered that any of these works correctly sets forth the views of the Communist Party and its policies? A. I would consider that practically all of those items which you have mentioned are considered obsolete by the leadership of the Communist Party. In fact, the book 15850 "Soviet America," Mr. Foster has himself repudiated, and as far as Peters Manual is concerned, I once asked the educational director of our Party, Miss Gannett, about it, because I heard discussion of it, and she said forget it, it is out of date.

16016. CROSS-EXAMINATION

* * * * * * * * * * *

By MR. PAISLEY:

16050 Q. You say you went to Europe in 1945, 1949, and 1950, under your own name and advised the State Department truthfully of the countries that you were going to visit? A. That is correct.

Q. Did you tell the State Department that you 16051 were a Communist? A. Yes, I gave my occupation, and I went as a representative of the Communist Party in 1945, when the first application was made. In fact, passports were not issued in 1945 very generally, and a bloc of passports were issued to the delegates in which I believe the French Government also intervened and made a request to the State Department that it should be expedited.

Q. The occasion of your visit in 1945, it was to attend the Women's Congress for Peace? A. That is right.

Q. You say that Congress did not have sinister aspects attributed to it by John Lautner? A. I don't know the Lautner testimony in relation to the Congress.

Q. Why did you make the statement? A. I know it had no sinister aspects, so if he so testified, he was wrong.

Q. Why did you make the statement that he did attach to it sinister aspects if you didn't know what you were talking about? A. I knew what I was talking about, Mr. Paisley. The attorney asked me—16076 Q. You say that you did exchange experiences with foreign Communists on these visits over there? A. Naturally.

. . . . . .

Q. Would that include Russian Communists? A. No, I had no discussion with Russian Communists.

Q. None whatever? A. Outside of the women. I didn't meet any other Russian representatives.

Q. How many Russian women? A. Oh, there were 16077 about 25 or 30 Russian women at the delegation.

Q. One of the prime principles of the Communist Party here and in Russia is that there shall be no male chauvinism, isn't that so? A. That is very correct, Mr. Paisley.

Q. You women want to participate 100 per cent in everything that goes on? A. That is very correct.

Q. Here, and there, too. A. Everywhere, yes.

Q. So you did talk to Russian Communists. A. I talked to Russian women, and I presume these women were Communists. I talked to Russian women. We talked about all kinds of things, child care after the war, we talked about the reconstruction of the countries, we talked about the rights of women.

Q. Were they Communists or not? A. I know that Madam Popova is a Communist. Whether every one in that delegation was a Communist or not, I don't know. There were not all Communists in every delegation. There were people who had been very heroic in the resistance movement. I could not swear under oath that every single woman in that delegation was a Communist.

. . . . . .

16083 Q. Are you telling this Panel that the Daily Worker, whether you wrote it or not, or Political Affairs, has not constantly supported the Soviet Union at all times when the views and policies of that country differed with those of the United States? A. If the Daily Worker and Political Affairs articles did so support the policies of the Soviet Union, it was because the writers believed that they were correct policies, as I have tried to explain.

Q. Don't you consider that an evasive reply?

. . . . . .

16084 THE WITNESS: I don't think I can answer yes or no. I would like to explain my answer.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. All right, explain it. A. It is probably true that by and large the articles in the Daily Worker and the Political Affairs and very likely any articles which I wrote which involved specific details about the Soviet Union did agree with policies which were enunciated by the Soviet Union, because those writers and myself believed that those particular policies were right. As we see it, a socialist country is different from a capitalist country, and the policies of that country will be by the nature of things peaceful and by the nature of things for the best interests of their people.

Now, it is our opinion that a peaceful policy is then to the best interests also of the American people, and we believe that the best interests of the people of the Soviet Union and the people of this country coincide. We have never taken the position—I certainly never have in my writing—that was in any way contradictory to the best interests of the American people as I conceive them.

16085 Q. And you say that that is the reason why you can not cite a single instance when the views and policies of the Soviet Union were criticized in the Communist press, and not because you Communists owe allegiance to the Soviet Union? A. That is correct. It is not because of this false charge of allegiance to the Soviet Union. It is because of, as I stated, the fact that we believe that the best interests of the American people and the people of the Soviet Union coincide and if our administrations acted in that spirit, there would be peace between these two great countries, and they together with England and France and China could guarantee and establish peace in the world.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16093 Q. All right. Let us consider that that is the fact. The Party then was a member of the Communist Internationale from 1921 until the time it withdrew. A. Until the time it withdrew. That is the best of my knowledge and belief, yes.

Q. And you say the resolution of disaffiliation was discussed in the National Committee previously? A. That is right.

Q. You were then on the National Committee. A. That is correct.

Q. And you say it was clearly understood that there will be no further affiliations, but we still had comradely feelings. Did you so testify? A. Yes, that we were not disaffiliating in anger, or disaffiliating to fight the Communist Internationale. It was, you might say, a friendly divorce.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16099 Q. You say, Miss Flynn, that to your knowledge there has never been a Communist Internationale representative in this country? A. Yes, that is correct, to my knowledge there never has been.

Q. You mean to say that Eisler was not? A. No, Eisler was not to my knowledge a Communist Internationale representative.

Q. Did you ever see him in the Communist Party headquarters building? A. No, I don't think I ever met 16100 him in the Communist Party headquarters building. I have no recollection of it.

Q. Do you know whether or not he submitted articles for publication in the Daily Worker? A. No, I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. You testified for him? A. Pardon me?

Q. You testified for him in his trial. A. Yes, I testified as to a particular point that arose in his trial on associate membership in our Party.

Q. Did you know him as Hans Berger? A. No, I didn't know him as Hans Berger. I only knew him as Gerhardt Eisler.

Q. You didn't know him as Edwards? A. No, I never heard of him as Edwards.

Q. Was he just in retirement over here in the United States? A. My understanding is that he came to the United States as a political refugee from the Nazis on his way to Mexico, and was held up here in the United States, and that he never intended to remain in the United States. He wanted to go back to his own country.

Q. How long did he stay? A. He was ready to 16101 leave and take his trip about the time he was arrested.

Q. You didn't answer my question. We can get through if you will answer my question. A. I don't know how long he stayed. I don't know the exact date of when he came and I don't know the exact date when he left. A few years.

16112 Q. You say you read Gates' testimony. Did you read both the direct and the cross? A. I read it as thoroughly as I could. I mean, Mr. Paisley, I didn't read every single word of it, because it was handed to me about the day before I came here. I just could not read the whole thing, every word. I tried to get the gist of it. I tried to get the full meaning of it, yes.

16118 Q. Did you write any criticism of Browder before the Duclos article came out? A. No, I don't think I did.

Q. Did you denounce him in any public speech before it came out? A. May I correct you, Mr. Paisley. There was no Duclos letter. It was an article. Did you say letter?

Q. I thought I said article. A. No, I don't think I did.

Q. Did you ever denounce him to his face before the Duclos article came out? A. We had some very heated discussions within the Executive Committee meetings of the National Committee, yes.

Q. And that was when he was general secretary 16119 of the Party? A. That is right. Well, he was President of the Communist Political Association at the time.

Q. Did any other Communist Party leader to your knowledge write anything derogatory of him before the Duclos article came out? A. The name of Earl Browder may not have been mentioned in such articles, but there were articles written by Mr. Foster which did criticize the policies of Earl Browder and which any Party member would understand were criticisms of him.

Q. Are you referring to the famous Foster letter that was suppressed? A. No, even prior to that. I recall there was an article in the magazine "Masses," in which Browder made the remark that Foster seems to be following one line and I seem to be following another, and introduced this article to the National Committee in protest.

Q. The Foster letter was not released over here to the membership before it appeared in the Duclos article, was it? A. Not to the membership. It was made known to the National Committee.

Q. And was suppressed? A. In the sense that it 16120 was not made know to the membership, yes, that is correct.

Q. And didn't Browder agree to that suppression as a tactical measure during the United Front Period? A. You mean Foster?

Q. I mean Foster. A. Yes, he so stated, not just the United Front period, not to create disunity within the Party during the war.

. . . . . .

16128 Q. Did you ever disagree with Joseph Stalin? A. Mr. Stalin has expressed opinions on a great many subjects, and I am not qualified to answer. I don't know whether I agree with him on every subject.

16129 Mr. Brown: That is not the question.

The Witness: I just don't know.

Mr. Brown: The question was not did you always agree with Mr. Stalin. Did you ever disagree with him was the question.

The Witness: No, I have never disagreed with him.

. . . . . .

16134 Q. Has the Communist Party in the United States taken a position on the charge of germ warfare made by the Russians against the United States?

. . . . . .

The Witness: I don't think that charge is made by the Russians. I think that charge has been made by an international—

Mr. Brown: The question, Miss Flynn, is: Has the Communist Party taken any position in regard to it?

Mr. Marcantonio: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

The Witness: I object to calling it a charge by the Russians.

. . . . . .

16137 Q. Do you take any position as to whether or not the charge is true? A. When a charge is made by so many different people in different parts of the world, it certainly is worthy of very careful investigation and not just flat denials.

Q. Do you believe it is true? A. I believe it is true, yes, I am sorry to say as an American.

Q. But you have no personal knowledge of the facts? A. I haven't been in Korea, Mr. Paisley, no.

• • • • • • • • • • •

16142 Q. Isn't it a fact that every document in writing, such as the ones I have just mentioned, which may have a tendency to prove domination and control from abroad, the advocacy of force and violence, and the purpose of the Communists in this country to bring about a Soviet America, are at this time in this day referred to by you Communists as obsolete?

• • • • • • • • • • •

16143 THE WITNESS: I testified that in the instance of at least one of these books, I was told that practically at the time I joined the Party that the book was out of date. Mr. Foster many years ago testified before Congressional Committees that he considered his book was immature and incorrect and he repudiated the ideas in that book. That is not 1952, that is quite a long time ago.

By MR. PAISLEY:

Q. He also repudiated his statement that the Red Flag was the flag of the workers of this country, too, didn't he? A. Yes, he did. He said he thought it was sectarianism, leftism, and so forth.

Q. He at one time made the statement, did he not? A. He made the statement.

Q. When did he repudiate it? A. Before one of these Congressional Committees.

Q. When? A. I don't know the exact date, Mr. Paisley. It is a long time ago.

Q. Do you have any recollection at all? A. I think it would be in the late thirties or early forties.

Q. Late thirties? About 1939? A. Yes.

Q. About the time that Gitlow testified openly 16144 down there? A. I didn't keep track when Gitlow testified.

Q. You were on the National Committee at that time, were you not? A. Yes, I was on the National Committee.

Q. So that for 20 years in these United States, he has not openly repudiated that statement?

* * * * * * * * * * *

Q. Is that right? A. I don't know when he made the statement in the first place. I do know he repudiated the statement. That is to the best of my knowledge.

Q. When did he write "Toward A Soviet America"? A. He must have written that a long time ago, too. I don't know. Probably in the period that I was in Oregon because I don't remember the book being published.

Q. Has the Party in the United States ever engaged in espionage directly or indirectly to your knowledge? A. It has not.

Q. Has it ever aided by furnishing any members of the Party to so engage? A. It has not.

Q. Did any Party leader, including Browder, ever 16145 furnish any members of the Party, or recommend any members of the Party, to engage in that type of activity? A. To my knowledge during the period that I have been a member of the Party I know of no such transactions.

Q. Have any members of the Communist Party in this country ever been convicted of espionage? A. No, I don't think anyone ever has been.

Q. Was Harry Gold a member of the Party? A. I don't think so.

Q. Were the Rosenbergs members of the Party? A. I think not.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16148 Herbert Aptheker was recalled as a witness, and hav-16149 ing been previously duly sworn, was examined and testified further as follows:

* * * * * * * * * * *

* * * * * * * * * * *

16246 Q. You wouldn't even state that at the time the policy of self-determination of the Negro people and the Black Belt was enunciated by the party that it was the policy advocated by the majority of the Negro people, or even a majority of their leaders, would you? A. No. No, not in the developed sense in which the party put it forward. It still isn't.

• • • • • • • • • • •

16252 Q. If the Communists were successful in gaining control of government in these countries which currently have Bourgeois governments, would opposing political parties be allowed to exist and publicize their 16253 views? A. They would.

Q. For how long? A. For as long as different classes existed. With the existence of different classes there are different parties.

Q. But it would be the purpose of the Communist Party if it had control of such a government to stamp out all classes but the working class, would it not? A. What do you mean by "stamp out"?

Q. Eliminate by any means by which they might be able to exert power? A. No, that is wrong. The way you put it is false.

Q. Would the Communist Party share the leadership with any other political party? A. When?

Q. If it were able to get into a position of leadership in a country, would it be willing to share that leadership with some other party? A. Not only would it be willing, it is willing. It shares it now, for instance, in China. Five or six or seven or eight parties are a part of the Chinese government at this point. The same is true in North Korea.

Q. Parties independent of the Communist Party?
16254 A. That is right.

• • • • • • • • • • •

16259 Q. Would an anti-Communist Party press be permitted to exist once the Communist Party has gained the position of leadership in a country? A. Yes. There are anti-Communist press—I won't say anti—there are non-Communist presses which exist in, are and continue to exist, though the Communist Party is in leadership. By the way, this happened in the Soviet Union.

Q. Would an anti-Communist Party press be— A. Yes, I would say it would, and it did in the Soviet Union for a time.

Q. For how long? A. For how long?

Q. Yes. A. Until there developed a sufficient unanimity on the part of the social order and of the people that it became clear that this press was a press in the pay of the interventionalists and counter-revolutionary. It is then that it is not permitted. It is exactly the same as after the American Revolution. During the American Revolution, for 10, 12, 14, years, no Tory press was permitted in any area controlled by the American revolutionists, because this was not a difference of opinion, this was an expression of clear and open treason at the moment's crisis.

* * * * * * * * * *

16331 Q. All right, do they have democracy in the Soviet Union? A. In the Soviet Union they have what they call democracy, proletariat democracy, that is, the democracy commensurate with a socialist society.

Q. Democracy as used in the United States includes such concepts as freedom of the press, freedom to maintain religious institutions without the control of the government, freedom to maintain political parties, whose objectives are to vote out the men holding national office and vote in different men, freedom to advocate a change in our economic system by constitutional means, freedom to oppose the policies of duly elected leaders, such freedoms as that, does it not? A. Is that what democracy means in the United States, is that what you are asking?

Q. I am asking you democracy as used in this country, when we talk about the term "democracy," democratic rights, we are speaking about such things as I enumerated;

now, would you like me to enumerate them separately so you could say yes or no individually? A. Well, it doesn't matter whether you do it; we are speaking about a 16332 Bourgeois democratic republic in which such rights have been achieved by the people after generations of very bitter struggle. That is what we are speaking about, yes. That is what I am talking about.

Q. Do these freedoms exist in the Soviet Union?—would you like me to take them separately? A. Sure.

Q. Freedom of the press, does that exist in the Soviet Union? A. Yes.

Q. Freedom to maintain religious institutions without the control of the government? A. Yes.

Q. Freedom to maintain political parties whose objective is to vote out the men holding national office and vote in different men? A. Impossible to exist; again, freedoms of—are not nebulous, freedoms are concrete. Such a freedom is impossible to exist because there is one class. Parties reflect classes. If you have one class, a Mr. Calhoun knew in 1828, practically every other political economist from Aristotle up knew if you have one class you are going to have one political party, therefore this freedom is not applicable to a socialist society such as, for example, the freedom to own slaves is non-applicable to our society. Nobody is free to do that. They used to be, but they are not any more.

16333 Q. Freedom to advocate a change in the economic system by constitutional means? A. Well, not really; again, it is academic. Of course, if you speak of the movement of socialism and Communism, which is a great economic change, you are not only free to advocate; everybody is doing the best he can to bring it about.

Q. Freedom to oppose the policies of the duly elected leaders? A. By all means, with the most severe criticism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16346 Q. What position does Mr. Molotov hold? A. I am not positive, but he holds a high position.

Q. How about Manlenkov? A. I testified yesterday that I don't know his title.

Q. You know that both of these gentlemen hold positions of great authority, do you not? A. Yes.

16348 Q. But you deny that the government of the Soviet Union is in the form of a dictatorship of a political party? You deny that? A. That is right. It isn't a dictatorship of a party. It is a dictatorship of a class.

16389 Q. Members of the Communist Party are urged very strongly to read the Daily Worker regularly, are they not? A. Yes, they are.

16420 Q. As a witness in this case, do you stand disinterested as between the parties? A. No, I am not disinterested.

16421 Q. Would you say that you are profoundly interested in the outcome of this case? A. Yes. All Americans are.

Q. You so testified in Baltimore, did you not, when you testified in that case for the Communist defendants? A. Yes. I said I was profoundly interested in the case.

Q. Did you not testify that your interest in that case was that the democratic way of life was at stake, that the fact of freedom, that the fact of peace, everything you valued, more than your life, you thought was involved there?

16422 Did you so testify? A. I think that is an accurate quotation, Mr. Paisley.

Q. And is your interest in this case on the same level? A. Yes, I am profoundly concerned about this case.

16440 Q. Were you consulted about the answer that the Communist Party filed in these proceedings? A. The answer?

Q. Yes, A. Do you have it? That would refresh me.

Q. I have a copy of it here, if you want to look at it. A. Just so I can know exactly what you are talking about, Mr. Paisley.

Q. It is filed by Gus Hall. A. Just so I can see what it is.

Q. It is called an amended answer. (Handing to the 16441 witness). A. I see. Yes. Yes, I was asked to pitch in, make some suggestions of a historical character. I said, yes, immediately as I saw page 4, where there is a quotation from Metternich, for instance. I remember very distinctly that I offered that, because I thought that that was to the point.

Q. How long were you employed in working on the answer? A. What do you mean by employed? Was I paid? Is that what you mean?

Q. How much time did you devote to it? That is a very simple question. A. I appreciate the simplicity. That again would have to be a very approximate answer. I don't know. I'd say a few hours. It might have been three and a half or four and a half hours dispersed over evenings.

* * * * * * * * * *

16455 Q. You spoke about imperialism. I want to get this straight. Do you Communists in the United States contend that the United States is a leading imperialist nation of the world? A. Yes.

Q. And that the Soviet Union is not? A. The Soviet Union is not an imperialist nation.

Q. That's exactly what the Soviet Union contends, 16456 isn't it. A. I believe so.

* * * * * * * * * *

Q. Yes. Have you ever written or said anything 16457 that is opposed to the views and policies of the Soviet Union? A. Opposed to what?

Q. Of the Soviet Union? A. I don't think so. When I have written on subjects which were pertinent to that, I don't think that there has been a clash of views, because of the fundamental precept of Marxism-Leninism in each case.

. . . . . .

16458 Q. Now, at the trial in Baltimore, didn't you state at one time in your testimony that the Party had never stood for the overthrow of government by force and violence? A. I am confident that I did, because I believe that.

Q. When you were confronted with a quotation from Foster's book, "From Bryan to Stalin" as follows: "We need look only to the fascist terror in Germany, Italy and Spain to realize the correctness of this whole anal-16459 ysis of Lenin's analysis of the futility of the social reformists' plan of bringing socialism through purely parliamental acts," did you not then say that the first part of that quoted sentence was an illustration of the Marxist-Leninist concept of violence and terror coming from Fascist minority, and that the second part of the sentence would not have been asserted by Foster for the past 13 years? A. That's right.

Q. So on one day down there you said that the party had never advocated force and violence, and then a day or two later, when you were under cross examination and were confronted with that quotation from Foster's book, you practically admitted that the Party at one time did so advocate? A. No, Mr. Paisley, that is not correct. Do you want me to explain that?

Q. Yes, I would like to know what you meant, that Foster wouldn't have asserted that for 13 years. A. Because objective conditions have changed so that it is the belief now, which has been developing in the whole Communist movement, that the forces of Socialism are so strong and are going so strong and that with the whole policy of the United Front and Popular Front and people's government, that you can get sufficient strength to hold off the organizaion of counter revolutionary force and violence—Fas-16460 cist elements, as in Italy and Spain and Germany, in that quotation, so that you would not have to have resistance to this counter revolutionary force and violence. Do you see my point?

Q. What was the significance of your statement there about the past 13 years that he wouldn't have asserted that for the past 13 years? A. Because the analysis of the world situation has changed because of the change in objective conditions, and the feeling now is very prevalent amongst Communists that you have greater and greater possibility of the peaceful transition into Socialism, because the capacity of the reactionaries to organize forcible repression to the will of the people is constantly being undermined. That is the point.

Q. But prior to the 13 years ago, using your own words, the Communist Party in this country did advocate force and violence? A. No, sir.

Q. Won't you admit that? A. No. I state again what I have stated just now to you in the past five minutes. Shall I do it again?

Q. No. You don't need to do it again. I just wanted you to explain your position. A. All right. I have done the best I can.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16464 Q. All right. Then I'll ask you this question. Did not the Daily Worker publish an article on February 17, 1930, entitled "Lovestone—State's Witness" containing the following language: "This record is valuable—" A. Pardon me. May I interrupt. Have I been asked to identify this in any way?

Q. I am asking you if the Daily Worker didn't publish this article? If you don't know, you can say so.
16465 If you do know, you can say so. A. Do you want me to answer that question now?

Q. No, I want to read it to you.

* * * * * * * * * * *

16466 Q. Now, I am quoting: "This record is very valuable, not only in properly evaluating political role of Lovestone as a right wing enemy of the Communist International and the Communist Party of the United States, but also as an object lesson for all comrades of the kind of attitude toward the courts which is absolutely impermissible in a party member. It is the duty of Communists to throw every possible obstacle in the way of conviction of their fellow party members in the courts, to defend these members by all possible means, and absolutely refuse to give testimony for the state in any form. Testimony of Communists can only be given for the defense of Communists, not for the state, and then it must be based upon uncompromising defense of the party and its program. And anyone who trades his testimony to the state for personal immunity from prosecution should be unhesitantly kicked out of the movement."

The question is, did the Daily Worker publish that article? A. I don't know, sir. I was 14 years old when that appeared.

Q. Do you deny that that is a principle of the Communist Party today? A. That is a principle, what you read.

16467 Q. What I read? A. I assert that what you read is not any different from what I tried to say here.

MR. BROWN: Please answer the question.

MR. ABT: Would you like to see the article?

THE WITNESS: It would be helpful because some of the words I didn't like.

. . . . . .

16468 THE WITNESS: I would offer objection to that article. I don't agree with it. I don't agree with its terminology, and particularly with the last sentence. I think it is too sweeping. I think the expression is rather sectarian. I personally have a feeling that that is an excerpt from an article. I don't think it is the whole thing.

. . . . . .

RECROSS EXAMINATION

By MR. PAISLEY:

16476 Q. Who in the Army knew that you were a member of the Communist Party? A. It would be easier in terms of any contact I had with, Mr. Paisley, as who didn't. What I am trying to say, I never questioned a superior officer and said, "Now, Colonel Allen, or whoever it is, do you know that I am a member of the Communist Party?"

I did not mean to convey that. What I mean to convey and what I say is, that my views were a matter of public knowledge.

I had written under my own name always, and did while I was in the Army. I spoke freely. I delivered the orientation lectures. People knew that, and now that you ask that, this comes to my mind.

I was publicly denounced in the press in the Hearst Press, I suppose to embarrass the government, I don't know, but I was publicly denounced by name because I was a 16477 commissioned officer overseas, and a Communist.

Now, I was overseas, couldn't come back and so forth, wasn't even asked to, but Major General Bissell, who was then Army G-2, personally appeared before the Congressional Committee Investigating Committee, I don't remember what kind it was, and he stated that he had examined my record, that the only force and violence that I ever used, I was using then in fighting Germany, and General Bissell was kind enough to say that he wished all the officers in the United States had my record.

So this was, as I say, public knowledge. It was known in the outfit, for instance, when I was overseas. In fact, the guys knew it before I did.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

16486 Q. What do you say that Lenin meant by this sentence: "We repudiate all morality that is taken outside of human class concepts"? A. Exactly what I said; that is, Marxist-Leninists are materialists, historical materialists, and they do not think that morality is something which is suspended in the clouds and has no relationship to social economic reality. On the contrary.

For instance, I will give you this example. Aristotle wrote a great deal and he lived in a slave society, but you will not find a word in Aristotle condemnatory of slavery.

The reason for that is not that Aristotle had a pygmy brain or was a moral idiot. The reason for that is that since he lived in a slave society, he acquiesced and accepted it. You and I don't.

This is an example of the fact that morality is tied to socio-economic reality. That is what Lenin is saying there. Morality is not independent of social organization. It is dependent upon social organization.

Q. Do you contend then that this quotation does not mean that if testifying falsely would serve the class struggle, it would not be immoral? A. That if testifying falsely would serve the class struggle, it would not be immoral? You have so many negatives in there, I am not sure which answer conveys my meaning.

16488 Q. Well, let me put it to you this way. If testifying falsely would serve the ends of the class struggle an effort to bring about the dictatorship of the proletariat, would you consider that to be immoral? A. You cannot abstract this from actual conditions. What I mean 16489 by that is, as a general principle, as a rule I will assert to you, yes, it is immoral to testify falsely, and means and ends are conjoined and not separate, and therefore if you have a moral movement, to serve it will not require immoral ends.

It is, however, true, as I testified a moment ago, that if you have an absolute tyrannical kind of a society, which we do not have, and I hope we will not have, but if you did have,—let me be concrete. I will give you an example in terms of my own specialty.

Douglass tried to escape slavery. He is arrested. When he is arrested he is brought before a magistrate.

The magistrate says to him, "Did you try to escape from slavery? Did you write this?"

Douglass says, "No, I didn't."

Now, if you ask me which is the immoral person in this colloquy, I will say to you that the immoral person is the magistrate, and the moral person in that case was Frederick Douglass. So again it is not absolutes that we are dealing with here.

In our society, in our life, and in my position, the position of my party, and with the remaining freedoms that we have in our country in the unity of means and ends, it is immoral to testify falsely. I have not done so. I would not do so.

16490 Q. It is? A. I say it is immoral.

Q. You say that the McCarran Act itself is an immoral piece of legislation, don't you? A. I do.

MR. PAISLEY: That's all I want to know. That's all.

By MR. MARCANTONIO:

Q. Do you believe in testifying falsely in fighting the McCarran Act? A. No, certainly not. I have said a thousand times I testified truthfully.

Q. Despite the fact that you are most seriously opposed to the McCarran Act? A. Certainly. I want to by democratic process change it.

THESES AND STATUTES OF THE THIRD (COMMUNIST) INTERNATIONAL

ADOPTED BY THE SECOND CONGRESS
JULY 17TH—AUGUST 7TH, 1920.

Publishing Office of the Communist International Moscow, 1920

STATUTES OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Communist International makes its aim to put up an armed struggle for the overthrow of the International bourgeoisie and to create an International Soviet Republic as a transition stage to the complete abolition of the State. The Communist International considers the dictatorship of the proletariat as the only means for the liberation of humanity from the horrors of capitalism. The Communist International considers the Soviet form of government as the historically evolved form of this dictatorship of the proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Communist International is aware that for the purpose of a speedy achievement of victory the International Association of Workers, which is struggling for the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of Communism, should possess a firm and centralized organization. To all intents and purposes the Communist International should represent a single universal Communist Party, of which the parties operating in every country form individual sections. The organized apparatus of the Communist International is to secure to the toilers of every country the possibility at any given moment of obtaining the maximum of aid from the organized workers of the other countries.

For this purpose the Communist International confirms the following items of its statutes:

§ 1. The new International Association of Workers is established for the purpose of organizing common activity of the workers of various countries who are striving towards a single aim: the overthrow of capitalism; the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat and of the International Soviet Republic; the complete abolition of classes, and the realization of socialism—the first step of Communist Society.

§ 2. The new International Association of Workers has been given the name of The Communist International.

§ 3. All the parties and organizations comprising the Communist International bear the name of the Communist party of the given country (section of the Communist International).

§ 4. The World Congress of all parties and organizations which form part of the Communist International, is the supreme organ of this International. The World Congress confirms the programmes of the various parties comprising the Communist International. The World Congress discusses and decides the more important questions of programme and tactics, which are connected with the activity of the Communist International. The number of decisive votes at the World Congress for every party and organization is determined by a special regulation of the Congress; it is found necessary to strive for a speedy establishment of a standard of representation on the basis of the actual number of the members of the organization and the real influence of the party in question.

§ 5. The World Congress elects an Executive Committee of the Communist International which serves as the leading organ of the Communist International in the interval between the convention of World Congresses, and is responsible only to the World Congress.

§ 6. The residence of the Executive Committee of the Communist International is every time decided at the World Congress of the Communist International.

§ 7. A Special World Congress of the Communist International may be convened either by regulation of the Executive Committee, or at the demand of one-half of the number of the parties which were part of the Communist International at the last World Congress.

§ 8. The chief bulk of the work and greatest responsibility in the Executive Committee of the Communist International lie with the party of that country where, in keeping with the regulation of the World Congress, the Executive Committee finds its residence at the time. The party of the country in question sends to the Executive Committee not less than five members with a decisive vote. In addition to this, one representative with a decisive vote is sent to the Communist International from ten or twelve of the largest communist parties. The list of these representatives is to be confirmed by the Universal Congress of the Communist International. The remaining parties and organizations forming part of the Communist International enjoy the right of sending to the Executive Committee one representative each with a consultative vote.

§ 9. The Executive Committee is the leading organ of the Communist International between the conventions; the Executive Committee publishes in no less than four languages the central organ of the Communist International (the periodical "The Communist International"). The Executive Committee makes the necessary appeals on behalf of the Communist International, and issues instructions obligatory on all the parties and organizations which form part of the Communist International. The Executive Committee of the Communist International enjoys the right to demand from the affiliated parties the exclusion of groups of members who are guilty of the infringement of international proletarian discipline, as well as the exclusion from the Communist International of parties guilty of the infringement of the regulations of the World Congress. In the event of necessity the Executive Committee organizes in various countries its technical and auxiliary bureaus, which are entirely under the control of the Executive Committee.

§ 10. The Executive Committee of the Communist International enjoys the right to include in its ranks representatives of organizations and parties not accepted in the Communist International, but which are sympathetic towards communism; these are to have a consultative vote only.

§ 11. The organs of all the parties and organizations forming part of the Communist International as well as of those which are recognized sympathizers of the Communist International, are obliged to publish all official regulations of the Communist International and of its Executive Committee.

§ 12. The general state of things in the whole of Europe and of America makes necessary for the communists of the whole world an obligatory formation of illegal communist organizations along with those existing legally. The Executive Committee should take charge of the universal application of this rule.

§ 13. All the most important political relations between the individual parties forming part of the Communist International will generally be carried on through the medium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. In cases of exigency direct relations will be established, with the provision, however, that the Executive Committee of the Communist International shall be informed of them at the same time.

§ 14. The Trade Unions that have accepted the Communist platform and are united on an international scale under the control of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, form Trade Union Sections of the Communist International. The Communist Trade Unions send their representatives to the World Congresses of the Communist International through the medium of the Communist parties of their respective countries. Trade Union sections of the Communist International delegate a representative with decisive vote to the Executive Committee of the Communist International. The Executive Committee of the Communist International enjoys the right of sending a representative with decisive vote, to the Trade Union section of the Communist International.

§ 15. The International League of Communist Youth is subordinate to the Communist International and its Executive Committee. One representative of the Executive Committee of the International League of Communist Youth with a decisive vote is delegated to the Executive Committee of the Communist International. The Executive Committee of the Communist International, on the other hand, enjoys the right of sending a representative with a decisive vote to the Executive organ of the International League of Youth. Organization relations between the League of Youth and the Communist party are basically defined in every country after the same system.

§ 16. The Executive Committee of the Communist International confirms the International Secretary of the Communist Women's Movement, and organizes a women's section of the Communist International.

§ 17. In case a member of the Communist International goes to another country, he is to have the fraternal support of the local members of the Third International.

I. The Substance of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat and of the Soviet Power.

* * * * * * * * * *

3. Under the circumstances which have been created in the whole world, and especially in the most advanced, most powerful, most enlightened and freest capitalist countries by militarist imperialism—oppression of colonies and weaker nations, the universal imperialist slaughter, the "peace" of Versailles—to admit the idea of a voluntary submission of the capitalists to the will of the majority of the exploited, of a peaceful, reformist passage to Socialism, is not only to give proof of an extreme petty bourgeois stupidity, but it is a direct deception of the workmen, a disguisal of capitalist wage-slavery, a concealment of the truth. This truth is that the bourgeoisie, the most enlightened and democratic portion the bourgeoisie, is even now not stopping at deceit and crime, at the slaughter of millions of workmen and peasants, in order to retain the right of private ownership over the means of production. Only a violent defeat of the bourgeoisie, the confiscation of its property, the annihilation of the entire bourgeois governmental apparatus, parliamentary, judicial, military, bureaucratic, administrative, municipal, etc., even the individual exile or internment of the most stubborn and dangerous exploiters, the establishment of a strict control over them for the repression of all inevitable attempts at resistance and restoration of capitalist slavery—only such measures will be able to guarantee the complete submission of the whole class of exploiters.

* * * * * * * * * * *

II. In What Should the Immediate Preparation for Dictatorship of the Proletariat Consist?

* * * * * * * * * * *

In every organization, union, association—beginning with the proletarian ones at first, and afterwards in all those of the nonproletarian workers and exploited masses (political, professional, military, co-operative, educational, sporting, etc., etc.) must be formed groups or nuclei of Communists—mostly open ones, but also secret ones which become necessary in each case when the arrest or exile of their members or the dispersal of their organization is threatened; and these nuclei, in close contact with one another and with the central Party, exchanging experiences, carrying on the work of propaganda, campaign, organization, adapting themselves to all the branches of social life, to all the various forms and subdivisions of the working masses, must systematically train themselves, the Party, the class, and the masses by such multiform work.

* * * * * * * * * * *

For all countries, even for most free "legal" and "peaceful" ones in the sense of a lesser acuteness in the class struggle, the period has arrived, when it has become absolutely necessary for every Communist party to join systematically lawful and unlawful work, lawful and unlawful organization.

In the most enlightened and free countries, with a most "solid" bourgeois-democratic regime, the governments are systematically recurring, in spite of their false and hypocritical assurances, to the method of keeping secret lists of Communists; to endless violations of their constitutions for the semi-secret support of White Guards and the murder of Communists in all countries; to secret preparations for the arrest of Communists; the introduction of provocateurs among the Communists, etc. Only the most reactionary petty bourgeoisie, by whatever high-sounding "democratic" or pacifist phrases it might disguise its ideas, can dispute this fact or the necessary conclusion; an immediate formation by all lawful Communist parties of unlawful organizations for systematic unlawful work, for their complete preparation at any moment to thwart any steps on the part of the bourgeoisie. It is especially necessary to carry on unlawful work in the army, navy, and police, as, after the imperialist slaughter, all the governments in the world are becoming afraid of the national armies, open to all peasants and workingmen, and they are setting up in secret all kinds of select military organizations recruited from the bourgeoisie and especially provided with improved technical equipment.

On the other hand, it is also necessary, in all cases without exception, not to limit oneself to unlawful work, but to carry on also lawful work overcoming all difficulties, founding a lawful press and lawful organizations under the most diverse, and in case of need, frequently changing names. This is now being done by the illegal Communist parties in Finland, in part in Germany, Poland, Latvia, etc. It is thus that the I. W. W. in America should act, as well as all the lawful Communist parties at present, in case prosecutors start prosecutions on the basis of resolutions of the congresses of the Communist International, etc.

The absolute necessity of the principle of unlawful and lawful work is determined not only by the total aggregate of all the peculiarities of the given moment, on the very eve of a proletarian dictatorship, but by the necessity of proving to the bourgeoisie, that there is not and can not be any branch of the work of which the Communists have not possessed themselves, and still more by the fact that everywhere there are still wide circles of the proletariat and greater ones of the non-proletarian workers and exploited masses, which still trust in the bourgeois democracy, the discussion of which is our most important duty.

* * * * * * * * * *

For the struggle against this state of things the Communist parties must create a new type of periodical press for extensive circulation among the workmen:

1) Lawful publications, in which the Communists without calling themselves such and without mentioning their connection with the party, learn to utilize the slightest liberty allowed by the laws, as the Bolsheviks did at the "time of the Tsar," after 1905.

2) Illegal sheets, although of the smallest dimensions and irregularly published, but reproduced in most of the printing offices by the workingmen (in secret, or if the movement has grown stronger, by means of a revolutionary seizure of the printing offices) giving the proletariat undiluted revolutionary information and the revolutionary mottoes.

Without a Communist press the preparation for the dictatorship of the proletariat is impossible.

* * * * * * * * * *

Conditions of Admission to the Communist International

* * * * * * * * * *

The Second Congress of the Communist International rules that the conditions for joining the Communist International shall be as follows:

1. The general propaganda and agitation should bear a really Communist character, and should correspond to the programme and decisions of the Third International. The entire party press should be edited by reliable Communists who have proved their loyalty to the cause of the proletarian revolution. The dictatorship of the proletariat should not be spoken of simply as a current hackneyed formula, it should be advocated in such a way that its necessity should be apparent to every rank-and-file working man and woman, to each soldier and peasant, and should emanate from every-day facts systematically recorded by our press day by day.

All periodicals and other publications, as well as all party publications and editions, are subject to the control of the presidium of the party, independently of whether the party is legal or illegal. The editors should in no way be given an opportunity to abuse their autonomy and carry on a policy not fully corresponding to the policy of the party.

Wherever the followers of the Third International have access, and whatever means of propaganda are at their disposal, whether the columns of newspapers, popular meetings, labor unions or co-operatives,—it is indispensable for them not only to denounce the bourgeoisie, but also its assistants and agents—reformists of every color and shade.

2. Every organization desiring to join the Communist International shall be bound systematically and regularly to remove from all the responsible posts in the labor movement (Party organizations, editors, labor unions, parliamentary factions, co-operatives, municipalities, etc.), all reformists and followers of the "centre," and to have them replaced by Communists, even at the cost of replacing at the beginning "experienced" men by rank-and-file working men.

3. The class struggle in almost every country of Europe and America is entering the phase of civil war. Under such conditions the Communists can have no confidence in bourgeois laws. They should create everywhere a parallel illegal apparatus, which at the decisive moment should do its duty by the party, and in every way possible assist the revolution. In every country where, in consequence of martial law or of other exceptional laws, the Communists are unable to carry on their work lawfully, a combination of lawful and unlawful work is absolutely necessary.

4. A persistent and systematic propaganda and agitation is necessary in the army, where Communist groups should be formed in every military organization. Wherever, owing to repressive legislation, agitation becomes impossible, it is necessary to carry on such agitation illegally. But refusal to carry on or participate in such work should be considered equal to treason to the revolutionary cause, and incompatible with affiliation with the Third International.

5. A systematic and regular propaganda is necessary in the rural districts. The working class can gain no victory unless it possesses the sympathy and support of at least part of the rural workers and of the poor peasants, and unless other sections of the population are equally utilized. Communist work in the rural districts is acquiring a predominant importance during the present period. It should be carried on through Communist workingmen of both city and country who have connections with the rural districts. To refuse to do this work, or to transfer such work to untrustworthy half reformists, is equal to renouncing the proletarian revolution.

6. Every party desirous of affiliating with the Third International should renounce not only avowed social patriotism, but also the falsehood and the hypocrisy of social pacifism; it should systematically demonstrate to the workers that without a revolutionary overthrow of capitalism no international arbitration, no talk of disarmament, no democratic reorganization of the League of Nations will be capable of saving mankind from new Imperialist wars.

7. Parties desirous of joining the Communist International must recognize the necessity of a complete and absolute rupture with reformism and the policy of the "centrists," and must advocate this rupture amongst the widest circles of the party membership, without which condition a consistent Communist policy is impossible. The Communist International demands unconditionally and peremptorily that such rupture be brought about with the least possible delay. The Communist International cannot reconcile itself to the fact that such avowed reformists as for instance Turati, Modigliani, Kautsky, Hillquit, Longuet, Macdonald and others should be entitled to consider themselves members of the Third International. This would make the Third International resemble the Second International.

8. In the Colonial question and that of the oppressed nationalities there is necessary an especially distinct and clear line of conduct of the parties of countries where the bourgeoisie possesses such colonies or oppresses other nationalities. Every party desirous of belonging to the Third International should be bound to denounce without any reserve all the methods of "its own" Imperialists in the colonies, supporting not only in words but practically a movement of liberation in the colonies. It should demand the expulsion of its own Imperialists from such colonies, and cultivate among the workingmen of its own country a truly fraternal attitude towards the working population of the colonies and oppressed nationalities, and carry on a systematic agitation in its own army against every kind of oppression of the colonial population.

9. Every party desirous of belonging to the Communist International should be bound to carry on systematic and persistent Communist work in the labor unions, co-operatives and other labor organizations of the masses. It is necessary to form Communist groups within the organizations, which by persistent and lasting work should win over labor unions to Communism. These groups should constantly denounce the treachery of the social patriots and of the fluctuations of the "centre." These Communist groups should be completely subordinated to the party in general.

10. Any party belonging to the Communist International is bound to carry on a stubborn struggle against the Amsterdam "International" of the yellow labor unions. It should propagate insistently amongst the organized workers the necessity of a rupture with the yellow Amsterdam International. It should support by all means in its power the International Unification of Red Labor Unions, adhering to the Communist International, which is now beginning.

11. Parties desirous of joining the Third International shall be bound to inspect the personnel of their parliamentary factions, to remove all unreliable elements therefrom, to control such factions, not only verbally but in reality, to subordinate them to the Central Committee of the party, and to demand from each proletarian Communist that he devote his entire activity to the interests of real revolutionary propaganda.

12. All parties belonging to the Communist International should be formed on the basis of the principle of democratic centralization. At the present time of acute civil war the Communist Party will be able fully to do its duty only when it is organized in a sufficiently thorough way, when it possesses an iron discipline, and when its party centre enjoys the confidence of the members of the party, who are to endow this centre with complete power, authority and ample rights.

13. The Communist parties of those countries where the Communist activity is legal, should make a clearance of their members from time to time, as well as those of the party organizations, in order systematically to free the party from the petty bourgeois elements which penetrate into it.

14. Each party desirous of affiliating with the Communist International should be obliged to render every possible assistance to the Soviet Republics in their struggle against all counter-revolutionary forces. The Communist parties should carry on a precise and definite propaganda to induce the workers to refuse to transport any kind of military equipment intended for fighting against the Soviet Republics, and should also by legal or illegal means carry on a propaganda amongst the troops sent against the workers' republics, etc.

15. All those parties which up to the present moment have stood upon the old social and democratic programmes should, within the shortest time possible, draw up a new Communist programme in conformity with the special conditions of their country, and in accordance with the resolutions of the Communist International. As a rule, the programme of each party belonging to the Communist International should be confirmed by the next congress of the Communist International or its Executive Committee. In the event of the failure of the programme of any party being confirmed by the Executive Committee of the Communist International, the said party shall be entitled to appeal to the Congress of the Communist International.

16. All the resolutions of the congresses of the Communist International, as well as the resolutions of the Executive Committee are binding for all parties joining the Communist International. The Communist International, operating under the conditions of most acute civil warfare, should be centralized in a better manner than the Second International. At the same time, the Communist International and the Executive Committee are naturally bound in every form of their activity to consider the variety of conditions under which the different parties have to work and struggle, and generally binding resolutions should be passed only on such questions upon which such resolutions are possible.

17. In connection with the above, all parties desiring to join the Communist International should alter their name. Each party desirous of joining the Communist International should bear the following name: Communist Party of such and such a country, section of the Third Communist International. The question of the renaming of a party is not only a formal one, but is a political question of great importance. The Communist International has declared a decisive war against the entire bourgeoisie world, and all the yellow Social Democratic parties. It is indispensable that every rank-and-file worker should be able clearly to distinguish between the Communist parties and the old official "Social Democratic" or "Socialist" parties, which have betrayed the cause of the working class.

18. All the leading organs of the press of every party are bound to publish all the most important documents of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

19. All those parties which have joined the Communist International, as well as those which have expressed a desire to do so, are obliged in as short a space of time as possible, and in no case later than four months after the Second Congress of the Communist International, to convene an Extraordinary Congress in order to discuss these conditions. In addition to this, the Central Committees of these parties should take care to acquaint all the local organizations with the regulations of the Second Congress.

20. All those parties which at the present time are willing to join the Third International, but have so far not changed their tactics in any radical manner, should, prior to their joining the Third International, take care that not less than two-thirds of their committee members and of all their central institutions should be composed of comrades who have made an open and definite declaration prior to the convening of the Second Congress, as to their desire that the party should affiliate with the Third International. Exclusions are permitted only with the confirmation of the Executive Committee of the Third International. The Executive Committee of the Communist International has the right to make an exception also for the representatives of the "centre" as mentioned in paragraph 7.

21. Those members of the party who reject the conditions and the theses of the Third International, are liable to be excluded from the party.

The Trade Union Movement, Factory Committees, and the Third International.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

Consequently, the Communists must strive to create as far as possible complete unity between the trade unions and the Communist party, and to subordinate the unions to the practical leadership of the Party, as the advance guard of the workers' revolutions. For this purpose the Communists should have Communist factions in all the trade unions and factory committees, and acquire by their means an influence over the labor movement and direct it.

THESES ON THE NATIONAL AND COLONIAL QUESTIONS.

A.) THESES.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The political situation of the world at the present time has placed the question of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the foreground, and all the events of world politics are inevitably concentrating around one point, namely, the struggle of the bourgeois world against the Russian Soviet Republic, which is grouping around itself the Soviet movements of the vanguard of the workers of all countries, and all national liberation movements of the colonial and subject countries, which have been taught by bitter experience that there can be no salvation for them outside of a union with the revolutionary proletariat, and the triumph of the Soviet power over Imperialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is likewise necessary, first, to explain constantly that only the Soviet regime is able to give the nations real equality, by uniting the proletariat and all the masses of the workers in the struggle against the burgeoisie; second, to support the revolutionary movement among the subject nations (for example, Ireland, American negroes, etc.) and in the colonies.

Political and Mass Action.

The Communist Party maintains that the class struggle is essentially a political struggle; that is, to conquer political power, destroy the bourgeois state machinery and establish the dictatorship of the proletariat in the form of a Soviet Government in the transition period from capitalism to Communism.

In those countries in which historical development has furnished the opportunity, the working class has utilized the regime of political democracy for its organization against capitalism. In all countries where the conditions for a proletarian revolution are not yet ripe, the same process will go on. The use of parliamentarism, however, is of secondary importance—for revolutionary propaganda and agitation only.

INTERNATIONAL DECIDES U. C. P. AND C. P. MUST UNITE

The following statement appears in the minutes of the Executive Committee of the Communist International:

The first month of the activity of the new Executive Committee of the Communist International, which had been formed on the 7th of August, was almost entirely dedicated to the most immediate problem of the movement, namely, to the consolidation of the Communist parties of every country, the elimination of the opportunist elements from them and the amalgamation of all truly Communist forces.

The sitting of the Executive Committee of the 8th and 10th of August were devoted to the questions of the American and the British movement. With regard to the first question the Executive Committee has decided to amalgamate both the American Communist Parties, the United Communist Party and the Communist Party into a single party.

The United Communist Party welcomes the decision of the Executive Committee of the International. Its policy has been consistently that of seeking to unite all the Communist elements in one organization. It will give all the aid within its power to the Executive Committee of the International to accomplish that end.

* * * * * * * * * *

PROGRAM OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF AMERICA

ADOPTED BY THE JOINT UNITY CONVENTION OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY AND THE UNITED COMMUNIST PARTY OF AMERICA.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Communist Party of America, section of the Communist International, defines the aims and processes of the proletarian revolution as follows:

* * * * * * * * * *

The proletariat, once having learned the disastrous consequences of "Social-Democratic" bolstering up of the bourgeois State, throws its support to the Communists. Under pressure of the economic chaos, and led by the Communist Party, the proletariat forms its organs of working class power entirely separate and distinct from the bourgeois State. These organs are the Workers' Soviets (councils) which arise at the moment of the revolutionary outbreak and attain a dominant position, during the course of the revolution.

By the use of force, the proletariat destroys the machinery of the bourgeois State and establishes the proletarian dictatorship based on Soviet power.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In order to overthrow the international bourgeoisie and to create an International Soviet Republic as a transition stage to the Communist Society, the Communist International will use all means at its disposal, including force of arms.

* * * * * * * * * * *

2. Greetings to the Third World Congress of the Communist International.

3. Greetings to the Soviet Republic.

The delegates of the Communist Party of America and the United Communist Party of America, assembled in joint Unity Convention, send fraternal greetings to the revolutionary proletariat and peasantry of Soviet Russia and to its vanguard, the Russian Communist Party.

The unified party, the Communist Party of America, declares that it will render all possible assistance to the Russian Soviet Republic in its struggle against the counter-revolutionary bands of the world imperialism. The Communist Party of America declares that only by the overthrow of world imperialism will the safety and mastery of the Soviet Republic over its enemies be definitely assured. The Communist Party of America pledges itself to rally the revolutionary proletariat of America for the annihilation of the most formidable stronghold of world imperialism: the American capitalist state, and to struggle for the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship. Down with world imperialism! Hail to the universal Soviet Republic! Long live the international solidarity of the workers!

4. To the Third World Congress of the Communist International.

The Unity Convention of the Communist of America and the United Communist Party of America fully upholds and endorses the firm and uncompromising stand of the Executive Committee of the Communist International against the opportunistic and centrist elements in various countries—in Italy (Serrati), and in Germany (Levi). The convention instructs its delegates to the third world congress to uphold and defend the stand of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

"THE FUTURE BELONGS TO THE COMMUNIST PARTY", SAYS GREETING OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

* * * * *

In the country of the most powerful imperialism and a most brutal capitalist class the Communist Party can fulfill its duty and can become the leader of the working class against imperialism and capitalist aggression only if it is united and if it is not torn to pieces by factional struggle.

The Comintern considers as one of the central tasks of the Party the extermination of all factionalism and the unification organizationally as well as ideologically. It will be the duty of the newly elected Central Executive Committee to lead the Party in a non-factional spirit and it will be the duty of the whole Party membership to rally around the Central Executive Committee which it itself shall have chosen.

MANIFESTO OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY BY KARL MARX AND FRIEDRICH ENGELS

Authorized English Translation

Copyright 1948, by

International Publishers Co., Inc.

PREFACE

BY FRIEDRICH ENGELS

The Manifesto being our joint production, I consider myself bound to state that the fundamental proposition which forms its nucleus, belongs to Marx. That proposition is: That in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch; that consequently the whole history of mankind (since the dissolution of primitive tribal society, holding land in common ownership) has been a history of class struggles, contests between exploiting and exploited, ruling and oppressed classes; that the history of these class struggles form a series of evolutions in which, nowadays, a stage has been reached where the exploited and oppressed class—the proletariat—cannot attain its emancipation from the sway of the exploiting and ruling class—the bourgeoisie—without at the same time, and once and for all, emancipating society at large from all exploitation, oppression, class distinctions and class struggles.

* * * * * * * * * *

BOURGEOIS AND PROLETARIANS

The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles.

* * * * * * * * * *

Society as a whole is more and more splitting up into two great hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other—bourgeoisie and proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * *

The bourgeoisie has played a most revolutionary role in history.

* * * * * * * * * *

This organisation of the proletarians into a class, and consequently into a political party, is continually being upset again by the competition between the workers themselves. But it ever rises up again, stronger, firmer, mightier. It compels legislative recognition of particular interests of the workers, by taking advantage of the divisions among the bourgeoisie itself.

* * * * * * * * * *

Of all the classes that stand face to face with the bourgeoisie today, the proletariat alone is a really revolutionary class.

* * * * * * * * * *

Proletarians and Communists

* * * * * * * * * *

The immediate aim of the Communists is the same as that of all the other proletarian parties: Formation of the proletariat into a class, overthrow of bourgeois supremacy, conquest of political power by the proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * *

We have seen above, that the first step in the revolution by the working class, is to raise the proletariat to the position of ruling class, to establish democracy.

The proletariat will use its political supremacy to wrest, by degrees, all capital from the bourgeoisie, to centralise all instruments of production in the hands of the state, i.e., of the proletariat organised as the ruling class; and to increase the total of productive forces as rapidly as possible.

Of course, in the beginning, this cannot be effected except by means of despotic inroads on the rights of property, and on the conditions of bourgeois production; by means of measures, therefore, which appear economically insufficient and untenable, but which, in the course of the movement, outstrip themselves, necessitate further inroads upon the old social order, and are unavoidable as a means of entirely revolutionising the mode of production.

These measures will of course be different in different countries.

* * * * * * * * * *

POSITION OF THE COMMUNISTS IN RELATION TO THE VARIOUS EXISTING OPPOSITION PARTIES

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their ends can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Let the ruling classes tremble at a Communist revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win.

Workingmen of all countries, unite!

RUTHENBERG AND FOSTER ELECTED TO COMINTERN

Dunne Represents U. S. Party In Moscow

* * * * * * * * * * *

Dunne will officially represent the party at the Communist International headquarters during the coming year. Foster, Workers Party candidate for President of the United States, and Ruthenberg, party secretary, will remain in America. Dunne's experience in the trade union movement is expected to be of great use to the international movement. The trade union question has assumed tremendous importance in key countries which may fall into line with Soviet Russia by setting up workers' and farmers' governments in the near future.

In Germany, especially, the question of Communist policy in the trade unions has become most vital. There the Communist International is directing the workers to stay within yellow unions wherever it is possible in order that the radicals who must lead the revolution may not be divided from their fellows.

Only Revolutionary Force.

The Communist International is going into the next year of struggle against the international capitalists with a confidence that comes from strength and from a knowledge of revolutionary tactics based on the party's experience in the last years. It is the one internationally revolutionary force, organised to overcome the common enemy.

REPORT OF THE WORKERS COMMUNIST PARTY OF AMERICA

1. Economic Situation.

The year 1925 was a year of tremendous production, showing substantial increases over 1924. The production of coal in 1925 was 517 million tons as compared with 508 million tons in 1924; of steel 44½ million tons as compared with 37½ million tons. For the first eleven months of 1925 new building construction totalled 5¼ billion dollars, which is 19% more than the entire year of 1924. The production of automobiles for 1925 reached the record figure of 4¾ million, which is 20% higher than in 1924. Imports for 1925 totalled over 4 billions, as compared with 3 billions in 1924. Exports in 1925 revealed approximately 4½ billions, as against 3½ billions in 1924. For the first 10 months of 1923 the total capital flotations amounted to almost 5 billions, as against 4¾ billiions for the whole year of 1924. The capital export for the first 11 months of 1925 was approximately 1 billion dollars, reaching the same high record as 1924, which included the big loans based upon the Dawes plan.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Amongst the farmers the situation is becoming critical, especially in the West. In Iowa, a typical grain growing state, reports come of acute distress among the farmers. The prices for corn received by the farmers has dropped 50% in the past 33 months, which is less than the cost of production. Prices of all other agricultural products in the grain growing districts are also declining, thus impoverishing the farmers and throwing them more than ever into the clutches of the banks. Signs of the agricultural crisis are multiplying. Many banks have failed in the West.

During the past year real wages of American workers have fallen. Wage rates on the average have remained almost stationary, with a few favored categories of skilled workers securing increases, with the unskilled in several industries suffering decreases. The cost of living is rising.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

2. Political Situation

The American situation is marked by more open and frank domination of the Government by big capital and the intensification of the imperialist spirit and policies.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The agricultural crisis is producing renewed political activity among the farming masses. This is evidenced by the revival of the farm bloc in congress by pressure from below, the defeat of reactionaries in the farmers' organizations who support the Coolidge policies, increases activities among farmers' organizations generally and intensification of the struggle between the poor and rich farmers in these organizations.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Among the lower ranks of the farmers in the West, among their more conscious elements, there is evidence of increased activity for the formation of Farmer Labor parties, and for the revival of various La Follette groups. In such movements the more conscious elements among the farmers seek alliances with the workers and the urban petty bourgeois elements who feel the pressure of the trusts. With the approach of the congressional elections in the latter part of this year these movements will take on more concrete and definite forms.

The workers, not yet fully recovered from the effects of the defeats in the big strikes of 1919-23 and in the La Follette movements of 1924, have not displayed great activity during this period upon either the economic or political field. It has been a period of comparatively few strikes, in spite of the high rate of production, increases in living costs, and the failure of wages to rise accordingly. Small strikes against wage cuts and for wage increases have occurred in the building, textile, clothing, marine transport industries. The most important struggle is that of the 158,000 anthracite coal miners for increases in wages and the right to organize, which has been on since September 1st. The bituminous miners, whose union is being cut to pieces are preparing to submit demands and will find themselves in a life and death struggle with the employers in the coming summer. Certain skilled categories of railroad workers are also submitting demands. In the clothing trades the failure of the bureaucracy to lead the workers in the struggle against the employers is the central cause for the upheaval which is rapidly bringing all the unions in this industry, totaling 300,000 organized workers, under the leadership of the left wing.

3. The Trade Unions.

The American trade unions are taking a new orientation towards a more intensified and elaborated class collaboration with the employers in the fields of the industries finance, domestic politics, and international relations. The economic and political bases of this new orientation is found in the fact that the American imperialists in their aggressive fight for world domination, feel the double need for cheaper production and peaceful relations with labor and that American capitalism, tremendously enriched by the extra profits of its imperial exploitation, is willing and able to buy off certain sections of the trade union bureaucracy and of the labor aristocracy.

In the industries the employers, departing from their traditional policy of crushing all organization among their workers, are now organizing "company" unions. These organizations, which are entirely under the control of the employers are formed for the double purpose of increasing the workers' productive efficiency and for blocking the growth of class consciousness and organization among them.

* * * * * * * * * * *

5. Other Groupings and Parties

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Progressive Party, headed by William B. Johnston of the Machinists Union, was an outgrowth of the La Follette campaign. It is a petty bourgeois organization based on individual membership, but so loosely constructed as to provide for collective affiliations of farmer labor parties, trade unions, non-partisan trade union committees, etc. The trade union wing of this party also control the Conference for Progressive Political Action, which is a loose political organization of national, state, and local trade union unions, whose official policy is non-partisan. The political programs of the Progressive party and the Conference for Progressive Political Action are identical. They provide for moderate reforms for labor and the farmers. The Socialist party functions practically as its left wing. This group of Progressive party and Conference for Progressive Political Action will rally considerable masses in the coming elections.

* * * * * * * * * * *

6. The Policies and Activities of the Workers Communist Party.

The last Plenum of the ECCI outlined for our party the following main lines of policy, 1, the Bolshevization of our party, with special emphasis upon the struggle against Loreism (the right wing), the centralization of the party apparatus and the re-organization of the party upon the basis of shop nuclei, 2, a more intensive participation in the trade union and specifically the building of party trade union fractions and the building and strengthening of the Trade Union Educational League, a special letter jointly signed by the Comintern and Profintern being addressed to our party on the trade union work, 3, the Plenum corrected the mistakes of both the leading party groups (Foster and Ruthenberg groups) on the labor party question, 4, a more systematic application of the united front policy with special emphasis on the need of formulating united front programs on the basis of immediate burning needs of the masses. The Workers Communist Party convention, held at the end of August, adopted a series of resolution outlining the ways and means of putting these policies into effect.

a) Bolshevization. The Plenum decision stated that Loreism is a right wing deviation from Leninism and that such an opportunist as Lore had no place on the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Communist Party or as editor of a Communist paper. Consequently, immediately upon the return of the delegation, the Central Committee had a special enlarged session and removed Lore from the editorship of the Volks-Zeitung. Between then and the Party convention Lore's attitude was one of hostility and resistance, with the result that at the party convention he was unanimously expelled from the party. With him went the Volks-Zeitung and the extreme right wing of the small German Federation. The condemnation of Lore by the ECCI and his expulsion from the party demoralized the right wing. Comrade Askelli of the Finnish Federation attempted to re-mobilize the right wing against the Central Executive Committee, but he was first ideologically defeated and then removed from the editorship of the Finnish paper Tyomies. This culmination of the previous campaign of the CEC against Lore stripped him of the bulk of his followers. Since his expulsion, Lore has carried on a guerilla warfare against the party and the Comintern, attempting to bring together the scattered two and a half international elements both within and without the party. This struggle against Loreism has distinctly improved the Bolshevik tone of the party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

b) Trade Union Work. At the party convention, in accordance with the Plenum decision, a resolution on trade union work was unanimously adopted, pointing out the following main tasks of the party in the trade unions:

1. The revolutionizing of the existing unions through strengthening and organizing the left wing in the unions by bringing all the proletarian elements of the party into the unions, by the organization of trade union fractions, the building up of the TUEL and the stimulation of the organization of the progressive opposition bloc.

2. The organization of the unorganized by the strengthening of the existing organizations, the creation of new unions in industries where none exist, the building of shop committees, and the utilization of the shop nuclei as points for inaugurating campaigns to organize the unorganized.

3. The unification of the trade union movement by the stimulation of the campaign to amalgamate the craft unions into industrial organizations.

Since the convention the Central Executive Committee has departed radically from this policy, which is also that of the Comintern and Profintern, and has developed the policy of liquidating the broad left wing organized in and around the TUEL and substituting in its place Communist fractions. Although stating that the proposed policy will not be put into effect until the Comintern and Profintern have passed upon it, the CEC is actually applying it at the present time. The first phase of the policy is an active campaign to discredit all the leading figures in the TUEL as disloyal to the Comintern. This is accompanied by the removal of leading TUEL comrades from responsible positions and the hamstringing and isolation of others who are not actually removed, in an attempt to cripple their activities. Finally the TUEL organization itself is being dismantled by the substitution of fractions for the TUEL machinery, by the refusal to permit the TUEL to send delegates to various important conventions, by refusing to support the activities of the TUEL, and by carrying on a widespread propaganda that the TUEL must be dissolved.

This big issue in the life of our party is now before the Communist International for a decision.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

f) Work Among the Negroes. The fourth convention of our party unanimously adopted a resolution on the Negro question. The resolution deals with the race problem of the Negro race as a whole and with the special conditions of the Negro proletariat as part of the working class.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

g) Work Among Women. The resolution of the fourth party convention on women's work, which was unanimously adopted, clarified this problem for our party, correcting errors of both leading groups and laying the basis for Communist mass organization and activity among working women in America.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

l) Anti-Imperialist Work. The Workers Communist Party is rapidly awakening to the necessity for a militant struggle against American imperialism on all fronts.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

m) Party Program of Action.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

To bring unity in the party, the Comintern, after the last Plenum of ECCI, sent a representative, Comrade Green, to the United States. In accordance with the decision of the Plenum, he organized a parity commission to regulate the differences and to organize the party convention. This consisted of three members from each of the two leading groups, with Comrade Green as Chairman. The Parity commission settled all the vexed organization questions by unanimous agreement. It also adopted, by unanimous agreement, 13 resolutions for the convention on the main political and organizational tasks of the party, and it worked out and controlled all the organizational arrangements for the convention.

The elections in the lower party units gave a strong majority to the Foster group. Consequently Comrade Green called the parity commission together 10 days before the opening of the convention and brought about an agreement on the composition of the incoming Central Executive Committee in order to still the factional struggle in the party. This agreement, which was signed by Comrade Green and all the representatives of both leading groups, provided for a majority of 13 for the Foster group and a minority of 8 for the Ruthenberg group in the new Central Executive Committee.

When the convention assembled and the delegates were all seated, the Foster group had a majority of 40 to 21. Just before the convention ended a cablegram unexpectedly arrived from the ECCI sharply criticising the Foster group. Although the cabled decision did not specifically remove the Foster group from the majority of the Central Executive Committee of the party, the delicate situation in the party, made it impossible for this group to take a majority of the Central Executive Committee. The whole matter is now before the ECCI for adjustment.

With Communist Greetings

To all DISTRICT, CITY, SECTION COMMITTEES and LANGUAGE PROPAGANDA BUREAUS.

Dear Comrades:—

You will find enclosed herewith the resolution adopted by the enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International on the situation in our Party and the main tasks of the Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Fraternally yours,

C. E. RUTHENBERG
General Secretary.

Resolution on the American Question Adopted by the Enlarged Executive Committee of the Communist International.

1. The Enlarged Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern attaches specially great importance to the question of the creation of a real proletarian mass party in America. The hegemony of the imperialists of the United States of North America throughout the world renders the work of the American Communists an important and singularly responsible one. The Communist Party of America is called upon to play a tremendous role, and in many respects even a DECISIVE role. For that reason alone all the Sections of the Comintern and the Comintern as a whole, will attentively follow the activity of the American Section and support it in every possible way.

2. At the same time, the Enlarged Plenum of the Executive Committee of the Comintern realises clearly the tremendous objective difficulties which the development of the American Party must overcome during the next period.

* * * * * * * * * * *

17. Greater attention must be given to the building of a mass Young Communist League and Pioneer movement. In the future the young will serve as a reservoir of trained Party members. The slogan "A League unit wherever a Party unit exists", issued by the CEC is correct and steps should now be taken to carry this into effect. Careful supervision and mutual agreement must be exercised in the transferring of League members into Party work, especially at the present time when the League is numerically weak.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

ORGANIZATIONAL CHANGES

• • • • • • • • • • • •

5) The Political Committee will approve Comrade Browder as the representative of the TUEL in the Profintern. In this capacity, Comrade Browder can participate in the meetings of the Executive and Presidium of the Comintern (without vote).

FINAL TEXT.

Endorsed by Presidium of ECCI, July 1st 1927.

RESOLUTION ON THE AMERICAN QUESTION

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The United States of America, during the last decades, has developed into the mightiest imperialist power.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The task of the Workers (Communist) Party is to form a broad united front and to intensify the struggle against American imperialism.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The absolutely necessary struggle against Great Britain's plans to wage war on the Soviet Union and the imperialist intervention in China must therefore always be linked up by the Workers (Communist) Party with the mobilization of the masses for the most energetic fight against the specific role of American imperialism.

In this sense the demonstrations organized by the Party in connection with events in China in front of the British Embassy and Consulates were right and a proper move. But the writer of some of the editorials in the "Daily Worker" (May 7 and 8) deviated from this line of action by minimising the predatory role of American imperialism in China and by representing it one-sidedly only as a tool of British imperialism.

The Workers (Communist) Party must put the question of the recognition of the Soviet Union more energetically in the trade unions and in this way also fight against the pro-imperialist policies of the labour bureaucracy.

In its struggle against American imperialism, the Workers (Communist) Party must not overlook the question of the war and post-war debts of the capitalist states of Europe to the United States. Without getting into the leading strings of the petty-bourgeois politicians and without allotting these questions first place, the Party must actively support the international revolutionary struggles against the whole system of imperialist "peace" treaties, the Dawes Plan, and the finance policies of the imperialists from all of which the question of war debts is inseparable.

The attitude of the Workers (Communist) Party can only be for the cancellation of war debts; naturally not for the cancellation of the INTER-ALLIED debts, but of ALL debts of the last imperialist world war. However, it is not the task of the Workers (Communist) Party to carry on a special, separate struggle under this slogan, but it must combine this question with its general struggle against American imperialism.

ALL THESE questions must be utilised by the Party to rally the broad masses in defence of the Soviet Union and the Chinese Revolution and to sever the masses from the imperialist ideology of the bourgeoisie and the labour bureaucracy. At the same time the Party must understand that in view of its numerical weakness it can act as a centre of attraction for the broad masses only when it has complete unity.

* * * * * * * * * *

Those comrades active and influential in the trade unions must be drawn more into active Party work than hitherto and especially into the work of the leading committees thus achieving simultaneously the unification of the leadership of the trade union work by the Party. The entire Party membership must regard the work in the trade unions as the most important task of the Party.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Presidium decides:

1) The Party Convention should take place in the end of August 1927 in view of the delay caused by the work of the American Commission.

2) In order to make possible the convention preparations with the least friction there will be formed "a commission for the preparation of the Party Convention" consisting of 6 (six) members with voting rights and 2 candidates (3 of the majority and 3 of the Opposition) under the chairmanship of a neutral comrade. As deputy chairmen of the Commission, Comrades Lovestone and Foster will function. The Commission has the right to arrive at binding decisions on all questions pertaining to the organisational and political preparation of the Party Convention. The Commission will also have the right to arrive at decisions on questions of mandate disputes in connection with the delegates to the Party Convention. The election of delegates for the Party Convention is to be on the proportional representation system.

3) The normalisation and democratisation of the Party life demand that the Party Convention after an objective consideration of all important questions elect a broad Party Executive into which a number of additional proletarian elements should be drawn. For the minority at the Party Convention important representation must be secured both on the Central Committee and in the Political Committee.

4) In order to demonstrate before the whole Party the necessity of collaboration and merger of the existing groups comrades Lovestone and Foster shall function as secretaries of the Party until the Party convention and Comrades Foster and Gitlow shall function as secretaries of the Trade Union Department until the Party convention. Further changes in the composition of the leading bodies (Central Committee and Political Committee) are rejected as inexpedient before the Party Convention. The composition of the Central Executive Committee is left to the decision of the Party Convention. It is recommended to the Party Convention to make a decision that the newly elected Central Committee is to set up immediately a collective Secretariat of three comrades, one of whom should be a representative of the Minority. It is recommended, in any event to elect Comrades Lovestone and Foster as secretaries.

5) The Presidium thinks it advisable that the Party Convention discuss and decide the question of the expediency of transferring the seat of the Central Committee.

Petitioner's Exhibit No. 44

The following paragraph was adopted by the American Sub-Commission of the Presidium with the purpose to be embodied into the agreement of the American comrades as a statement on the policy followed by the ECCI towards the different groups in the American Party:

The Comintern recognizes that in many political questions the Ruthenberg group followed a more correct line in the past than the Foster group. Because of this the Comintern has generally been supporting politically the Ruthenberg group. On the other hand the Comintern had to protect organizationally the Foster group from the Ruthenberg group. Because the Executive had the opinion that the leading group of the majority of the Polcom had not sufficiently understood how to estimate the full significance of the trade union forces in the Party and that Comrade Foster at that time was more correct on many questions of the trade union tactics. The line of the Comintern has been: on the whole for the political support of the Ruthenberg group, and for bringing Foster nearer to the general political line of the Ruthenberg group, at the same time however, following the course towards the correction of the trade union line of the Ruthenberg group on the line of Foster thru closest cooperation in the Party leadership.

RESOLUTION ON THE ORGANIZATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL RED AID AND THE INTERNATIONAL WORKERS RELIEF

1. In accordance with the agreement reached with the representatives of the I R A and the I W R in Moscow by our delegates, the Party shall proceed with the organization of these two organizations as separate bodies.

* * * * * * * * * * *

7. However, the campaigns of the I R A and the I W R shall not be inner Party campaigns. That is, the appeal for financial support shall not primarily be made in the Party ranks but largely to the outside working class groups. Unless we can throw the major part of the weight of collecting funds and securing support of these organizations outside of the Party they do not fulfill their purpose.

8. The CEC shall appoint a sub-committee of three members which will study the details in regard to the organization of both organizations and submit detailed recommendations to the future meetings of the Committee in harmony with the above basic outline.

Substitute by Lovestone:

That in the opinion of the CEC, the cable sent by Comrade Ruthenberg fully complies with the request of Comrade Losovsky and therefore we endorse the reply sent.

union committee meeting today in the refusal to adopt Comrade Foster's proposed plan of Party fractions and building the League and the statement of Ruthenberg that the CEC is not in line with the policies outlined for the League which is at present the policy of the Profintern and the Party.

In order to complete the records Comrade Ruthenberg states "that the program of the CEC as well as that submitted by Comrades Foster and Bittelman provided first for an organizational campaign to mobilize the Party membership for trade union work and organization of Party fractions. The CEC is carrying on this campaign immediately. Before this campaign can be completed, the CI will have made a decision on our proposal and the way will be clear for carrying into effect the policy approved by the CI for building the broad left wing movement in this country. Therefore, the action in relation to the Foster-Bittelman proposal in regard to the TUEL does not in any way militate against the League since such action cannot be taken until after the campaign for the organization of Party fractions even as Comrades Bittelman and Foster proposed."

That the League pay ¼ of the amount of the bill for printing those lists and the balance within the 30 day period.

1—Establishment of an anti-militarist department to help build the united front against militarism and publish anti-militarist literature.

Whiteman Request

Letter read from Comrade Whiteman in which he requests permission to go across for reasons listed in the letter.

Motion by Ruthenberg:

1—That the Committee advise Comrade Whiteman that it does not believe at this time he should proceed to the Comintern.

2—That Comrade Whiteman be requested to make a detailed statement of the proposals which he has raised in his letter to be forwarded to the ECCI for consideration. If the Eastern Department then feels that Comrade Whiteman should come to Moscow in regard to the matters listed in his letter, the Committee shall take the matter up further.

3—We should make immediate inquiry as to the conference to be held in Brussels, the nature of the Congress and whether it is expected that delegates are to come from the United States.

Motion by Duune

2—That we appoint Comrade Minor as representative of the Party to proceed to Moscow immediately upon Comrade Bedacht's arrival in the United States.

Comrade Dunne nominated Comrade Hathaway.
Comrade Bittelman nominated Comrade Browder.
Voting for Browder—Johnstone, Bittelman.
Voting for Hathaway—Dunne.
Voting for Minor—Engdahl, Ruthenberg, Gitlow and Minor.

Students' Dependents

Students were sent to the Lenin school with the understanding that upon their arrival the Lenin School would make arrangements for support of their dependents in the United States. It seems that when the matter of student's dependents in America was submitted the School instructed that the Party make a donation of $50 per month and the students send part of what is allotted to them. Com Ruthenberg reported that Mrs. Hathaway has four children and has been receiving $15 per week which is an impossible sum for the maintenance of such a family. She received a letter from Hathaway that he can send $50 per month and that the school requested us to pay $75. In the case of Hathaway, money will have to be provided for his family or he will have to return. In the case of Mrs. Bell who has one child, the amount furnished her in the past by the Party and the amount sent by Comrade Bell is sufficient.

Motion by Ruthenberg:

> To continue to pay Mrs. Bell $15 each week and to pay Mrs. Hathaway $75 per month in weekly installments.

Motion carried uanimously.

INSTRUCTIONS TO PARTY TRADE UNION FRACTIONS

In order to intensify the application of the CEC resolution on "The Broadening of the TUEL and the building of an oppositional bloc in conformity with the CI decision," the following measures shall be put into effect immediately.

Formation of Broad Local General Groups

Under the immediate direction of the respective District Secretaries and Trade Union Committees, steps shall immediately be taken for the formation of left wing groups, as broad as possible, in all industrial centers. To this end the following policy shall be adopted:

1. Where there is already a definite broad oppositional foment existing in the local general trade union movement, or where it is possible to develop one around some burning issue in the very near future, such as the setting up of an oppositional slate in the union elections, the establishment of broad committees for organizing the unorganized or for the formation of a Labor Party, etc., steps shall be taken directly for the formation of such a broad united front of the oppositional elements. In the resultant organization, our policy shall be to bring in as much as practicable of our general program of action and to gradually crystallize our fractions and the more conscious left elements into a definite left wing within the broad movement.

2. Where there is no immediate prospect of developing such broad united front movements with the oppositional elements around single issues, local conferences shall be called as soon as possible on the basis of our general program of action and left wing organizations formed of those who subscribe to it, this program of action to include a militant fight against the employers, the organization of the unorganized, the formation of a Labor Party, amalgamation, democratization of the unions, and the elimination of gangsterism and corruption. Where such left wing groups are established they shall be considered as instruments for the organization of wider oppositional movements, and to this end they shall energetically strive to put into effect their local programs of work, calling for the formation of joint election slates, organizing committees, Labor Party committees, strike relief committees, etc. When broader local general oppositional united front movements are formed the existing left wing groups shall, except in unusual cases, merge with them and become their left wing.

That is, the Point "1" policy, is to first form the broad oppositional movement, and then crystallize a left wing, comprising our Party fractions and other left elements, within it; and the Point "2" policy, is to first form the left wing of fractions and other conscious elements, and then build a broader movement around it.

In accordance with the foregoing general instructions, the following practical steps shall be taken:

In all industrial centers, broad local general oppositional groups or left wing groups shall be formed, as local circumstances dictate. They shall be given such names as may be deemed most expedient.

The meetings for the formation of these local general groups shall be arranged tour-wise so that they may be covered by TUEL organizers.

In the formation of these various local groups the initiative of non-Party elements shall be developed.

It shall be our aim to bring all these local groups under the general leadership, official or unofficial, of the TUEL General Committee, to secure their acceptance of Labor Unity as their official organ, and to get their support for the Workers' Educational Fund.

Formation of Broad Local Union Groups

In all localities and in all unions, the local union fractions, under the immediate control of local Trade Union committees and leading fractions, shall at once proceed to establish broader groups in their respective local unions. Special attention shall be paid to the local unions in heavy and key industries.

The policy outlined in the foregoing general instructions, "1" and "2", shall also apply in the case of the formation of broader groups in local unions. Where burning issues exist broad united fronts shall be created on that basis, but otherwise general left groups shall be at once formed upon the basis of our trade union action program, these left wing groups to immediately strive for the formation of broader groups, as above explained. In all cases the fractions will be required to establish groups broader than mere party lines, whether the new groups shall be left wing in character, or broad united fronts, depends upon local circumstances.

These local union oppositional groups shall be given such names as may be most expedient. They shall be drawn under the leadership, official or unofficial, of the National Industrial Committees and Local General Groups in their respective industries and localities. They shall support Labor Unity and the various finance systems of their National Industrial Committees, and also the Workers Education Fund.

Formation of Broad Local Industrial Groups

In accordance with the general instructions "1" and "2", broad oppositional movements shall be developed among all the local unions of one trade in a given locality (Joint Boards, District Councils, etc.) and among all the local unions in a given local industry (Building Trades Councils, Metal Trades Councils, etc.) applying the foregoing policy regarding names, finance, Labor Unity and the general leadership of the TUEL.

The National Movement

As rapidly as practicable, National Industrial Committees, based on the present general system, shall be organized in all the principal industries now without such committees. There shall also be organized National Union Committees to cover the most important individual unions, these National Union Committees to work under the general direction of their respective National Industrial Committees. The NIC's shall publish their own papers, adopt financial systems and be known by such names as may be most convenient to secure the best results. They shall include workers in various centers, including non-Party militants.

The General Committee of the TUEL shall hold an enlarged meeting in Chicago on _____ to which shall be invited Party and non-Party left wingers from various cities and industries. This meeting shall issue a statement to the labor movements stressing the non party character of the TUEL and emphasizing its program of struggle around concrete issues. The meeting shall also develop the Workers' Education Fund, work up detailed plans for organizing left wing and progressive groups, map out general left wing programs for the various industries, prepare for the coming national conference of the TUEL, and broaden out the General Committee to include militants in the various cities. It shall take definite steps to build up Labor Unity.

By Wm. Z. Foster.

CHINA

Comrade Lovestone read the following cable received from the CI.

Demolition in Soviet Embassy Pekin, arrests, violence also British blockade of Shanghai Consulate permitted by Diplomatic Corps nd undoubtedly inspired by English money provoke war with USSR. Chinese ports occupied by Imperialists. Situation grave, war against Chinese Revolution began, war threatened against USSR. All Communist parties must raise broad masses, also youth to protest nsing every possible help. Categorically necessary shortest period to organize mass anti-British demonstrations preferably before British Embassy Consulates. When possible questions to Congressmen Senators demanding clear answer re Government attitude.

Com Lovestone brought to the attention of the Committee the announcement that the U. S. had pulled out of the joint group in reference to the action against China. There has been a statement issued by Green of the A. F. of L. following up the statement of the State Department.

Motions by Lovestone:

On the basis of these items—That we instruct the DOs to hasten with the preparations for the demonstrations before the British Embassy Consulate offices.

1—In these demonstrations, amongst the general slogans of the Party in the Hands Off China Campaign, there be specifically raised the slogan of condemning the role of the British imperialists in the raid on the Soviet Embassy at Pekin.

Carried unanimously.

CI Communications

The following letter was received from the Comintern:

Dear Comrades:

At its last Session of March 16th, the Presidium of the ECCI decided to convene the next Plenum of the ECCI for May 10th, 1927 and to adopt the following agenda for this session:

1—The peril of new wars and the question of struggle against same. The report of this item of the agenda is to be made by one representative each from the CP of Great Britain and France.

2—The Chinese Revolution. Report of Comrade Bucharin and eventually a Chinese comrade.

3—Date for the convocation of the VI World Congress.

4—Questions of individual sections.

If Sections wish certain questions to be discussed at the Plenum they should inform the Polit-Secretariat of the ECCI about these questions in good time before the Plenum, they should appoint a reporter on these questions, giving his name to the Polit-Secretariat and sending the written material appertaining to these questions, giving his name to the Polit-Secretariat and sending the written material appertaining to these questions, in order that the material could be sent to the Central Committee of the Sections prior to the Plenum.

With regard to the delegation-regulation the following decision was made: only members of the ECCI are to participate in the Plenary sessions. The place of an expelled or deceased member of the ECCI is taken by a candidate of the ECCI, or, in the event of no candidate being available, by a representative appointed by the CC of the Party in question. If Parties wish to send other representatives instead of a member of the ECCI, or have other proposals to make, this will have to be decided in every concrete case by the Polit-Secretariat. Therefore, it would be desirable for central committees to send in good time any proposals they have to make with regard to this, in order to enable the Polit-Secretariat to deal with them soon enough, as not to delay the despatch of the delegations.

The Plenum of the ECCI is not to last longer than 5 or 6 days.

Members of the ECCI and representatives instead of such ECCI members, proposed by the Party and approved by the Political Secretariat will have their travelling expenses to and from Moscow defrayed by the ECCI; also the ECCI makes itself responsible for the cost of their stay in Moscow.

With Communist greetings,
pp. Secretariat of the ECCI:
(Piatnitsky)

Com Lovestone then read the following cabled decision from the Comintern:

We hold the coming of Jack, Ben and Bill to Session of Executive to be necessary stop The coming of Jim and Weinstone would also be desirable but in case the Polburo holds this to be inexpedient, then we ask that written reports on part of these comrades be sent stop Regarding Ben we would excuse him from Session of Executive only in case all members Polburo including Ben himself are against his coming stop We say latter because we do not sufficiently know present needle trades situation stop No other Comrades shall come stop This telegram is to be shown to all five Comrades here mentioned stop

ECCI KUUSINEN.

Motions by Wolfe:

In execution of the decision in the letter and telegram:

1—That Comrades Foster, Lovestone and Gitlow make preparations to leave at once in order to attend the Executive session.

2—That Bedacht act as general secretary of the Party during Lovestone's absence.

3—That Wolfe act as agitprop director while Bedacht is acting secretary.

4—That we recommend that Comrade Johnstone act as secretary of the TUEL while Foster is away.

5—That Weinstone act in place of Gitlow as CEC representative on the National Needle Trades Committee while Gitlow is away.

6—That Comrade W. J. White be elected candidate to the Polcom.

7—In view of the fact that Comrades Cannon and Weinstone have not manifested such political opposition with the Polcom as to constitute a separate program and in view of the fact that they have been given an opportunity to present their statement in writing to the CI and in view also of the shortage of the forces which will be occasioned by so many of our leading Comrades leaving the country at this critical time, and the importance of such matters as the Sacco Vanzetti campaign and the necessity of handling the needle trades situation properly with Com Gitlow away, I move that Comrades Cannon and Weinstone be instructed to present their views in writing to the Executive Committee of the CI.

8—That we notify Comrade Dunne accordance with the cabled decision of the ECCI he is not to attend this session of the ECCI.

9—That we inform the CI that in view of the fact that these leading Comrades are leaving the country, we are postponing the plenum of the Central Executive Committee of our Party and,

10—In view of the inadvisability of the Y W L holding a plenum without the Party's holding a plenum, that the YWL plenum also be postponed.

Motions by Foster:

1—That the delegation should consist of Comrades Lovestone Weinstone and Foster and the matter of whether or not Comrade Dunne is eligible should be referred to the CI for decision.

2—Inasmuch as these three Comrades have been intimately connected with the needle trades situation and inasmuch as the fight in New York requires the concentration of those actively in the work, that Gitlow should not go.

3—That telegrams shall be sent immediately for the holding of a plenum of the CEC within two days.

4—That in the absence of Comrade Lovestone that Comrade Bittelman act as secretary.

5—In the event that it is decided by the CI that Comrade Gitlow shall go, that Com Zack shall be secretary of the needle trades.

RUSSIAN PARTY CONVENTION

The following wire was proposed to be sent to the Fifteenth Congress of the Russian Communist Party:

The CEC of the Workers (Communist) Party of America sends fraternal greetings to the Fifteenth Congress of the CPSU. Together with the whole Comintern, we take pride in the tremendous achievements by the toiling masses of the Soviet Union in socialist reconstruction. The five-year economic plan submitted to the Congress by the Central Committee constitutes another long stride in the direction of socialism and provides for further improvement of the conditions of the masses, including the introduction of the seven-hour day. This is increasing the faith of the toiling masses of the world in Communism. Thus capitalism is further undermined, and the world revolution promoted.

Conscious of the war danger confronting the Soviet Union, our Party will do its utmost to combat the efforts of American imperialism to join forces with Britain for a joint attack upon the socialist fatherland of the working class. We are fully confident of the ability of the CPSU and its Leninist Central Committee to mobilize and inspire the masses for defense of the Soviet Union.

Unity in the CPSU and unity in the Comintern are basic conditions for the defense and the socialist growth of the Soviet Union and for the growth of the world Communist movement. Therefore our Party urges the Fifteenth Congress to stop finally the splitting activities of the Trotsky-Zinoviov opposition, and expel from the Party forthwith all those who persist in the opposition's reverting to Menshevism.

We extend to the Fifteenth Congress our fraternal wishes for the success of its deliberations and pledge our efforts for maintaining the unity and Leninist line of the Comintern.

Central Executive Committee.

DISCUSSION OUTLINE FOR LENIN CAMPAIGN

* * * * * * * * * *

6. Why it is impermissible to violate Party Discipline.

a) The Communist Party is based on the principle of Democratic centralization, i.e., absolute subordination of the minority to the majority of the Party, of lower Party organs to higher bodies. Otherwise the Party will be weakened, its authority undermined, and will only strengthen the position of the enemy. "The negation of Party and Party discipline is the result of the opposition. This is akin to disarming the proletariat in favor of the bourgeoisie. It is akin to that petty bourgeois looseness, instability, incapacity for steady, unified and harmonious action, which, if encouraged, must bring to nought every proletarian revolutionary movement." (Lenin, "Infantile Sickness")

b) The Party has a right to use all measures against those who violate Party discipline.

"Breaches of Party discipline by individual members may be published by censure, public censure, dismissal from office, suspension from the Party, and expulsion from the Party" (from the "Statutes of the Communist Party" adopted at the 6th National Convention.)

* * * * * * * * * *

One who fights the Soviet Union and the Comintern is an agent of capitalism directed against our Party in its campaign to mobilize the workers against imperialist war and for the defense of the Soviet Union.

III. Our Tasks

1. To widely popularize in the Party and in working class organizations the principles of Lenin, especially at this moment, on War and the Role of the Communist Party.

2. To popularize the slogan of civil war against American capitalism.

3. To struggle against pacifism, social-democratic propaganda of disarmament and peace. Building the revolutionary trade unions of the Communist Party is the first guarantee of our ability to mobilize the workers for the struggle against war and in defense of the Soviet Union.

4. To establish functioning nuclei amongst the armed forces of American capitalism.

5. To devote more attention to the role of American imperialism and American colonies and protectorates and for direct support of these colonial countries in their struggle against American imperialism.

6. To establish anti-war committees in the factories and link up the struggle against war with the every-day struggles of the workers.

7. Fill our quota in the present recruiting drive of the Party.

8. To struggle against the right danger in the Party, particularly against Lovestone.

PREFACE

* * * * * * * * * * *

The speeches of Comrade Stalin in the American Commission and at the meeting of the Presidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, published herewith, have not only historical but also present political importance. At once they show the line of the Sixth Congress in action and the application to the Communist Party of the United States, of the Sixth Congress decisions on the fight against the Right danger.

* * * * * * * * * * *

To the gloomy predictions of Lovestone and Gitlow, that the Comintern Address will destroy the American Party, Comrade Stalin answered:

"No comrades, the American Communist Party, will not perish. It will live and flourish to the dismay of the enemies of the working class. Only one small factional group will perish if it continues to be stubborn, if it does not submit to the will of the Comintern, if it continues to adhere to its errors."

These words could be written upon the political grave, or better said, on the Brandlerite political sewer in which now rests Lovestone, Gitlow & Co.

. . . . . .

Comrade Gitlow read it here during the course of his speech. The fundamental feature of this declaration is that it proclaims the thesis of non-submission to the decisions of the Presidium of the E. C. C. That means that the extreme factionalism of the leaders of the majority has driven them into the path of insubordination, and hence of warfare against the Comintern.

. . . . . .

Thirdly, in that factionalism, by weakening the will for unity in the Party and by undermining its iron discipline, creates within the Party a peculiar factional regime, as a result of which the whole internal life of our Party is robbed of its conspirative protection in the face of the class enemy, and the Party itself runs the danger of being transformed into a plaything of the agents of the bourgeoisie.

. . . . . .

As a result, important secret decisions of the Party become general knowledge. In this way the agents of the bourgeoisie attain access to the secret decisions of the Party and make it easy to use the knowledge of the internal life of the Party against the interests of the Party.

Enlightenment Campaign on the Comintern Address to the Communist Party

Statement of Political Bureau on Expulsions

Pursuant to the Polbureau decisions of August 12th, the Secretariat of the Central Committee addressed individual letters to all the Party members named in this decision and demanded an answer from them within 48 hours. These individual letters have now been answered by a collective statement signed by D. Benjamin, B. Gitlow, W. Miller, M. Nemser, E. Welsh, W. White, B. Wolfe, and H. Zam.

In their declaration the signatories declare that "The Address and line of the Polbureau based upon it are wrong and injurious," and that "On the basis of the Address the Political Committee is proceeding to wreck the Party," and further, that "we will not cease our struggle," and, finally, that "we fight against the line of the Address and its application by the Polbureau."

The Polbureau and the E. C. C. I. demanded of these members of the Party a repudiation of their declaration of war against the Comintern. They answered this demand by declaring "we will not cease our struggle" and "we fight against the line of the Address and its application by the Polbureau."

The Polbureau and the E. C. C. I. demanded of these members of the Party a repudiation of their insolent counter-revolutionary cable to the E. C. C. I. They ignore this demand.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The statement of these Party members again reiterated the Lovestone opportunist platform in opposition to the line of the Sixth World Congress. With petty-bourgeois arrogance it declares that the right and duty to define the line of the Communist International does not rest with the Communist International but from among all the millions of members of the Comintern, from among all the dozens of sections of the Comintern, falls upon the shoulders of Lovestone. With the powers of sole arbiter thus allocated to Lovestone, the document proceeds to condemn the revolutionary application and development of the line of the Sixth Congress of the Communist International by the Communist International itself and by the Tenth Plenum of its Executive Committee and to proclaim Lovestone's reformist interpretation the only permissible one.

. . . . . .

With the declaration that they will continue their fight against the Comintern the signers have registered their unwillingness and unfitness to remain members of our Party. Under lying protestations of adherence to the decisions of the Sixth World Congress they challenge the decisions of the second World Congress concerning the 21 conditions of membership in the Communist International.

In recognition of this undeniable fact and in application of the decisions of the Polbureau of August 12, the following are hereby declared expelled from the Party—D. Benjamin, B. Gitlow, W. Miller, M. Nemser, E. Welsh, W. White, B. D. Wolfe and Herbert Zam.

Any association with the expelled, any support given them is incompatible with the duties of membership in the Party.

FOUNDATIONS OF LENINISM

by JOSEPH STALIN

COPYRIGHT, 1939, BY
INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS CO., INC.

INTRODUCTION

. . . . . .

Some say that Leninism is the application of Marxism to the peculiar conditions of the situation in Russia. This definition contains a particle of truth, but not the whole truth by any means. Lenin, indeed, applied Marxism to Russian conditions, and applied it in a masterly way. But if Lenin-ism were only the application of Marxism to the peculiar situation in Russia it would be a purely national and only national, a purely Russian and only Russian, phenomenon. We know, however, that Leninism is not merely a Russian, but an international phenomenon rooted in the whole of international development. That is why I think this definition suffers from onesidedness.

I. The Historical Roots of Leninism

The third contradiction is the contradiction between the handful of ruling "civilised" nations and the hundreds of millions of the colonial and dependent peoples of the world. Imperialism is the most barefaced exploitation and the most inhuman oppression of hundreds of millions of people inhabiting vast colonies and dependent countries. The purpose of this exploitation and of this oppression is to squeeze out super-profits. But in exploiting these countries imperialism is compelled to build railroads, factories and mills there, to create industrial and commercial centres. The appearance of a class of proletarians, the emergence of a native intelligentsia, the awakening of national consciousness, the growth of the movement for emancipation—such are the inevitable results of this "policy." The growth of the revolutionary movement in all colonies and dependent countries without exception clearly testifies to this fact. This circumstance is of importance for the proletariat in that it radically undermines the position of capitalism by converting the colonies and dependent countries from reserves of imperialism into reserves of the proletarian revolution.

Such, in general, are the principal contradictions of imperialism which have converted the old, "flourishing" capitalism into moribund capitalism.

The significance of the imperialist war which broke loose ten years ago lies, among other things, in the fact that it gathered all these contradictions into a single knot and threw them onto the scales, thereby accelerating and facilitating the revolutionary battles of the proletariat.

In other words, imperialism has brought it about, not only that revolution has become a practical inevitability, but also that favourable conditions have been created for a direct onslaught upon the citadels of capitalism.

Such is the international situation which gave birth to Leninism.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Under these circumstances, could the Russian Communists confine their work within the narrow national bounds of the Russian revolution? Of course not. On the contrary, the whole situation, both domestic (the profound revolutionary crisis) and foreign (the war), impelled them to go beyond these bounds in their work, to transfer the struggle to the international arena, to expose the ulcers of imperialism, to prove that the collapse of capitalism was inevitable, to smash social-chauvinism and social-pacifism, and finally, to overthrow capitalism in their own country and to forge a new fighting weapon for the proletariat—the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution—in order to facilitate the task of overthrowing capitalism for the proletarians of all countries. Nor could the Russian Communists act otherwise, for only this path offered the chance of producing certain changes in the international situation which could safeguard Russia against the restoration of the bourgeois order.

That is why Russia became the home of Leninism, and why Lenin, the leader of the Russian Communists, became its creator.

• • • • • • • • • • •

We cannot regard it as a mere accident that as early as 1902, when the Russian revolution was still in an embryonic state, Lenin wrote the following prophetic words in his pamphlet What Is To Be Done?:

"History has now confronted us [i.e., the Russian Marxists—J.S.] with an immediate task which is the most revo- lutionary of all the immediate tasks that confront the proletariat of any country. The fulfilment of this task, the destruction of the most powerful bulwark, not only of European, but also of Asiatic reaction, would make the Russian proletariat the vanguard of the international revolutionary proletariat." (V. I. Lenin, Selected Works, Vol. II, p. 50.)*

In other words, the centre of the revolutionary movement was bound to shift to Russia.

As we know, the course of the revolution in Russia has more than vindicated Lenin's prediction.

Is it surprising, after all this, that a country which has accomplished such a revolution and possesses such a proletariat should have been the birthplace of the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution?

Is it surprising that Lenin, the leader of this proletariat, became the creator of this theory and tactics and the leader of the international proletariat?

3. The Theory of the Proletarian Revolution

But the overthrow of the power of the bourgeoisie and establishment of the power of the proletariat in one country still does not mean that the complete victory of socialism has been ensured. After consolidating its power and taking the peasantry in tow, the proletariat of the victorious country can and must build up a socialist society. But does this mean that it will thereby achieve the complete and final victory of socialism, i.e., does it mean that with the forces of only one country it can finally consolidate socialism and fully guarantee that country against intervention and, consequently, also against restoration? No, it does not. For this the victory of the revolution in at least several countries is needed. Therefore, the development and support of revolution in other countries is an essential task of the victorious revolution. Therefore, the revolution in the victorious country must regard itself not as a self-sufficient entity but as an aid, as a means of hastening the victory of the proletariat in other countries.

* Quotation from English translations of Lenin have been checked with the original and in some cases revised.—Ed.

Lenin expressed this thought in a nutshell when he said that the task of the victorious revolution is to do "the utmost possible in one country for the development, support and awakening of the revolution in all countries." (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 182.)

These, in general, are the characteristic features of Lenin's theory of proletarian revolution.

IV. The Dictatorship of the Proletariat

The state is a machine in the hands of the ruling class for suppressing the resistance of its class enemies. In this respect the dictatorship of the proletariat does not differ essentially from the dictatorship of any other class, for the proletarian state is a machine for the suppression of the bourgeoisie. But there is one substantial difference. This difference consists in the fact that all hitherto existing class states have been dictatorships of an exploiting minority over the exploited majority, whereas the dictatorship of the proletariat is the dictatorship of the exploited majority over the exploiting minority.

Briefly: the dictatorship of the proletariat is the rule—unrestricted by law and based on force—of the proletariat over the bourgeoisie, a rule enjoying the sympathy and support of the labouring and exploited masses. (The State and Revolution.)

From this follow two main conclusions:

First conclusion: The dictatorship of the proletariat cannot be "complete" democracy, democracy for all, for the rich as well as for the poor; the dictatorship of the proletariat "must be a state that is democratic in a new way— for * the proletarians and the propertyless in general—and dictatorial in a new way—against * the bourgeoisie. . . ." (Lenin, Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 34.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

Democracy under capitalism is capitalist democracy, the democracy of the exploiting minority, based on the restriction of the rights of the exploited majority and directed against this majority. Only under the dictatorship of the proletariat are real "liberties" for the exploited and real participation in the administration of the country by the proletarians and peasants possible. Under the dictatorship of the proletariat, democracy is proletarian democracy, the democracy of the exploited majority, based upon the restriction of the rights of the exploiting minority and directed against this minority.

Second conclusion: The dictatorship of the proletariat cannot arise as the result of the peaceful development of bourgeois society and bourgeois democracy; it can arise only as the result of the smashing of the bourgeois state machine, the bourgeois army, the bourgeois bureaucratic machine, the bourgeois police.

In a preface to The Communist Manifesto Marx and Engels wrote, quoting from The Civil War in France:

"The working class cannot simply lay hold of the ready-made state machine and wield it for its own purposes." (Marx, Selected Works, Vol. I, p. 190.)

In a letter to Kugelmann (1871) Marx wrote that the task of the proletarian revolution is "no longer as before, to transfer the bureaucratic military machine from one hand to another, but to smash it, and that is a preliminary condition for every real people's revolution on the Continent." (Marx, Selected Works, Vol. II, p. 528.)

Marx's qualifying phrase about the Continent gave the opportunists and Mensheviks of all countries a pretext for proclaiming that Marx had thus conceded the possibility of the peaceful evolution of bourgeois democracy into a proletarian democracy, at least in certain countries outside the European continent (England, America). Marx did in fact concede that possibility, and he had good grounds for conceding it in regard to England and America in the seventies of the last century, when monopoly capitalism and imperialism did not yet exist, and when these countries, owing to the special conditions of their development, had as yet no developed militarism and bureaucracy. That was the situation before the appearance of developed imperialism. But later, after a lapse of thirty or forty years, when the situation in these countries had radically changed, when imperialism had developed and had embraced all capitalist countries without exception, when militarism and bureaucracy had appeared in England and America also, when the special conditions for peaceful development in England and the United States had disappeared—then the qualification in regard to these countries necessarily could no longer hold good.

"Today," said Lenin, "in 1917, in the epoch of the first great imperialist war, this qualification made by Marx is no longer valid: Both England and America, the greatest and the last representatives—in the whole world—of Anglo-Saxon 'liberty,' in the sense that militarism and bureaucracy were absent, have slid down entirely into the all-European, filthy, bloody morass of military-bureaucratic institutions to which everything is subordinated and which trample everything underfoot. Today, both in England and in America, the 'preliminary condition for every real people's revolution' is the smashing, the destruction of the 'ready-made state machine' (brought in those countries, between 1914 and 1917, to general 'European' imperialist perfection)." (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 37.)

In other words, the law of violent proletarian revolution, the law of the smashing of the bourgeois state machine as a preliminary condition for such a revolution, is an inevitable law of the revolutionary movement in the imperialist countries of the world.

Of course, in the remote future, if the proletariat is victorious in the most important capitalist countries, and if the present capitalist encirclement is replaced by a socialist encirclement, a "peaceful" path of development is quite possible for certain capitalist countries, whose capitalists, in view of the "unfavourable" international situation, will consider it expedient "voluntarily" to make substantial concessions to the proletariat. But this supposition applies only to a remote and possible future. With regard to the immediate future, there is no ground whatsoever for this supposition.

Therefore, Lenin is right in saying:

"The proletarian revolution is impossible without the forcible destruction of the bourgeois state machine and the substitution for it of a new one. . ." (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 124.)

VI. The National Problem

Formerly, the national problem was usually confined to a narrow circle of questions, concerning, primarily, "cultured" nationalities. The Irish, the Hungarians, the Poles, the Finns, the Serbs and several other European nationalities—that was the circle of disfranchised peoples in whose destinies the heroes of the Second International were interested. The scores and hundreds of millions of Asiatic and African peoples who are suffering national oppression in its most savage and cruel form usually remained outside of their field of vision. They hesitated to put white and black, "civilized" and "uncivilized" on the same plane. Two or three meaningless, lukewarm resolutions, which carefully evaded the question of liberating the colonies—that was all the leaders of the Second International could boast of. Now we can say that this duplicity and half-heartedness in dealing with the national problem has been brought to an end. Leninism laid bare this crying incongruity, broke down the wall between whites and blacks, between Europeans and Asiatics, between the "civilized" and "uncivilized" slaves of imperialism, and thus linked the national problem with the problem of the colonies. The national problem was thereby transformed from a particular and internal state problem into a general and international problem, into a world problem of emancipating the oppressed peoples in the dependent countries and colonies from the yoke of imperialism.

The question presents itself as follows: Are the revolutionary possibilities latent in the revolutionary liberation movement of the oppressed countries already exhausted or not; and if not, is there any hope, any ground to expect that these possibilities can be utilized for the proletarian revolution, that the dependent and colonial countries can be transformed from a reserve of the imperialist bourgeoisie into a reserve of the revolutionary proletariat, into an ally of the latter?

Leninism replies to this question in the affirmative, i.e., it recognizes the latent revolutionary capacities of the national liberation movement of the oppressed countries and the possibility of utilizing these capacities for the purpose of overthrowing the common enemy, for the purpose of overthrowing imperialism. The mechanics of the development of imperialism, the imperialist war and the revolution in Russia wholly confirm the conclusions of Leninism on this score.

Hence the necessity for the proletariat to support—resolutely and actively to support—the national liberation movement of the oppressed and dependent peoples.

This does not mean, of course, that the proletariat must support every national movement, everywhere and always, in every single concrete case. It means that support must be given to such national movements as tend to weaken, to overthrow imperialism, and not to strengthen and preserve it. Cases occur when the national movements in certain oppressed countries come into conflict with the interests of the development of the proletarian movement. In such cases support is, of course, entirely out of the question. The question of the rights of nations is not an isolated, self-sufficient question; it is a part of the general problem of the proletarian revolution, subordinate to the whole, and must be considered from the point of view of the whole. In the forties of the last century Marx supported the national movement of the Poles and Hungarians and was opposed to the national movement of the Czechs and the South Slavs. Why? Because the Czechs and the South Slavs were then "reactionary nations," "Russian outposts" in Europe, outposts of absolutism: whereas the Poles and the Hungarians were "revolutionary nations," fighting against absolutism. Because support of the national movement of the Czechs and the South Slavs was at that time equivalent to indirect support for tsarism, the most dangerous enemy of the revolutionary movement in Europe.

"The various demands of democracy," writes Lenin, "including self-determination, are not an absolute, but a small part of the general democratic (now: general socialist) world movement. In individual concrete cases, the part may contradict the whole; if so, it must be rejected." (Collected Works, Russian edition, Vol. XIX, pp. 257-58.)*

This is the position in regard to the question of certain national movements, of the possible reactionary character of these movements—if, of course, they are appraised not from the formal point of view, not from the point of view of abstract rights, but concretely, from the point of view of the interests of the revolutionary movement.

VII. Strategy and Tactics

The period of the domination of the Second International was mainly a period of the formation and training of the proletarian armies amidst conditions of more or less peaceful development. This was the period when parliamentarism was the principal form of class struggle. Questions of great class conflicts, of preparing the proletariat for revolutionary battles, of the ways and means of achieving the dictatorship of the proletariat, did not seem to be on the order of the day at that time. The task was confined to utilizing all paths of legal development for the purpose of forming and training the proletarian armies, to utilizing parliamentarism in conformity with the conditions under which the status of the proletariat was (and as it seemed then, had to remain) that of an Opposition. It need hardly be proved that in such a period and with such a conception of the tasks of the proletariat there could be neither an integral strategy nor any elaborated tactics. There were fragmentary and detached ideas about tactics and strategy, but no tactics or strategy as such.

The mortal sin of the Second International was not that it pursued the tactics of utilizing the parliamentary forms of struggle, but that it overestimated the importance of these forms, that it considered them virtually the only forms; and that when the period of open revolutionary battles set in and the question of extra-parliamentary forms of struggle came to the fore the parties of the Second International turned their backs on these new tasks, refused to shoulder them.

Only in the subsequent period, in the period of direct action by the proletariat, in the period of proletarian revolution, when the question of overthrowing the bourgeoisie became a question of immediate action; when the question of the reserves of the proletariat (strategy) became one of the most burning questions; when all forms of struggle and of organization, parliamentary and extra-parliamentary (tactics) had fully mainfested themselves and became well-defined—only in this period could an integral strategy and elaborated tactics for the struggle of the proletariat be drawn up. It was precisely in that period that Lenin brought out into light of day the brilliant ideas of Marx and Engels on tactics and strategy that had been immured by the opportunists of the Second International. But Lenin did not confine himself to restoring certain tactical propositions of Marx and Engels. He developed them further and supplemented them with new ideas and propositions, combining them all into a system of rules and guiding principles for the leadership of the class struggle of the proletariat. Lenin's pamphlets, such as What Is To Be Done?; Two Tactics; Imperialism; State and Revolution; The Proletarian Revolution and the Renegade Kautsky; "Left-Wing" Communism, etc., will undoubtedly always be treasured as priceless contributions to the general store of Marxism, to its revolutionary arsenal. The strategy and tactics of Leninism constitute the science of leadership of the revolutionary struggle of the proletariat.

2. Stages of the Revolution, and Strategy

. . . . . .

Our revolution already passed through two stages, and after the October Revolution it has entered a third stage. Our strategy changed accordingly.

. . . . . .

Third stage. Commenced after the October Revolution. Objective: to consolidate the dictatorship of the proletariat in one country, using it as a base for the overthrow of imperialism in all countries. The revolution is spreading beyond the confines of one country; the period of world revolution has commenced. The main forces of the revolution: the dictatorship of the proletariat in one country, the revolutionary movement of the proletariat in all countries. Main reserves: the semi-proletarian and small-peasant masses in the developed countries, the liberation movement in the colonies and dependent countries. Direction of the main blow: isolation of the petty-bourgeois democrats, isolation of the parties of the Second International, which constitute the main support of the policy of compromise with imperialism. Plan for the disposition of forces: alliance of the proletarian revolution with the liberation movement in the colonies and the dependent countries.

* * * * * * * * * *

3. The Flow and Ebb of the Movement, and Tactics

Tactics are the determination of the line of conduct of the proletariat in the comparatively short period of the flow or ebb of the movement, of the rise or decline of the revolution, the fight to carry out this line by means of replacing old forms of struggle and organization by new ones, old slogans by new ones, by combining these forms, etc. While the object of strategy is to win the war against tsarism, let us say, or against the bourgeoisie, to carry the struggle against tsarism or against the bourgeoisie to its end, tactics concern themselves with less important objects, for they aim not at winning the war as a whole, but at winning a particular engagement, or a particular battle, at carrying through successfully a particular campaign or a particular action corresponding to the concrete circumstances in the given period of rise or decline of the revolution. Tactics are a part of strategy, subordinate to it and serving it.

* * * * * * * * * *

6. Reformism and Revolutionism

What is the difference between revolutionary tactics and reformist tactics?

Some think that Leninism is opposed to reforms, opposed to compromises and to agreements in general. This is absolutely wrong. Bolsheviks know as well as anybody else that in a certain sense "every little helps," that under certain conditions reforms in general, and compromises and agreements in particular, are necessary and useful.

"To carry on a war for the overthrow of the international bourgeoisie," says Lenin, "a war which is a hundred times more difficult, protracted and complicated than the most stubborn of ordinary wars between states, and to refuse beforehand to manoeuvre, to utilize the conflict of interests

(even though temporary) among one's enemies, to refuse to temporise and compromise with possible (even though transient, unstable, vacillating and conditional) allies—is not this ridiculous in the extreme? Is it not the same as if in the difficult ascent of an unexplored and heretofore inaccessible mountain we were to renounce beforehand the idea that at times we might have to go in zigzags, sometimes retracing our steps, sometimes giving up the course once selected and trying various others?" (Selected Works, Vol. X, p. 111.)

Obviously, therefore, it is not a matter of reforms or of compromises and agreements, but of the use people make of reforms and compromises.

To a reformist, reforms are everything, while revolutionary work is something incidental, something just to talk about, mere eyewash. That is why, with reformist tactics under the bourgeois regime, reforms are inevitably transformed into an instrument for strengthening that regime, an instrument for disintegrating the revolution.

To a revolutionary, on the contrary, the main thing is revolutionary work and not reforms; to him reforms are by-products of the revolution. That is why, with revolutionary tactics under the bourgeois regime, reforms are naturally transformed into instruments for disintegrating this regime, into instruments for strengthening the revolution, into a base for further development of the revolutionary movement.

The revolutionary will accept a reform in order to use it as an aid in combining legal work with illegal work, to intensify, under its cover, the illegal work for the revolutionary preparation of the masses for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

This is what making revolutionary use of reforms and agreements under the conditions of imperialism means.

The reformist, on the contrary, will accept reforms in order to renounce all illegal work, to thwart the preparation of the masses for the revolution and to rest in the shade of "bestowed" reforms.

This is what reformist tactics means.

This is the position in regard to reforms and agreements under imperialism.

VIII. The Party

But the Party is not merely the sum of Party organizations. The Party at the same time represents a single system of these organizations, their formal amalgamation into a single whole, with higher and lower leading bodies, with subordination of the minority to the majority, with practical decisions binding on all members of the Party. Without these conditions the Party cannot be a single organized whole capable of exercising systematic and organized leadership in the struggle of the working class.

"Formerly," says Lenin, "our Party was not a formally organized whole, but only the sum of separate groups, and therefore no other relations except those of ideological influence were possible between these groups. Now we have become an organized Party, and this implies the establishment of authority, the transformation of the power of ideas into the power of authority, the subordination of lower Party bodies to higher Party bodies." (Ibid., p. 291.)

The principle of the minority submitting to the majority, the principle of directing Party work from a centre, not infrequently gives rise to attacks on the part of wavering elements, to accusations of "bureaucracy," "formalism," etc. It need hardly be proved that systematic work by the Party, as one whole, and the directing of the struggle of the working class would have been impossible if these principles had not been adhered to. Leninism in the organizational question means unswerving application of these principles. Lenin terms the fight against these principles "Russian nihilism" and "aristocratic anarchism," deserving only of being ridiculed and swept aside.

The achievement and maintenance of the dictatorship of the proletariat is impossible without a party which is strong by reason of its solidarity and iron discipline. But iron discipline in the Party is inconceivable without unity of will, without complete and absolute unity of action on the part of all members of the Party. This does not mean, of course, that the possibility of contests of opinion within the Party is thereby precluded. On the contrary, iron discipline does not preclude but presupposes criticism and contest of opinion within the Party. Least of all does it mean that discipline must be "blind." On the contrary, iron discipline does not preclude but presupposes conscious and voluntary submission, for only conscious discipline can be truly iron discipline. But after a contest of opinion has been closed, after criticism has been exhausted and a decision has been arrived at, unity of will and unity of action of all Party members are the necessary condition without which neither Party unity nor iron discipline in the Party is conceivable.

"In the present epoch of acute civil war," says Lenin, "a Communist Party will be able to perform its duty only if it is organised in the most centralised manner, only if iron discipline bordering on military discipline prevails in it, and if its Party centre is a powerful and authoritative organ, wielding wide powers and enjoying the universal confidence of the members of the Party." (Selected Works, Vol. X, p. 204.)

This is the position in regard to discipline in the Party in the period of struggle preceding the achievement of the dictatorship.

The same, but to an even greater degree, must be said about discipline in the Party after the dictatorship has been achieved.

"Whoever in the least," says Lenin, "weakens the iron discipline of the Party of the proletariat (especially during its dictatorship) actually aids the bourgeoisie against the proletariat." (Selected Works, Vol. X, p. 84.)

But from this it follows that the existence of factions is incompatible either with the Party's unity or with its iron discipline. It need hardly be proved that the existence of factions leads to the existence of a number of centres and the existence of a number of centres connotes the absence of one common centre in the Party, the breaking up of the unity of will, the weakening and disintegration of discipline, the weakening and disintegration of the dictatorship. Of course, the parties of the Second International, which are fighting against the dictatorship of the proletariat and have no desire to lead the proletarians to power, can afford such liberalism as freedom of factions, for they have no need at all for iron discipline. But the parties of the Communist International, which base their activities on the task of achieving and consolidating the dictatorship of the proletariat, cannot afford to be "liberal" or to permit freedom of factions. The Party represents unity of will, which precludes all factionalism and division of authority in the Party.

Hence Lenin's warning about the "danger of factionalism from the point of view of Party unity and of effecting the unity of will of the vanguard of the proletariat as the fundamental condition for the success of the dictatorship of the proletariat," which is embodied in the special resolution of the Tenth Congress of our Party "On Party Unity." (Lenin, Selected Works, Vol. IX, p. 132.)

Hence Lenin's demand for the "complete elimination of all factionalism" and the "immediate dissolution of all groups, without exception, that had been formed on the basis of various platforms," on pain of "unconditional and immediate expulsion from the Party." (Ibid., pp. 133-34.)

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF AMERICA
SECTION OF THE THIRD COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL
MARCH *, 1921

REPORT OF THE THIRD CONVENTION

Thirty delegates and seven fraternal delegates met somewhere in the U. S. A., and for ten days thrashed out the problems of tactics and organization of the Communist Party, made history, and passed another milestone of the Communist movement in America. The arrangements for the holding of this convention, made by our technical committee, the silent and secret gathering together of the comrades from all parts of the country, and their safe return to their homes, is in itself a story which some day will be told when the annals of the proletariat revolution in America are compiled.

After waiting in vain for the U. C. P. to comply with the mandate of the Communist International to hold a joint convention upon the basis of proportional representation with the Communist Party, in order to effect unity between these two parties, the convention was called by the C. E. C. in compliance with the twenty-one points for affiliation to the Communist International, and to revise its program and constitution, in conformity with the Theses and Statutes of the C.I.

RESOLUTION ON UNITY WITH THE U. C. P.

The Communist Party of America, in convention assembled, unanimously declares:

That we endorse and confirm the position taken by the former C. E. C. of the Communist Party against holding of a unity convention with the united Communist Party upon the arbitrary basis of equal representation.

We maintain that real and organic unity between the Communist Party of America and the united Communist Party can be reached only upon the basis of proportional representation.

We instruct our central executive committee to maintain this position, which is included in the mandate of the executive committee of the Communist International, unless the Communist International sends other instructions.

. . . . . .

Another amendment was made to insert the words "for the final destruction of the burgeois state" and this was accepted by the chairman, and around this motion the question was thrashed out in heated debate. Many new formulations were offered until finally a new committee was elected to reformulate the entire clause. This concluded that day's session, and the next morning the clause was adopted as follows:—"The Communist Party will systematically and persistently propagate to the working class the idea of the inevitability of, the necessity for a violent revolution and will prepare the working class for armed insurrection as the only means for the destruction of the bourgeois state and the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship based upon soviet power." This clause was unanimously adopted by roll call vote by all present.

. . . . . .

The various resolutions adopted by the convention (with the exception of those which are not printed for conspiratorial reasons) will be found on another page in this issue.

Resolution on Acceptance of the 21 Points for Affiliation with C. I.

The Communist Party of America, Section of the Communist International, assembled in its Special Convention held in February, 1921, hereby reaffirms its position as an integral part of the Communist International.

The Special Convention, in conformity with the conditions for admission adopted by the Second World Congress of the Communist International, and after discussion and due deliberation, endorses and adopts unanimously, on roll call vote, the 21 Points for Affiliation with the Communist International, as binding upon all the delegates present, and for its entire membership, without any reservations.

. . . . . .

Basing itself on the experience of the revolutionary labor movement on all continents and of all peoples, the Communist International, in its theoretical and practical work, stands wholly and unreservedly upon the ground of revolutionary Marxism and its further development, Leninism, which is nothing else but Marxism of the epoch of imperialism and proletarian revolution.

Advocating and propagating the dialectical materialism of Marx and Engels and employing it as a revolutionary method of conceiving reality, with the view to the revolutionary transformation of this reality, the Communist International wages an active struggle against all forms of bourgeois philosophy and against all forms of theoretical and practical opportunism. Standing on the ground of consistent proletarian class struggle and subordinating the temporary, partial group and national interests of the proletariat to its lasting, general, international interests, the Communist International mercilessly exposes all forms of the doctrine of "class peace" that the reformists have accepted from the bourgeoisie. Expressing the historical need for an international organization of revolutionary proletarians—the grave-diggers of the capitalist order—the Communist International is the only international force that has for its programme the dictatorship of the proletariat and Communism, and that openly comes out as the organizer of the international proletarian revolution.

II. The General Crisis of Capitalism and the First Phase of World Revolution

As a result of the first round of imperialist wars (the world war of 1914-1918) and of the October victory of the working class in the former Russian Tsarist Empire, world economy has been split into two fundamentally hostile camps: the camp of the imperialist States and the camp of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the U.S.S.R. The difference in class structure and in the class character of the government in the two camps, the fundamental differences in the aims each pursues in internal, foreign, economic and cultural policy, the fundamentally different courses of their development, brings the capitalist world into sharp conflict with the victorious proletarian State. Within the framework of a formerly uniform world economy, two antagonistic systems are now contesting against each other: the system of capitalism and the system of socialism. The class struggle, which hitherto was conducted in circumstances when the proletariat was not in possession of State power, is now being conducted on an enormous and really world scale; the working class of the world has now its own State—the one and only fatherland of the international proletariat. The existence of the Soviet Union and the influence it exercises upon the toiling and oppressed masses all over the world is in itself a most striking expression of the profound crisis of the world capitalist system and of the expansion and intensification of the class struggle to a degree hitherto without parallel in history.

The capitalist world, powerless to eliminate its inherent contradictions, strives to establish international associations (the League of Nations) the main purpose of which is to retard the irresistible growth of the revolutionary crisis and to strangle the Soviet Proletarian Republics by war or blockade. At the same time, all the forces of the revolutionary proletariat and of the oppressed colonial masses are rallying around the U.S.S.R. The world coalition of Capital, unstable, internally corroded, but armed to the teeth, is confronted by a single world coalition of Labor. Thus, as a result of the first round of imperialist wars a new, fundamental antagonism has arisen of world historical scope and significance; the antagonism between the U.S.S.R. and the capitalist world.

* * * * * * * * * *

Finally, the revolutionary crisis is inexorably maturing in the very centres of imperialism: the capitalist offensive against the working class, the attack upon the workers' standard of living, upon their organizations and their political rights, and the growth of white terror, rouse increasing resistance on the part of the broad masses of the proletariat and intensify the class struggle between the working class and trustified capital. The great battles fought between Labor and Capital, the accelerated swing to the left of the masses, the growth in the influence and authority of the Communist Parties; the enormous growth of sympathy of the broad masses of workers for the land of the proletarian dictatorship—all this is a clear symptom of the rise of a new revolutionary tide in the centres of imperialism.

Thus, the system of world imperialism, and with it the partial stabilization of capitalism, is being corroded from various causes: First, the antagonisms and conflicts between the imperialist States; second, the rising for the struggle of vast masses in the colonial countries; third, the action of the revolutionary proletariat in the imperialist home countries; and lastly, the hegemony exercised over the whole world revolutionary movement by the proletarian dictatorship in the U.S.S.R. The international revolution is developing.

Against this revolution, imperialism is gathering its forces. Expeditions against the colonies, a new world war, a campaign against the U.S.S.R. are matters which now figure prominently in the politics of imperialism. This must lead to the release of all the forces of international revolution and to the inevitable doom of capitalism.

III. The Ultimate Aim of the Communist International ### World Communism

The ultimate aim of the Communist International, to replace world capitalist economy by a world system of Communism. Communist society, the basis for which has been prepared by the whole course of historical development, is mankind's only way out, for it alone can abolish the contradictions of the capitalist system which threaten to degrade and destroy the human race.

Communist society will abolish the class division of society, i.e., simultaneously with the abolition of anarchy in production, it will abolish all forces of exploitation and oppression of man by man. Society will no longer consist of antagonistic classes in conflict with each other, but will represent a united commonwealth of labor. For the first time in its history mankind will take its fate into its own hands: Instead of destroying innumerable human lives and incalculable wealth in struggles between classes and nations, mankind will devote all its energy to the struggle against the forces of nature, to the development and strengthening of its own collective might.

After abolishing private ownership in the means of production and converting them into social property, the world system of Communism will replace the elemental forces of the world market, of competition and the blind process of social production, by consciously organized and planned production for the purpose of satisfying rapidly growing social needs. With the abolition of competition and anarchy in production, devastating crises and still more devastating wars will disappear. Instead of colossal waste of productive forces and spasmodic development of society—there will be planned utilization of all material resources and painless economic development on the basis of unrestricted, smooth and rapid development of productive forces.

The abolition of private property and the disappearance of classes will do away with the exploitation of man by man. Work will cease to be toiling for the benefit of a class enemy: instead of being merely a means of livelihood it will become a necessity of life: want and economic inequality, the misery of enslaved classes, and a wretched standard of life generally will disappear; the hierarchy created in the division of labor system will be abolished together with the antagonism between mental and manual labor; and the last vestige of the social inequality of sexes will be removed. At the same time, the organs of class domination, and the State in the first place, will disappear also. The State, being the embodiment of class domination, will die out in so far as classes die out, and with it all measures of coercion will expire.

IV. The Period of Transition From Capitalism to Socialism and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

I. The Transition Period and the Conquest of Power by the Proletariat

Between capitalist society and Communist society a period of revolutionary transformation intervenes, during which the one changes into the other. Correspondingly, there is also an intervening period of political transition, in which the essential State form is the revolutionary dictatorship of the proletariat. The transition from the world dictatorship of imperialism to the world dictatorship of the proletariat extends over a long period of proletarian struggles with defeats as well as victories; a period of continuous general crisis in capitalist relationships and growth of social revolutions, i.e., of proletarian civil wars against the bourgeoisie; a period of national wars and colonial rebellions which, although not in themselves revolutionary proletarian socialist movements, are nevertheless, objectively, insofar as they undermine the domination of imperialism, constituent parts of the world proletarian revolution; a period in which capitalist and social economic and social systems exist side by side in "peaceful" relationships as well as in armed conflict; a period of formation of a Union of Soviet Republics; a period of wars of imperialist States against Soviet States; a period in which the ties between the Soviet States and colonial peoples become more and more closely established, etc.

Uneven economic and political development is an absolute law of capitalism. This unevenness is still more pronounced and acute in the epoch of imperialism. Hence, it follows that the international proletarian revolution cannot be conceived as a single event occurring simultaneously all over the world; at first socialism may be victorious in a few, or even in one single capitalist country. Every such proletarian victory, however, broadens the basis of the world revolution and consequently, still further intensifies the general crisis of capitalism. Thus, the capitalist system as a whole reaches the point of its final collapse; the dictatorship of finance capital perishes and gives place to the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Bourgeois revolutions brought about the political liberation of a system of productive relationships that had already established itself and become economically dominant, and transferred political power from the hands of one class of exploiters to the hands of another. Proletarian revolution, however, signifies the forcible invasion of the proletariat into the domain of property relationships of bourgeois society, the expropriation of the expropriating classes, and the transference of power to a class that aims at the radical reconstruction of the economic foundations of society and the abolition of all exploitation of man by man. The political domination of the feudal barons all over the world was broken in a series of separate bourgeois revolutions that extended over a period of centuries. The international proletarian revolution, however, although it will not be a single simultaneous act, but one extending over a whole epoch, nevertheless—thanks to the closer ties that now exist between the countries of the world, will accomplish its mission in a much shorter period of time. Only after the proletariat has achieved victory and consolidated its power all over the world will a prolonged period of intensive construction of world socialist economy set in.

The conquest of power by the proletariat is a necessary condition precedent to the growth of socialist forms of economy and to the cultural growth of the proletariat, which changes its own nature, perfects itself for the leadership of society in all spheres of life, draws into this process of transformation all other classes and thus prepares the ground for the abolition of classes altogether.

In the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat, and later for the transformation of the social system, as against the alliance of capitalists and landlords an alliance of workers and peasants is formed, under the intellectual and political hegemony of the former, an alliance which serves as the basis for the dictatorship of the proletariat.

The characteristic feature of the transition period as a whole, is the ruthless suppression of the resistance of the exploiters, the organization of Socialist Construction, the mass training of men and women in the spirit of Socialism and the gradual disappearance of classes. Only to the extent that these great historical tasks are fulfilled will society of the transition period become transformed into Communist society.

Thus, the dictatorship of the world proletariat is an essential and vital condition precedent to the transition of world capitalist economy to socialist economy. This world dictatorship can be established only when the victory of socialism has been achieved in certain countries or groups of countries, when the newly established proletarian republics enter into a federal union with the already existing proletarian republics, when the number of such federations has grown and extended also to the colonies which have emancipated themselves from the yoke of imperialism; when these federations of republics have finally grown into a World Union of Soviet Socialist Republics uniting the whole of mankind under the hegemony of the international proletariat organized as a State.

The conquest of power by the proletariat does not mean peacefully "capturing" the ready-made bourgeois State machinery by means of a parliamentary majority. The bourgeoisie resorts to every means of violence and terror to safeguard and strengthen its predatory property and its political domination. Like the feudal nobility of the past, the bourgeoisie cannot abandon its historical position to the new class without a desperate and frantic struggle. Hence, the violence of the bourgeoisie can be suppressed only by the stern violence of the proletariat. The conquest of power by the proletariat is the violent overthrow of bourgeois power, the destruction of the capitalist State apparatus (bourgeois armies, police, bureaucratic hierarchy, the judiciary, parliaments, etc.), and substituting in its place new organs of proletarian power, to serve primarily as instruments for the suppression of the exploiters.

V. The Dictatorship of the Proletariat in the U.S.S.R. and the International Social Revolution

* * * * * * * * * * *

3. The Duties of the International Proletariat to the U. S. S. R.

In view of the fact that the U.S.S.R. is the only fatherland of the international proletariat, the principal bulwark of its achievements and the most important factor for its international emancipation, the international proletariat must on its part facilitate the success of the work of Socialist construction in the U.S.S.R. and defend her against the attacks of the capitalist powers by all the means in its power.

"The world political situation has made the dictatorship of the proletariat an immediate issue, and all the events of world politics are inevitably concentrating around one central point, namely, the struggle of the world bourgeoisie against the Soviet Russian Republic, which must inevitably group around itself the Soviet movements of the advanced workers of all countries on the one hand, and all the national liberation movements of the colonial and oppressed nationalities on the other." (Lenin).

In the event of the imperialist States declaring war upon and attacking the U.S.S.R., the international proletariat must retaliate by organizing bold and determined mass action and struggling for the overthrow of the imperialist governments with the slogan of: Dictatorship of the proletariat and alliance with the U.S.S.R.

In the colonies, and particularly the colonies of the imperialist country attacking the U.S.S.R., every effort must be made to take advantage of the diversion of the imperialist military forces to develop an anti-imperialist struggle and to organize revolutionary action for the purpose of throwing off the yoke of imperialism and of winning complete independence.

The development of Socialism in the U.S.S.R. and the growth of its international influence not only rouse the hatred of the capitalist States and their Social-Democratic agents against her, but also inspire the toilers all over the world with sympathy towards her and stimulate the readiness of the oppressed classes of all countries to fight with all the means in their power for the land of the proletarian dictatorship, in the event of an imperialist attack upon her.

Thus, the development of the contradictions within modern world economy, the development of the general capitalist crisis, and the imperialist military attack upon the Soviet Union inevitably lead to a mighty revolutionary outbreak which must overwhelm capitalism in a number of the so-called civilized countries, unleash the victorious revolution in the colonies, broaden the base of the proletarian dictatorship to an enormous degree and thus, with tremendous strides, bring nearer the final world victory of Socialism.

VI. The Strategy and Tactics of the Communist International in the Struggle for the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

* * * * * * * * * *

2. The Fundamental Tasks of Communist Strategy and Tactics

The successful struggle of the Communist International for the dictatorship of the proletariat presupposes the existence in every country of a compact Communist Party, hardened in the struggle, disciplined, centralized, and closely linked up with the masses.

The Party is the vanguard of the working class and consists of the best, most class-conscious, most active, and most courageous members of that class. It incorporates the whole body of experience of the proletarian struggle. Basing itself upon the revolutionary theory of Marxism and representing the general and lasting interests of the whole of the working class, the Party personifies the unity of proletarian principles, of proletarian will and of proletarian revolutionary action. It is a revolutionary organization, bound by iron discipline and strict revolutionary rules of democratic centralism, which can be carried out thanks to the class-consciousness of the proletarian vanguard, to its loyalty to the revolution, its ability to maintain inseparable ties with the proletarian masses and to its correct political leadership, which is constantly verified and clarified by the experiences of the masses themselves.

In order that it may fulfill its historic mission of achieving the dictatorship of the proletariat, the Communist Party must first of all set itself and accomplish the following fundamental strategic aims:

Extend its influence over the majority of the members of its own class, including working women and the working youth. To achieve this the Communist Party must secure predominant influence in the broad mass proletarian organizations (Soviets, trade unions, factory councils, co-operative societies, sport organizations, cultural organizations, etc.). It is particularly important for the purpose of winning over the majority of the proletariat, to capture the trade unions, which are genuine mass working class organizations closely bound up with the every-day struggles of the working class. To work in reactionary trade unions and skillfully to capture them, to win the confidence of the broad masses of the industrially organized workers, to change and "remove from their posts" the reformist leaders, represent important tasks in the preparatory period.

The achievement of the dictatorship of the proletariat presupposes also that the proletariat acquires hegemony over wide sections of the toiling masses. To accomplish this the Communist Party must extend its influence over the masses of the urban and rural poor, over the lower strata of the intelligentsia and over the so-called "small man," i. e. the petty-bourgeois strata generally. It is particularly important that work be carried on for the purpose of extending the Party's influence over the peasantry. The Communist Party must secure for itself the whole-hearted support of that stratum of the rural population that stands closest to the proletariat, i. e. the agricultural laborers and the rural poor. To this end, the agricultural laborers must be organized in separate organizations; all possible support must be given them in their struggles against the rural bourgeoisie, and strenuous work must be carried on among the small allotment farmers and small peasants. In regard to the middle strata of the peasantry in developed capitalist countries, the Communist Parties must conduct a policy to secure their neutrality. The fulfillment of all these tasks by the proletariat,—the champion of the interests of the whole people and the leader of the broad masses in their struggle against the oppression of finance capital,—is an essential condition precedent for the victorious Communist revolution.

The tasks of the Communist International connected with the revolutionary struggle in colonies, semi-colonies and dependencies are extremely important strategical tasks in the world proletarian struggle. The colonial struggle presupposes that the broad masses of the working class and of the peasantry in the colonies be rallied round the banner of the revolution; but this cannot be achieved unless the closest co-operation is maintained between the proletariat in the oppressing countries and the toiling masses in the oppressed countries.

While organizing, under the banner of the proletarian dictatorship, the revolution against imperialism in the so-called civilized States, the Communist International supports every movement against imperialist violence in the colonies, semi-colonies and dependencies themselves (for example Latin-America); it carries on propaganda against all forms of chauvinism and against the imperialist maltreatment of enslaved peoples and races, big and small (treatment of Negroes, "yellow labor", anti-semitism, etc.), and supports their struggles against the bourgeoisie of the oppressing nations. The Communist International especially combats the chauvinism that is preached in the Empire-owning countries by the imperialist bourgeoisie as well as by its Social-Democratic agency, the Second International, and constantly holds up in contrast to the practices of the imperialist bourgeoisie the practice of the Soviet Union, which has established relations of fraternity and equality among the nationalities inhabiting it.

The Communist Parties in the imperialist countries must render systematic aid to the colonial revolutionary liberation movement and to the movement of oppressed nationalities generally. The duty of rendering active support to these movements rests primarily upon the workers in the countries upon which the oppressed nations are economically, financially or politically dependent. The Communist Parties must openly recognize the right of the colonies to separation and their right to carry on propaganda for this separation, i.e. propaganda in favor of the independence of the colonies from the imperialist State; they must recognize their right of armed defence against imperialism (i. e. the right of rebellion and revolutionary war) and advocate and give active support to this defence by all the means in their power. The Communist Parties must adopt this line of policy in regard to all oppressed nations.

The Communist Parties in the colonial and semi-colonial countries must carry on a bold and consistent struggle against foreign imperialism and unfailingly conduct propaganda in favor of friendship and unity with the proletariat in the imperialist countries. They must openly advance, conduct propaganda for and carry out the slogan of agrarian revolution, rouse the broad masses of the peasantry for the overthrow of the landlords and combat the reactionary and mediaeval influence of the clergy, of the missionaries and other, similar elements.

In these countries, the principal task is to organize the workers and the peasantry independently (to establish class Communist Parties of the proletariat, trade unions, peasant leagues and committees and, in a revolutionary situation, Soviet, etc.) and to free them from the influence of the national bourgeoisie, with whom temporory agreements may be made only on the condition that they, the bourgeoisie, do not hamper the revolutionary organization of the workers and peasants, and that they carry on a genuine struggle against imperialism.

In determining its line of tactics, each Communist Party must take into account the concrete internal and external situation, the correlation of class forces, the degree of stability and strength of the bourgeoisie, the degree of preparedness of the proletariat, the position taken up by the various intermediary strata in its country, etc. The Party determines its slogans and methods of struggle in accordance with these circumstances, with the view to organizing and mobilizing the masses on the broadest possible scale and on the highest possible level of this struggle.

When a revolutionary situation is developing, the Party advances certain transitional slogans and partial demands corresponding to the concrete situation; but these demands and slogans must be bent to the revolutionary aim of capturing power and of overthrowing bourgeois capitalist society. The Party must neither stand aloof from the daily needs and struggles of the working class nor confine its activities exclusively to them. The task of the Party is to utilize these minor every-day needs as a starting point from which to lead the working class to the revolutionary struggle for power.

When the revolutionary tide is rising, when the ruling classes are disorganized, the masses are in a state of revolutionary ferment, the intermediary strata are inclining towards the proletariat and the masses are ready for action and for sacrifice, the Party of the proletariat is confronted with the task of leading the masses to a direct attack upon the bourgeois State. This it does by carrying on propaganda in favor of increasingly radical transitional slogans (for Soviets, workers' control of industry, for peasant committees for the seizure of the big landed properties, for disarming the bourgeoisie and arming the proletariat, etc.) and by organizing mass action, upon which all branches of Party agitation and propaganda, including parliamentary activity, must be concentrated. This mass action includes: a combination of strikes and demonstrations; a combination of strikes and armed demonstrations and finally, the general strike conjointly with armed insurrection against the state power of the bourgeoisie. The latter form of struggle, which is the supreme form, must be conducted according to the rules of war; it presupposes a plan of campaign, offensive fighting operations and unbounded devotion and heroism on the part of the proletariat. An absolutely essential condition precedent for this form of action is the organization of the broad masses into militant units, which, by their very form, embrace and set into action the largest possible numbers of toilers (Council of Workers' Deputies, Soldiers' Councils, etc.), and intensified revolutionary work in the army and the navy.

In passing over to new and more radical slogans, the Parties must be guided by the fundamental role of the political tactics of Leninism, which call for ability to lead the masses to revolutionary positions in such a manner that the masses may, by their own experience, convince themselves of the correctness of the Party line. Failure to observe this rule must inevitably lead to isolation from the masses, to putschism, to the ideological degeneration of Communism into "Leftist" dogmatism and to petty-bourgeois "revolutionary" adventurism. Failure to take advantage of the culminating point in the development of the revolutionary situation, when the Party of the proletariat is called upon to conduct a bold and determined attack upon the enemy, is not less dangerous. To allow that opportunity to slip by and to fail to start rebellion at that point, means to allow the initiative to pass to the enemy and to doom the revolution to defeat.

When the revolutionary tide is not rising, the Communist Parties must advance partial slogans and demands that correspond to the everyday needs of the toilers, and combine them with the fundamental tasks of the Communist International. The Communist Parties must not, however, at such a time, advance transitional slogans that are applicable only to revolutionary situations (for example workers' control of industry, etc.). To advance such slogans when there is no revolutionary situation means to transform them into slogans that favor merging with the capitalist system of organization. Partial demands and slogans generally form an essential part of correct tactics; but certain transitional slogans go inseparably with a revolutionary situation. Repudiation of partial demands and transitional slogans "on principle", however, is incompatible with the tactical principles of Communism, for in effect, such repudiation condemns the Party to inaction and isolates it from the masses. United front tactics also occupy an important place in the tactics of the Communist Parties throughout the whole pre-revolutionary period as a means towards achieving success in the struggle against capital, towards the class mobilization of the masses and the exposure and isolation of the reformist leaders.

The correct application of united front tactics and the fulfillment of the general task of winning over the masses presuppose in their turn systematic and persistent work in the trade unions and other mass proletarian organizations. It is the bounden duty of every Communist to belong to a trade union, even a most reactionary one, provided it is a mass organization. Only by constant and persistent work in the trade unions and in the factories for the steadfast and energetic defence of the interests of the workers, together with ruthless struggle against the reformist bureaucracy, will it be possible to win the leadership in the workers' struggle and to win the industrially organized workers over to the side of the Party.

Unlike the reformists, whose policy is to split the trade unions, the Communists defend trade union unity nationally and internationally on the basis of the class struggle, and render every support to and strengthen the work of the Red International of Labor Unions.

In universally championing the current everyday needs of the masses of the workers and of the toilers generally, in utilizing the bourgeois parliament as a platform for revolutionary agitation and propaganda, and subordinating the partial tasks to the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat, the Parties of the Communist International advance partial demands and slogans in the following main spheres:

In the sphere of Labor, in the narrow meaning of the term, i. e. question concerned with the industrial struggle (the fight against the trustified capitalist offensive, wage questions, the working day, compulsory arbitration, unemployment), which grow into questions of the general political struggle (big industrial conflicts, fight for the right to organize, right to strike, etc.); in the sphere of politics proper (taxation, high cost of living, Fascism, persecution of revolutionary parties, white terror and current politics generally); and finally the sphere of world politics; viz., attitude towards the U. S. S. R. and colonial revolutions, struggle for the unity of the international trade union movement, struggle against imperialism and the war danger, and systematic preparation for the fight against imperialist war.

In the sphere of the peasant problem, the partial demands are those appertaining to taxation, peasant mortgage indebtedness, struggle against usurer's capital, the land hunger of the peasant small holders, rent, the metayer (cropsharing) system. Starting out from these partial needs, the Communist Party must sharpen the respective slogans and broaden them out into the slogans: confiscation of large estates, and workers' and peasants' government (the synonym for proletarian dictatorship in developed capitalist countries and for democratic dictatorship of the proletariat and peasantry in backward countries and in certain colonies).

Systematic work must also be carried on among the proletarian and peasant youth (mainly through the Young Communist International and its Sections) and also among working women and peasant women. This work must concern itself with the special conditions of life and struggle of the working and peasant women, and their demands must be linked up with the general demands and fighting slogans of the proletariat.

In the struggle against colonial oppression, the Communist Parties in the colonies must advance partial demands that correspond to the special circumstances prevailing in each country such as: complete equality for all nations and races; abolition of all privileges for foreigners; the right of association for workers and peasants; reduction of the working day; prohibition of child labor; prohibition of usury and of all transactions entailing bondage; reduction and abolition of rent; reduction of taxation; refusal to pay taxes, etc. All these partial slogans must be subordinate to the fundamental demands of the Communist Parties such as: complete political national independence and the expulsion of the imperialists; workers' and peasants' government, the land to the whole people, eight-hour day, etc. The Communist Parties in imperialist countries, while supporting the struggle proceeding in the colonies, must carry on a campaign in their own respective countries for the withdrawal of imperialist troops, conduct propaganda in the army and navy in defence of the oppressed countries fighting for their liberation, mobilize the masses to refuse to transport troops and munitions and, in connection with this, to organize strikes and other forms of mass protest, etc.

The Communist International must devote itself especially to systematic preparation for the struggle against the danger of imperialist wars. Ruthless exposure of social chauvinism, of social imperialism and of pacifist phrasemongering intended to camouflage the imperialist plans of the bourgeoisie; propaganda in favor of the principal slogans of the Communist International; everyday organizational work in connection with this, in the course of which work legal methods must unfailingly be combined with illegal methods; organized work in the army and navy—such must be the activity of the Communist Parties in this connection. The fundamental slogans of the Communist International in this connection must be the following: Convert imperialist war into civil war; defeat the "home" imperialist government; defend the U. S. S. R. and the colonies by every possible means in the event of imperialist war against them. It is the bounden duty of all Sections of the Communist International, and of every one of its members, to carry on propaganda for these slogans, to expose the "socialistic" sophisms and the "socialist" camouflage of the League of Nations and constantly to keep to the front the experiences of the war of 1914—1918.

In order that revolutionary work and revolutionary action may be coordinated and in order that these activities may be guided most successfully, the international proletariat must be bound by international class discipline, for which, first of all, it is most important to have the strictest international discipline in the Communist ranks.

This international Communist discipline must find expression in the subordination of the partial and local interests of the movement to its general and lasting interests and in the strict fulfillment, by all members, of the decisions passed by the leading bodies of the Communist International.

Unlike the Social-Democratic, Second International, each section of which submits to the discipline of "its own", national bourgeoisie and of its own "fatherland," the sections of the Communist International submit to only one discipline, viz., international proletarian discipline, which guarantees victory in the struggle of the world's workers for world proletarian dictatorship. Unlike the Second International, which splits the trade unions, fights against colonial peoples, and practices unity with the bourgeoisie, the Communist International is an organization that guards proletarian unity in all countries and the unity of the toilers of all races and all peoples in their struggle against the yoke of imperialism.

Despite the bloody terror of the bourgeoisie, the Communists fight with courage and devotion on all sectors of the international class front, in the firm conviction that the victory of the proletariat is inevitable and cannot be averted.

"The Communists disdain to conceal their views and aims. They openly declare that their aims can be attained only by the forcible overthrow of all the existing social conditions. Let the ruling class tremble at a Communistic revolution. The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win.

"Workers of all countries, unite!"

Constitution and Rules of the Communist International

I. Name and Objects

1. The Communist International—the International Workers' Association—is a union of Communist Parties in various countries; it is a World Communist Party. As the leader and organizer of the world revolutionary movement of the proletariat and the upholder of the principles and aims of Communism, the Communist International strives to win over the majority of the working class and the broad strata of the propertyless peasantry, fights for the establishment of the world dictatorship of the proletariat, for the establishment of the World Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, for the complete abolition of classes and for the achievement of socialism—the first stage of Communist society.

2. Each of the various Parties affiliated to the Communist International is called the Communist Party of _____ [name of country] (Section of the Communist International). In any given country there can be only one Communist Party affiliated to the Communist International and representing its Section in that country.

3. Membership in the Communist Party and in the Communist International is open to all those who accept the programme and rules of the given Communist Party and of the Communist International, who join one of the basic units of a Party, actively work at it, abide by all the decisions of the Party and of the Communist International, and regularly pay Party dues.

4. The basic unit of the Communist Party organization is the nucleus in the place of employment (factory, workshop, mine, office, store, farm, etc.) which unites all the Party members employed in the given enterprise.

5. The Communist International and its Sections are built up on the basis of democratic centralism, the fundamental principles of which are: (a) election of all the leading committees of the Party, subordinate and superior (by general meetings of Party members, conferences, congresses and international congresses); (b) periodical reports by leading Party committees to their constituents; (c) decisions of superior Party committees to be obligatory for subordinate committees, strict Party discipline and prompt execution of the decisions of the Communist International, of its leading committees and of the leading Party centres.

Party questions may be discussed by the members of the Party and by Party organizations until such time as a decision is taken upon them by the competent Party committees. After a decision has been taken by the Congress of the Communist International, by the Congress of the respective Sections, or by leading committees of the Comintern, and of its various Sections, these decisions must be unreservedly carried out even if a Section of the Party membership or of the local Party organizations are in disagreement with it.

In cases where a Party exists illegally, the superior Party committees may appoint the subordinate committees and co-opt members on their own committees, subject to subsequent endorsement by the competent superior Party committees.

6. In all non-Party workers' and peasants' mass organizations and in their leading committees (trade unions, co-operative societies, sport organizations, ex-service men's organizations, and at their congresses and conferences) and also on municipal bodies and in parliament, even if there are only two Party members in such organizations and bodies, Communist fractions must be formed for the purpose of strengthening the Party's influence and for carrying out its policy in these organizations and bodies.

7. The Communist fractions are subordinated to the competent Party bodies.

Note: 1. Communist fractions in international organizations (Red International of Labor Unions, International Class War Prisoners' Aid Society, International Red Aid Society, etc.), are subordinate to the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

2. The organizational structure of the Communist fractions and the manner in which their work is guided are determined by special instructions from the Executive Committee of the Communist International and from the Central Committees of the given Sections of the Comintern.

II. The World Congress of the Communist International

8. The supreme body of the Communist International is the World Congress of representatives of all Parties (Sections) and organizations affiliated to the Communist International.

The World Congress discusses and decides programme, tactical and organizational questions connected with the activities of the Communist International and of its various Sections. Power to alter the programme and rules of the Communist International lies exclusively with the World Congress of the Communist International.

The World Congress shall be convened once every two years. The date of the Congress and the number of representatives from the various Sections to the Congress to be determined by the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

The number of decisive votes to be allocated to each Section at the World Congress shall be determined by a special decision of the Congress itself, in accordance with the membership of the given Party and the political importance of the given country. Delegates to the Congress must have a free mandate; no imperative mandate can be recognized.

9. Special Congresses of the Communist International shall be convened on the demand of Parties which, at the preceding World Congress had an aggregate of not less than one-half of the decisive votes.

10. The World Congress elects the Executive Committee of the Communist International (E.C.C.I.), and the International Control Commission (I.C.C.),

11. The headquarters of the Executive Committee is decided on by the World Congress.

III. The Executive Committee of the Communist International and its Subsidiary Bodies

12. The leading body of the Communist International in the period between Congresses is the Executive Committee, which gives instructions to all the Sections of the Communist International and controls their activity.

The E.C.C.I. publishes the Central Organ of the Communist International, in not less than four languages.

13. The decisions of the E.C.C.I are obligatory for all the Sections of the Communist International and must be promptly carried out. The Sections have the right to appeal against decisions of the E.C.C.I. to the World Congress, but must continue to carry out such decisions pending the decision of the World Congress.

14. The Central Committees of the various Sections of the Communist International are responsible to their respective Party Congresses and to the E.C.C.I. The latter has the right to annul or amend decisions of Party Congresses and of Central Committees of Parties and also to make decisions which are obligatory for them. (Cf. Par. 13.)

15. The E.C.C.I. has the right to expel from the Communist International, entire Sections, groups and individual members who violate the programme and rules of the Communist International or the decisions of the World Congress and of the E.C.C.I. Persons and bodies expelled have the right of appeal to the World Congress.

16. The programmes of the various Sections of the Communist International must be endorsed by the E.C.C.I. In the event of the E.C.C.I. refusing to endorse a programme, the Section concerned has the right to appeal to the World Congress of the Communist International.

17. The leading organs of the press of the various Sections of the Communist International must publish all the decisions and official documents of the E.C.C.I. These decisions must, as far as possible, be published also in the other organs of the Party press.

18. The E.C.C.I. has the right to accept affiliation to the Communist International of organizations and Parties sympathetic to Communism, such organizations to have a consultative voice.

19. The E.C.C.I. elects a Presidium responsible to the E.C.C.I., which acts as the permanent body carrying out all the business of the E.C.C.I. in the interval between the meetings of the latter.

20. The E.C.C.I. and its Presidium have the right to establish Permanent Bureaus (Western European, South American, Eastern and other Bureaus of the E.C.C.I.), for the purpose of establishing closer contact with the various Sections of the Communist International and in order to be better able to guide their work.

Note: The scope of the activities of the permanent bureaus of the E.C.C.I. shall be determined by the E.C.C.I. or by its Presidium. The Sections of the Communist International which come within the scope of activities of the permanent bureaus of the E.C.C.I. must be informed of the powers conferred on these bureaus.

21. The Sections must carry out the instructions of the permanent bureaus of the E.C.C.I. Sections may appeal against the instructions of the permanent bureaus to the E.C.C.I. or to its Presidium, but must continue to carry out such instructions pending the decision of the E.C.C.I. or of its Presidium.

22. The E.C.C.I. and its Presidium have the right to send their representatives to the various Sections of the Communist International. Such representatives receive their instructions from the E.C.C.I. or from its Presidium, and are responsible to them for their activities. Representatives of the E.C.C.I. have the right to participate in meetings of the central Party bodies as well as of the local organizations of the Sections to which they are sent. Representatives of the E.C.C.I. must carry out their commission in close contact with the Central Committee of the Section to which they are sent. They may, however, speak in opposition to the Central Committee of the given Section, at Congresses and Conferences of that Section, if the line of the Central Committee in question diverges from the instructions of the E.C.C.I. Representatives of the E.C.C.I. are especially obliged to supervise the carrying out of the decisions of the World Congresses and of the Executive Committee of the Communist International.

The E.C.C.I. and its Presidium also have the right to send instructors to the various Sections of the Communist International. The powers and duties of instructors are determined by the E.C.C.I., to whom the instructors are responsible in their work.

23. Meetings of the E.C.C.I. must take place not less than once every six months. A quorum consists of not less than one-half of the membership of the E.C.C.I.

24. Meetings of the Presidium of the E.C.C.I. must take place not less than once a fortnight. A quorum consists of not less than one-half of the membership of the Presidium.

25. The Presidium elects the Political Secretariat, which is empowered to take decisions, and which also prepares questions for the meetings of the E.C.C.I. and of its Presidium, and acts as their executant body.

26. The Presidium appoints the editorial committees of the periodical and other publications of the Communist International.

27. The Presidium of the E.C.C.I. sets up a Department for Work among Women Toilers, permanent committees for guiding the work of definite groups of Sections of the Communist International (National Secretariats) and other departments for its work.

IV. The International Control Commission

28. The International Control Commission investigates matters concerning the unity of the Sections affiliated to the Communist International and also matters connected with the Communist conduct of individual members of the various Sections.

For this purpose the I.C.C.

(a) Examines complaints against the actions of Central Committees of Communist Parties lodged by Party members who have been subjected to disciplinary measures for political differences;

(b) Examines such analogous matters concerning members of central bodies of Communist Parties and of individual Party members as it deems necessary, or which are submitted to it by the deciding bodies of the E.C.C.I.;

(c) Audits the accounts of the Communist International.

The International Control Commission must not intervene in the political differences or in organizational administrative conflicts in the Communist Parties.

The headquarters of the I.C.C. are fixed by the I.C.C., in agreement with the E.C.C.I.

V. The Relationships Between the Sections of the Communist International and the E.C.C.I.

29. The Central Committees of Sections affiliated to the Communist International and the Central Committees of affiliated sympathizing organizations must send to the E.C.C.I. the Minutes of their meetings and reports of their work.

30. Resignation from office by individual members or groups of members of Central Committees of the various Sections are regarded as disruptive of the Communist movement. Leading posts in the Party do not belong to the occupant of that post, but to the Communist International as a whole. Elected members of the Central leading bodies of the various Sections may resign before their time of office expires only with the consent of the E.C.C.I. Resignations accepted by Central Committees of Sections without the consent of the E.C.C.I. are invalid.

31. The Sections affiliated to the Communist International must maintain close organizational and informational contact with each other, arrange for mutual representation at each other's conferences and congresses, and with the consent of the E.C.C.I., exchange leading comrades. This applies particularly to the Sections in imperialist countries and their colonies, and to the Sections in countries adjacent to each other.

32. Two or more Sections of the Communist International which (like the Sections in the Scandinavian countries and in the Balkans) are politically connected with each other by common conditions of struggle, may, with the consent of the E.C.C.I., form federations for the purpose of co-ordinating their activities, such federations to work under the guidance and control of the E.C.C.I.

33. The Sections of the Comintern must regularly pay affiliation dues to the E.C.C.I.; the amount of such dues to be determined by the E.C.C.I.

34. Congresses of the various Sections, ordinary and special, can be convened only with the consent of the E.C.C.I.

In the event of a Section failing to convene a Party Congress prior to the convening of a World Congress, that Section, before electing delegates to the World Congress, must convene a Party conference, or Plenum of its Central Committee, for the purpose of preparing the questions for the World Congress.

35. The International League of Communist Youth (Communist Youth International) is a Section of the Communist International with full rights and is subordinate to the E.C.C.I.

36. The Communist Parties must be prepared for transition to illegal conditions. The E.C.C.I. must render the Parties concerned assistance in their preparations for transition to illegal conditions.

37. Individual members of Sections of the Communist International may pass from one country to another only with the consent of the Central Committee of the Section of which they are members.

Communists changing their domicile must join the Section in the country of their new domicile. Communists leaving their country without the consent of the Central Committee of their Section, must not be accepted into other Sections of the Communist International.

THE COMMUNIST
MARCH, 1934

MILESTONES OF COMINTERN LEADERSHIP

By ALEX BITTELMAN

The proletarian vanguard of the United States can justly take pride in the fact that it participated actively in the building of the Communist International, whose fifteenth anniversary falls in March of this year. At the same time, the revolutionary vanguard of this country can derive deep satisfaction from the fact that it unfailingly received brotherly advice and guidance from the Communist International in the struggle for the revolutionization of the American working class. It was from the outset, and continues to be so, a mutual collaboration of the revolutionary proletariat of all countries, organized in a world party, for the victory of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat, for the establishment of a World Soviet Republic. The leading role of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in the Comintern needs neither explanation nor apology. A party that has opened up the epoch of the world revolution, and that is successfully building a classless society on one sixth of the earth, is cheerfully recognized and followed as the leading party of the world communist movement. And by the same token, the leaders of that party—first Lenin and now Stalin—are proudly followed as the leaders of the proletariat and of all oppressed in every country of the world.

* * * * * * * * * * *

If it were possible to imagine those years without a Communist International (which, of course, is impossible), these struggles for Communist unity would have been infinitely more protracted, wasteful, and harmful than was actually the case. But there was a Communist International, led by Lenin, and consequently, there was made available to the revolutionary workers of the United States the world experiences and prestige of the Bolshevik movement which has gone through a long struggle with opportunism and built up a united Communist Party. These experiences the Comintern utilized in order to help the American Communists of those years to solve their own specific problems of unity and these problems were solved. A unified and single Communist Party was materialized in the United States in shorter time, less painfully and wastefully, than would have been the case without the advice and assistance of the Comintern.

We come now to another milestone of Comintern leadership. This time it was the problem of breaking through the walls of illegality erected by the American bourgeoisie between the young Communist Party and the working class. The Communists, having been driven underground and outlawed by the forerunners of the present New Dealers—Wilson-Palmer—in 1919-1920, were struggling to find their way to the masses despite the illegality and governmental persecutions. What were the special difficulties for the solution of this problem? They arose from the danger of seeking to achieve legality by sacrificing Communist principles and hiding the revolutionary line, on the one hand, and from the danger of trying to preserve intact the Communist principles by abandoning all serious fight for legal and open work, on the other hand. The way to the masses, the Communist Party could then find only by fighting and overcoming these Right and "left" opportunist dangers. One of the founders of the recently launched Muste American Workers' Party, Hardman-Salutsky, was at that time especially active in trying to switch the Communist movement to the path of buying legality by sacrificing the revolutionary line. Lacking the necessary Leninist training and experience, the American Communist Party found it extremely difficult to reach the correct solution of this task and was therefore torn between the two opportunist dangers of legalistic liquidation of the Communist Party and underground sectarianism. Once more the American Communists consulted with the Communist International. This was in 1921-1922. And the correct advice came, as it was bound to, and with its help the Workers' Party of America was organized which opened up for the illegal Communist Party of America wide opportunities for open revolutionary work among the masses. Illegal work, that is, revolutionary mass work that could not be done openly because of governmental persecutions, was not abandoned but continued; the illegal work supplementing the legal, and vice versa. The Party authority continued to rest in the underground Communist Party, as it should be under these conditions. And when the influence of the Communists in the Workers' Party had become firmly established, and the basic revolutionary mass work could be carried on through the Workers' Party legally, then the underground Communist Party became merged with the Workers' Party, that is, the latter became the Communist Party of the country. American Communism thus solved its immediate task and reached a higher stage in its development towards becoming the mass Party of the American proletariat.

What was it that proved especially helpful for the American Communists in the Comintern advice on legal and illegal work? It was the world and Russian experience of Bolshevism. Under Lenin's guidance the Bolsheviks had repeatedly met and solved such and similar problems and solved them successfully, as history has proved. The Bolshevik solutions, while primarily applied in Russia because there was the Party to do it, were based upon the experiences of the working class movement all over the world and thus acquired an international significance. The American Communists have been helped by the Comintern in applying these solutions to American conditions. In doing so they have not only defeated the efforts of the bourgeoisie to strangle the revolutionary movement in the period of 1919-1921, but have also acquired knowledge and skill to defeat such efforts again, especially in the present period of sharp turn to fascism and war which inevitably brings new attacks upon the legality of the Communist Party and the working class movement as a whole. Will any sincere and militant worker in the United States, who is loyal to his class and its liberation from the misery and sufferings of capitalism, reproach the Comintern for having helped the American revolutionary workers to defeat the Wilson-Palmer persecutions? And will such a worker hold it against the American Communist Party for having accepted this helpful guidance? No, only Muste-Hardman & Co., led by the renegades, will indulge in such reproaches, because this warm and select company is echoing the raging chauvinism of the Yankee imperialist.

The next milestone in the Comintern leadership for the American Party we find on the question of trade union work. On this, more perhaps than on any other question, the left and militant elements in the American labor movement, in the two decades before the emergence of the Comintern (not to go into the pre-imperialist era), had got themselves tangled up in insoluble difficulties, torn between reformism and anarcho-syndicalism, only because they were unable, by their own efforts, to restore and further develop the revolutionary teachings of Marx and to apply them to the United States of the imperialist era. Lenin did that; but the American militants (even they) were too provincial, not enough international, because still influenced by bourgeois ideology, to find out what Leninism stands for and what it could do for the progress of the American working class. The Comintern brought the American militants and lefts closer to the world labor movement and to the basic problems of the American labor movement. The trade union question was one of them. The young American Communist movement struggled painfully to throw off the ballast of Gompers-Hillquit reformism and DeLeon-I.W.W. sectarianism, sometimes falling victim to the former, at other times to the latter, and occasionally to both. Even the best and most experienced among the left and militant leaders of the American workers, the builders and founders of the revolutionary movement of the American workers in the imperialist era, such as the late Charles E. Ruthenberg, as well as the present leader of our Party, William Z. Foster, were able to rid themselves and our movement of the old ballast of opportunism only by coming closer to Leninism and into the Comintern. By becoming more international, the proletarian vanguard in the United States has become also more American, because the international experience, as it is incorporated in Leninism and in Comintern guidance, helped the American Communists to come closer to the basic masses of the American proletariat and to begin to function as the leaders of its struggles against American capitalism.

It was Comintern advice and guidance that helped the American Communists to turn full face to the building of a left-wing in the reformist unions beginning with 1920; it was the advice of the Comintern that helped formulate a correct solution to one of the basic problems of the American proletariat—the organization of the unorganized into trade unions; it was advice of the Comintern on independent leadership of the economic struggles by the revolutionary elements that helped formulate strike policies and tactics; it was Comintern advice of how to revolutionize the labor movement through organization and leadership of the daily struggles of the masses and systematic exposure and struggle against the reformists, that helped the American Communists to prove to wide masses of workers and toilers that the C.P.U.S.A. is the only true proletarian party in the United States and the leader of all exploited. In short, at every stage in the development of the revolutionary trade union movement in the United States (T.U.E.L., class struggle unions of the T.U.U.L., the application of the united front on the trade union field, the fight for trade union unity, etc.), it was with the help of the Comintern that the American revolutionary workers were able to find the correct way, to correct their errors and, through manifold changes in tactics, to press on to the goal of building a revolutionary trade union movement in the United States.

Comintern influence on the development of revolutionary trade union policies in the United States has special significance. Here as in other capitalist countries the imperialist bourgeoisie, with the help of the reformists, succeeded in splitting the working class, setting the small minority of "labor aristocrats" against the basic mass of the proletariat. Following out this policy, the reformist trade union bureaucracy was persistently shutting out of trade union organization the bulk of the American proletariat, especially its most oppressed and exploited sections. This it was that constituted and still constitutes one of the chief weaknesses of the American working class. And the most damning indictment against the A. F. of L. bureaucracy is its discrimination and exclusion of the Negro proletariat. It is significant, therefore, that the first question which Comrade Stalin put to the American trade union delegation was: "How do you account for the small percentage of American workers organized in trade unions?" And he added: "I would like to ask the delegation whether it regards this small percentage of organized workers as a good thing. Does not the delegation think that this small percentage is an indication of the weakness of the American proletariat and of the weakness of its weapon in the struggle against the capitalists in the economic field?" This was in 1927. Lack of space does not permit to deal here with the answer of the delegation. Suffice it to say that this delegation, made up as it was of so-called progressives, really bourgeois liberals, was in its answers, at best, very helpless and confused. But the intent of Stalin's question is clear: Why don't you organize the workers in trade unions? Why don't you strengthen them against the capitalists? And it was in this direction that the Comintern threw the full weight of its influence and advice in the American labor movement. Organize the basic sections of the proletariat into unions, liberate the existing mass trade unions from the stranglehold of the reformists, and unify the trade union movement of this country—this was the nature of Comintern guidance to the revolutionary workers in the United States. Tactics and methods of work might vary, depending upon the state of the class struggle. In the light of recent events, the Communist Party favors the organization of independent unions in those cases where such a measure would constitute a step in advance towards the revolutionization of the trade union movement. But the strategic aim always remained the same, and for this aim the Communist Party fights bravely and persistently and with increasing effectiveness. The general crisis of capitalism, undermining the basis of existence of large numbers of the "labor aristocracy" as well as of the working class as a whole, creates ever more favorable conditions for the realization of this aim. So, we ask again: can any American worker, who is alive to the needs of his class and is willing to fight for them, find anything to object to in this "interference" of the Communist International in American affairs? And will he object to the Communist Party of the U. S. accepting and taking deep satisfaction in such "interference"? No, he will not. Only Muste and Co., abetted by the renegades, will object and will call it "outside dictation", because these groups echo the mad chauvinism of the Yankee imperialists.

We shall now relate another significant instance of Comintern leadership in the U.S. In the years 1921-1924, one of the important phases of the American labor movement was a widespread urge for the organization of a Labor Party. The left-wing in the Socialist Party, and the first Communist Party conventions, took a completely negative attitude towards it. But in their struggle to establish contact with the masses and with their movements against capitalism and its major political parties, the American Communists came to adopt the position of active participation in the Labor Party movements. The aim of this position was to accelerate the existing break-away movement of the workers and toiling farmers from the capitalist parties and to direct this movement along the channels of independent working class political action. Comintern influence and advice strengthened the American Communists in this determination, thus helping to overcome the various sectarian objections to such a policy.

* * * * * * * * * *

We come to a milestone of Comintern leadership in the U. S. that has been especially fruitful in making the fight for proletarian internationalism live and real and in projecting the liberating mission of the American proletariat in a most concrete and telling manner. We refer here to the Communist program for Negro liberation. It was no accident that this was the problem—the Negro problem in the U. S.—that it took the revolutionary workers of America the longest, in point of time, to become aware of and to find a solution for. Bourgeois ideology, the "white prejudices" of the old slave market, had poisoned the minds, not alone of the backward strata of the toilers, but also the most advanced sections. And thus we find that the left-wing of the Socialist Party which formed the Communist Party somehow "overlooked" the national-revolutionary significance of the Negro liberation struggles. And even when the American communists had finally begun to grapple with the Negro question in a Leninist way, starting practical mass work to organize the white and Negro toilers to struggle for Negro rights, there still was considerable hesitation and confusion among the weaker elements of the Communist movement to project boldly the full Leninist solution of the problem. Once more came the "outside" influence of the Comintern; and what did it say? It said that the struggle against discrimination and for Negro rights is a revolutionary struggle for the national liberation of the Negroes, that we must fight for complete Negro equality, and that in the Black Belt the full realization of this demand requires the fight for the national self-determination of the Negroes, including the right to separation from the United States and the organization of an independent state. Furthermore, it was the interpretation of Leninism and its application to the United States as made by the Comintern that showed the American Communists that the agrarian revolution in the Black Belt, where the Negro masses are mostly peasants and semi-serfs, is the basis of the national-liberation movement and that this movement is one of the allies of the American proletariat in the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat. The Lovestone renegades advocate the bourgeois theory that capitalist development itself, the "industrialization of the South", will solve the Negro question. The Communist Party—following the lead of the Comintern—says that only the national-revolutionary movement of the Negroes, as an organic part and ally of the proletarian revolution, will solve the Negro question. From this point of view, the American Communists are able to expose the Muste-Hardman position on this question as bourgeois liberalism in words and Yankee white chauvinism in deeds. Will the Negro workers, farmers, and city poor consider the Comintern advice on the Negro question as "outside dictation"? No. They will, as they actually do, receive this advice with outstretched arms and will continue in ever-larger masses to rally around the Communist Party as the leader of the liberation fight. And will the white workers, those belonging to the dominating nationality in the United States but who are already awake to their true interests, will they perhaps resent this advice as "outside dictation"? No. Some of these class-conscious white workers may still hesitate because they are as yet not completely free from the bourgeois curse of white chauvinism, but none of them will say that this advice is not in the best interests of the American working class and of all exploited.

. . . . . .

And lastly—the liquidation of the factional situation in the Communist Party. It is on this, more than anything else, that the Muste-Hardman outfit, led by the Lovestone renegades and the Trotskyist counter-revolutionaries, choose to illustrate the "outside dictation" and interference of the Communist International. Well, the facts speak for themselves.

* * * * * * * * * * *

But this disaster did not happen. And why? Because the Comintern spoke to the American Party with authority and wisdom; in so speaking, in pointing out the dangers and the way to avoid them, the Comintern released the initiative and creative activity of the overwhelming majority of the Party, the initiative that had become paralyzed during the years of factional fight; and on the basis of this initiative of the Party membership, with the help of this power, the Party was able to cleanse itself of the hopelessly factional elements and of the Right and "left" opportunist groupings that went with the factions and thus laid the basis for the subsequent unification of the Party and its fresh start on the field of revolutionary mass work. The Comintern did "interfere"; there can be no doubt of that. And it is fortunate that it did.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In the fifteen years of its existence the Comintern has grown into a true World Party. It has reached the high stage where all "Communist Parties are carrying out one single line of the Comintern", a stage where all "Communist Parties are united by the Executive Committee of the Communist International into a single centralized World Party which the Second International never had and never will have" (Piatnitsky, Speech at the Thirteenth Plenum of the E.C.C.I.). In this lies the main strength of the world revolution and the guarantee of its inevitable victory. It is this that makes possible, for the first time in the history of the world, the effective carrying out of a world revolutionary strategy, the only road to victory over capitalism. And it is in Comrade Stalin, since Lenin's death, that this strategy has found the greatest formulator, interpreter, and organizer. With the deepest pride in this achievement, the class-conscious workers of the United States, the militant farmers and revolutionary Negroes will celebrate the 15th Anniversary of the Comintern. It is with the same feeling of pride that they will realize that they belong to a World Party together with the glorious Party of the Soviet Union; that they belong to a world Party which is daily guided by such proved leaders as Manuilsky, Kuusinen, Thaelmann and Piatnitsky; and that by building the revolutionary movement in the United States we are also building the world power of the proletariat for the victory of the world revolution.

THESIS AND RESOLUTIONS FOR THE SEVENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE U. S. A.

By Central Committee Plenum
March 31—April 4, 1930

Thesis on the Economic and Political Situation and Tasks of the Party

* * * * * * * * * *

Sharpening War Danger

4. The development of the economic crisis extremely sharpens the general contradictions of the capitalist system and brings still closer the danger of a new war.

* * * * * * * * * *

In this situation the danger of an imperialist attack against the Soviet Union becomes particularly acute. A war against the Soviet Union, the fortress and outpost of the revolutionary working class of the world, is a war of the capitalist world against the realizing Socialist aim of the toiling masses, is at the same time for the capitalists an immediate outlet from the present economic crisis, giving to capitalism a new tremendous market of destruction and the hope of the reacquisition of the markets of the Soviet Union and breaking the Socialism in construction in the Soviet Union, the tremendous economic advantages of which already begin to shake the capitalist world.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Daily Worker

20. To succeed in the full mobilization of the Party for its tasks the Central Committee must pay special attention to the press and primarily to the Daily Worker. In order to make the Daily Worker the political leading organ of the Party and at the same time an effective mass agitator and organizer, it is necessary to take steps immediately for the political improvement of the Daily as well as for the building of a mass circulation.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Party must therefore make a sharp turn in its trade union activities. A full mobilization of all Communist forces must be carried through for the organization of the unorganized masses, for the building of the Trade Union Unity League. The T.U.U.L. must be made into an organization uniting the broad masses of workers, organizing them for the struggle of their daily interests, and leading that struggle along political lines. Through these struggles for their daily interests and through the organization of the workers for that struggle, the T.U.U.L. will bring the broad masses to an understanding and acceptance of Communist line, strategy and tactics. Being a school of revolutionary struggle for the broad working masses, the T.U.U.L. becomes a lever and the main reserve for the Party. All Communists must belong to the T.U.U.L.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Resolution on Building the Trade Union Unity League

Part I.—General Analysis

I. The Role of the Party

The most fundamental task of our Party in mass work is the building of the revolutionary unions of the Trade Union

Unity League into broad mass organs of struggle. The recent communications of the Comintern and Profintern have again laid stress upon this elementary necessity. It is in this work that there lies the key to the development of our Party into a mass Communist Party.

Part II—Our Concrete Tasks

7. Defense of the Soviet Union—Fight Against Imperialist War

In all the mass activities of the T.U.U.L. the question of the fight against the impending imperialist war and the struggle in defense of the Soviet Union must be kept in the very foreground. The T.U.U.L. must spare no effort to popularize the achievements of the Russian workers in building socialism. The masses of unemployed and radicalized workers are inspired by the progress of the Soviet Union and are highly receptive to our propaganda against imperialist war.

Tasks of Our Party in the South

Economic and Political Situation

1. The situation in the South today confirms the previous estimates and perspectives laid down in the October thesis and makes clear the correctness of the thesis of the Sixth Congress of the Communist International and the Tenth Plenum in placing the greatest emphasis on the importance of basing our Party solidly in the masses of Southern workers—Negro and white.

In particular does the present situation and the work of our Party over the period of a year confirm in the clearest manner the correctness of the Comintern in instructing our Party to concentrate its efforts among the Negro masses of the South and bring forward in the sharpest manner the central demand of full social, economic and political equality for Negroes.

* * * * * * * * * * *

22. Organizational Proposals:

* * * * * * * * * * *

A director for work among Negro masses shall be sent South at once. A full-time six-week Party training school shall be established in some Southern centers. A number of colonizers must be secured for the decisive industries. Additional forces for the TUUL must be secured.

For Equality and Self-Determination for Negroes

With the latest resolution of the ECCI on the Negro question, we are taking a bold step forward in concretizing a Bolshevist program. The struggle for the rights of the Negroes, for complete equality everywhere, and for the right of self-determination in the Black Belt where the Negroes constitute a majority of the population, is the path along which the Communist Party will unite with the workers a powerful ally in the struggle against American imperialism.

Forward to New Struggles—New Victories

We enter a winter of deep crisis for world capitalism, and for capitalism in the United States. The forces of revolution are rising throughout the world. Buttressed and inspired by the magnificent march of socialist construction in the Soviet Union, under the dictatorship of the proletariat, the oppressed classes and peoples all over the world are gathering their forces and are beginning to struggle for the overthrow of imperialism. In China already is rising the foundations of the Soviet Power. Throughout the colonial world the imperialist regime is shaking under the blows of the rising masses. In Germany and several other countries of Western and Central Europe a severe political crisis is rapidly bringing to maturity the conditions for a revolutionary struggle for power by the workers. In the United States capitalism plunges deeper and deeper into the worst economic crisis of its history, which already presses forty millions of the population into misery, cold and starvation, and prepares the stage for an unprecedented political crisis.

In this world situation the working class of the United States, and above all its vanguard, the Communist Party, has duties of supreme importance, not only for itself, but also for the world revolution. These duties can only be performed adequately by energetically readjusting all methods of work, by organizing the masses, mobilizing them for struggle for immediate demands, widening the ranks of the Party and building its cadres, building mass revolutionary unions, fighting for the unemployed and uniting them with the employed workers, drawing into the fighting front the poor farmers and Negro masses, and by rousing the masses to the struggle against imperialist war and for defense of the Soviet Union, and for support to the rising colonial peoples, all of which is the only path of preparation for our own "November 7th" which shall end the rule of capitalism.

Forward to new struggles and new victories!

JAPAN, AMERICA AND THE SOVIET UNION

EXTRACTS FROM THE SPEECH OF EARL BROWDER AT THE PLENUM OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE, APRIL 17, 1932.

We are meeting at a moment when tremendous changes are taking place in the world. It is not necessary for me to prove this fact by quoting long lists of statistics to show the unprecedented depth of the crisis.

In the present conditions, we must understand that in the revolutionary struggle of the world proletariat against world imperialism, our stronghold, our fortress is precisely the Soviet Union, and its socialist construction. And we must understand that this socialist construction, the building of the socialist economy in the Soviet Union, is so profoundly important for the resistance to and the crushing of this imperialist war, that every month that is gained in postponing this war, means a change of the relation of forces in favor of us when the war comes. If the war can be postponed one month it means capitalism has been weakened that much, Socialism has been strengthened that much. It means that the Soviet Union has had another full 30 days to readjust all of its inner forces to meet the serious every day necessities that war will throw upon them.

When you understand that, you understand that not only every month is important, but every week is important, every day is important. You could almost even say that every hour is important. Our whole strategy is based upon the necessity to mobilize all forces by every means to postpone the outbreak of war, and the strategy of the imperialists is to force war as quickly as possible.

How can we mobilize the widest possible mass resistance to the entrance of the United States into war against the Soviet Union? Precisely by making use to the fullest possible extent of this certain historical factor, that the spearhead of the war is Japan and between Japan and the United States there is a long standing antagonism which, independently of us, has developed mass sentiment against Japanese imperialism. It is an absolute Bolshevik duty for the Communist Party of the United States to make the fullest possible mobilization of this mass sentiment no matter what its origin, against Japanese imperialism, mobilize this sentiment against the United States government to prevent it from entering into war against the Soviet Union together with Japan and the other imperialist powers.

The fullest possible mobilization of all such forces may not suffice to prevent whatever alignment will be determined by the capitalist class, by finance capital, upon the basis of their special specific understanding of their class interests. But even in the worst case, our mobilization can create additional difficulties for them, can weaken their mobilization to a certain extent, and thereby strengthen the capacity for resistance of the Soviet Union and the world proletariat.

. . . . . .

The struggle against war is concerned not only with these more complicated difficult problems. The struggle against the war danger, the defense of the Soviet Union cannot wield much force behind it unless it is intimately connected up with and based upon concrete struggles for partial demands of the workers in the United States.

THE WAY OUT

A Program for American Labor

Manifesto and Principal Resolutions adopted by the Eighth Convention of the Communist Party of the U.S.A., held in Cleveland, Ohio, April 2-8, 1934

Introduction by M. J. Olgin

Published in May, 1934 by

. . . . . .

Terms Explained

. . . . . .

Renegades are those who were formerly members of the Communist Party but were expelled from it for failure to follow the correct revolutionary line and who now fight against the revolutionary movement and against the Soviet Union. One group of renegades is led by an individual named Lovestone and another considers Trotsky its leader. These elements are used by the capitalists to delude those workers who are becoming radicalized. The renegades profess to be Communists, "true Communists", "real Communists", but they are as far from Communism as the leaders of the Socialist Party are far from Socialism. In their daily practice they work hand in hand with the reformists and are part and parcel of the social-fascist crew.

The E.C.C.I. is the Executive Committee of the Communist International. It is the general staff of the world revolutionary movement giving unity and leadership to the Communist Parties of the world. The E.C.C.I. meets in plenary session at intervals of between six months and one year.

The body acting in highest authority between one plenary session (Plenum) of the E.C.C.I. and the other, is the Presidium of the Communist International. The Communist Party of the U.S.A. is the American Section of the Communist International (Comintern).

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Y.C.L. (Young Communist League) is a mass political organization of young workers which leads them in the struggles for all their demands and acts as a training school for Communism. The Y.C.L. is organizationally independent of the Communist Party but acknowledges its political leadership. It is affiliated to the Y.C.I. (Young Communist International).

Some abbreviations: C.C. means Central Committee of the Communist Party; D.O. means District Organizer of the Communist Party (there are twenty-six such districts in the United States).

Against the "New Deal" of Hunger, Fascism, and War! For the Revolutionary Solution of the Crisis!

* * * * * * * * * * *

The crisis cannot be solved for the toiling masses until the rule of Wall Street has been broken and the rule of the working class has been established. The only way out of the crisis for the toiling masses is the revolutionary way out—the abolition of capitalist rule and capitalism, the establishment of the Socialist society through the power of a revolutionary workers' government, a Soviet government.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Its victories are an unending source of inspiration and encouragement to the toiling masses of every country. They are the living example of the possibility of finding a way out of the crisis in the interests of the toilers. The experience of the victorious workers of the Soviet Union before, during and after the seizure of power, throw a brilliant light showing the path which must be followed in every land, the path of Bolshevism, of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin.

In the same period of successful testing of the Bolshevik road in the Soviet Union, we have also the example of the results of the policies of the Socialist Parties of the Second International.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Their "civilized" methods opened wide the gates for the most barbarous regime in the modern history of Europe. Their "peaceful" methods gave birth to the most bloody and violent reaction. Their "democracy" brought forth the most brutal and open capitalist dictatorship. Their "gradual transition to Socialism" helped to restore the uncontrolled rule of finance capital, the master of fascism. The German and Austrian working class, after 16 years of bitter and bloody lessons of the true meaning of the policies of the Socialist Parties, of the Second International, have now finally begun to turn away from them and at last to take the Bolshevik path.

* * * * * * * * * * *

There is no way out except by the creation of a revolutionary democracy of the toilers, which is at the same time a stern dictatorship against the capitalists and their agents. There is no way out except by seizing from the capitalists the industries, the banks and all of the economic institutions, and transforming them into the common property of all under the direction of the revolutionary government. There is no way out, in short, except by the abolition of the capitalist system and the establishment of a Socialist society.

SEVENTH CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

. . . . . .

INCLUDING THE CLOSING SPEECH OF G. DIMITROFF
PUBLISHED BY WORKERS LIBRARY PUBLISHERS

. . . . . .

The Seventh World Congress of the Communist International was held in Moscow from July 25 to August 20, 1935.

. . . . . .

THE PRESENT RULERS OF THE CAPITALIST COUNTRIES ARE BUT TEMPORARY, THE REAL MASTER OF THE WORLD IS THE PROLETARIAT

BY GEORGI DIMITROFF

. . . . . .

Ours is a Congress of struggle for the preservation of peace, against the threat of imperialist war.

We are now raising the issue of this struggle in a new way. Our Congress is decidedly opposed to the fatalistic outlook on the question of imperialist war emanating from old Social-Democratic notions.

It is true that imperialist wars are the product of capitalism, that only the overthrow of capitalism will put an end to all war; but it is likewise true that the toiling masses can obstruct imperialist war by their militant action.

Today the world is not what it was in 1914.

Today on one-sixth of the globe there exists a powerful proletarian state that relies on the material strength of victorious socialism. Guided by Stalin's wise peace policy, the Soviet Union has already more than once brought to naught the aggressive plans of the instigators of war. (Applause.)

Today the world proletariat, in its struggle against war, has at its disposal not only its weapon of mass action, as it did in 1914. Today the mass struggle of the international working class against war is coupled with the influence of the Soviet Union as a state, of its powerful Red Army, the most important guardian of the peace, (Loud applause.)

Today the working class is not under the exclusive influence of Social-Democracy participating in a bloc with the bourgeoisie, as was the case in 1914. Today there is the World Communist Party, the Communist International. (Applause.) Today the bulk of the Social-Democratic workers are turning to the Soviet Union, to its policy of peace, to a united front with the Communists. Today the peoples of the colonial and semi-colonial countries do not regard their liberation as a hopeless cause. On the contrary, they are passing on more and more to determined struggle against the imperialist enslavers. The best evidence of this is the Soviet revolution in China and the heroic exploits of the Red Army of the Chinese people. (Stormy applause. All delegates rise. Loud cheering.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

Ours has been a Congress of a new tactical orientation for for the Communist International.

Standing firmly on the impregnable position of Marxism-Leninism, which has been confirmed by the entire experience of the international labor movement, and primarily by the victories of the great October Revolution, our Congress, acting in the spirit and guided by the method of living Marxism-Leninism, has reshaped the tactical lines of the Communist International to meet the changed world situation.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Championing, as we do, working class unity, we shall with so much the more energy and irreconcilibility fight for unity within our Parties. There can be no room in our Parties for factions, or for attempts at factionalism. Whoever will try to break up the iron unity of our ranks by any kind of factionalism will get to feel what is meant by the Bolshevik discipline that Lenin and Stalin have always taught us. (Applause.) Let this be a warning to those few elements in individual Parties who think that they can take advantage of the difficulties of their Party, the wounds of defeat or the blows of the raging enemy, to carry out their factional plans, to further their own group interests. (Applause.) The Party is above every thing else! (Loud applause.) To guard the Bolshevik unity of the Party as the apple of one's eye is the first and highest law of Bolshevism!

* * * * * * * * * *

The Offensive of Fascism and the Tasks of the Communist International in the Fight for the Unity of the Working Class Against Fascism

(Resolution on the Report of Georgi Dimitroff, Adopted August 20, 1935 by the Seventh Congress of the Communist International)

I. Fascism and the Working Class

1. The Seventh Congress of the Communist International declares that the alignment of class forces in the international arena and the tasks facing the labor movement of the world are determined by the following basic changes in the world situation:

(a) The final and irrevocable victory of socialism in the Land of the Soviets, a victory of world importance, which has enormously enhanced the power and role of the U.S.S.R. as the bulwark of the exploited and oppressed of the whole world, and is inspiring the toilers to struggle against capitalist exploitation, bourgeois reaction and fascism, for peace, and for the freedom and independence of the peoples.

(b) The most profound economic crisis in the history of capitalism, from which the bourgeoisie has tried to extricate itself by ruining the masses of the people, by dooming tens of millions of unemployed to starvation and extinction, and by lowering the standard of living of the toilers to an unprecedented extent.

* * * * * * * * * *

(c) The offensive of fascism, the advent to power of the fascists in Germany, the growth of the threat of a new imperialist world war and of an attack on the U.S.S.R., by means of which the capitalist world is seeking a way out of the impasse of its contradictions.

(d) The political crisis, expressed in the armed struggle of the workers in Austria and Spain against the fascists, a struggle which has not yet led to the victory of the proletariat over fascism, but which prevented the bourgeoisie from consolidating its fascist dictatorship; the powerful anti-fascist movement in France, which began with the February demonstration and the general strike of the proletariat in 1934.

(e) The revolutionization of the toiling masses throughout the whole capitalist world which is taking place under the influence of the victory of socialism in the U.S.S.R. and of the world economic crisis, also on the basis of the lessons derived from the temporary defeat of the proletariat in the central part of Europe—in Germany—as well as in Austria and Spain, that is, in countries where the majority of the organized workers supported Social-Democratic Parties. A powerful urge for unity of action is growing in the ranks of the international working class. The revolutionary movement in the colonial countries and the Soviet revolution in China are extending. The relationship of class forces on a world scale is changing more and more in the direction of a growth of the forces of revolution.

* * * * * * * * * * *

With this as its point of departure, the Seventh Congress of the Communist International enjoins the Communist Parties to be guided by the following instructions when carrying out the united front tactics:

1. The defense of the immediate economic and political interests of the working class, the defense of the latter against fascism, must be the starting point and form the main content of the workers' united front in all capitalist countries. In order to set the broad masses in motion, such slogans and forms of struggle must be put forward as arise from the vital needs of the masses and from the level of their fighting capacity at the given stage of development. Communists must not limit themselves to merely issuing appeals to struggle for proletarian dictatorship, but must show the masses what they are to do today to defend themselves against capitalist plunder and fascist barbarity. They must strive, through the joint action of the labor organizations, to mobilize the masses around a program of demands that are calculated really to shift the burden of the consequences of the crisis onto the shoulders of the ruling classes, demands, the fight to realize which, disorganizes fascism, hampers the preparations for imperialist war, weakens the bourgeoisie and strengthens the positions of the proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * *

Holding that the interests of the class struggle of the proletariat and the success of the proletarian revolution make it imperative that a single mass political party of the working class exist in every country, the Congress sets the Communist Parties the task of taking the initiative in bringing about this unity, relying on the growing desire of the workers to unite the Social-Democratic Parties or individual organizations with the Communist Parties. At the same time it must be explained to the workers without fail that such unity is possible only under certain conditions: under the condition of complete independence from the bourgeoisie and the complete severance of the bloc between Social-Democracy and the bourgeoisie, under the condition that unity of action be first brought about, that the necessity of the revolutionary overthrow of the rule of the bourgeoisie and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the form of Soviets be recognized, that support of one's own bourgeoisie in imperialist war be rejected, and that the party be constructed on the basis of democratic centralism which ensures unity of will and action and has been tested by the experience of the Russian Bolsheviks.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Tasks of the Communist International in Connection with the Preparations of the Imperialists for a New World War

(Resolution on the Report of M. Ercoli, Adopted August 20, 1935 by the Seventh Congress of the Communist International)

. . . . . .

At the present historical juncture, when on one-sixth part of the globe the Soviet Union defends socialism and peace for all humanity, the most vital interests of the workers and toilers of all countries demand that in pursuing the policy of the working class, in waging the struggle for peace, the struggle against imperialist war before and after the outbreak of hostilities, the defense of the Soviet Union must be considered paramount.

If the commencement of a counter-revolutionary war forces the Soviet Union to set the Workers' and Peasants' Red Army in motion for the defense of socialism, the Communists will call upon all toilers to work, with all means at their disposal and at any price, for the victory of the Red Army over the armies of the imperialists.

PROBLEMS OF LENINISM

Definition of Leninism

"Leninism is Marxism in the epoch of imperialism and of the proletarian revolution. Or, to be more exact, Leninism is the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution in general, the theory and tactics of the dictatorship of the proletariat in particular." *

Is this definition correct?

I think so. It is correct, firstly, because it correctly indicates the historical roots of Leninism, characterising it as Marxism of the epoch of imperialism—as against certain critics of Lenin who incorrectly consider that Leninism originated after the imperialist war. It is correct, secondly, because it correctly notes the international character of Leninism—as against the Social-Democrats, who consider that Leninism is applicable only to Russian national conditions. It is correct, thirdly, because it correctly notes the organic connection between Leninism and the teachings of Marx, characterising Leninism as Marxism of the epoch of imperialism—as against certain critics of Leninism who consider it not as a further development of Marxism, but merely as the restoration of Marxism and its application to Russian conditions.

One would think that all this does not need any special comment.

* Joseph Stalin, Foundations of Leninism (International Publishers).—Ed.

Nevertheless, it appears that there are comrades in our Party who consider it necessary to define Leninism somewhat differently. For example, Comrade Zinoviev thinks that: "Leninism is Marxism in the epoch of imperialist war and of the world revolution which began directly in a country where the peasantry predominates." [Italics by Zinoviev. —J. S.] (Zinoviev, "Bolshevism or Trotskyism," Pravda, November 30, 1924.)

What can be the meaning of the words underlined by Comrade Zinoviev? What does it mean to introduce the backwardness of Russia, its peasant character, into a definition of Leninism?

It means the transformation of Leninism from an international proletarian doctrine into a specifically Russian product.

It means playing into the hands of Bauer and Kautsky, who deny that Leninism is suitable to other countries, which are capitalistically more developed.

Without a doubt the peasant question is of the greatest importance in Russia; our country is a peasant country. But what significance can this fact have in a characterisation of the fundamentals of Leninism? Was Leninism worked out only upon Russian soil, for Russia alone, and not upon imperialist soil, and for the imperialist countries generally?

Have Lenin's works, such as Imperialism, State and Revolution, The Proletarian Revolution and the Renegade Kautsky, and "Left-Wing" Communism: an Infantile Disorder, etc., significance only for Russia and not for all imperialist countries in general? Is not Leninism the generalisation of the experience of the revolutionary movement of all countries? Are not the foundations of the theory and tactics of Leninism suitable and obligatory for the proletarian parties of all countries? Was Lenin wrong when he said that: "Bolshevism can serve as a model of tactics for all"? (Collected Works, Vol. XXIII, p. 386, Russian edition.) Was Lenin wrong when he spoke of the "international sig- nificance [My italics.—J. S.] of the Soviet power and of the foundation of Bolshevik theory and tactics"! ("Left-Wing" Communism.)

Was not Lenin right when he wrote: "In Russia, the dictatorship of the proletariat must inevitably differ in certain special features from that in the advanced countries, by reason of the very great backwardness and petty-bourgeois character of our country. But the basic forces and the basic forms of social economy are just the same in Russia as in any capitalist country, so that these special features cannot affect the main point." (Collected Works, Vol. XXIV, p. 508, Russian edition.)

But if this is so, does it not follow therefrom that Comrade Zinoviev's definition of Leninism cannot be recognized as correct?

How can this nationally restricted definition of Leninism be reconciled with internationalism?

. . . . . .

The Core of Leninism

. . . . . .

For, if Leninism is the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution, and the basic content of the proletarian revolution is the dictatorship of the proletariat, then it is clear that the core in Leninism is the question of the dictatorship of the proletariat, the working out of this question and giving a basis and concreteness to it.

. . . . . .

Of course, Lenin was an expert on the peasant question. Of course, the peasant question, as the question dealing with the ally of the proletariat, is of the greatest significance to the proletariat, and forms a component part of the basic problem of the dictatorship of the proletariat, but is it not clear that if Leninism were not faced with the fundamental question of the dictatorship of the proletariat, then the subsidiary question of the ally of the proletariat, namely the peasantry, would not arise? Is it not clear that if Leninism were not faced with the practical problem of the conquest of power by the proletariat, then the question of an alliance with the peasantry would not arise?

Lenin would not have been the mighty ideological leader of the proletariat, which he unquestionably was, but the simple "peasant philosopher" that foreign literary philistines are often fond of depicting him as, had he been content to work out the peasant question, not on the basis of the theory and tactics of the dictatorship of the proletariat, but independently of and apart from this basis.

One of two things:

Either the peasant question is the core of Leninism, and in that case Leninism is not suitable, not obligatory for developed capitalist countries, for such as are not peasant countries.

Or, the core of Leninism is the dictatorship of the proletariat (and in that case Leninism is the international doctrine of the proletarians of all lands, is suitable and obligatory for all countries without exception, including those where capitalism is developed.

A choice has to be made here.

The Proletarian Revolution and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

* * * * * * * * * * *

"The second enormous difficulty was . . . the international question. If we were able to cope so easily with Kerensky's bands, if we so easily established our power, if the decree on the socialisation of the land and on workers' control, was secured without the slightest difficulty—if we obtained all this so easily it was only because for a brief space of time a fortunate combination of circumstances protected us from international imperialism. International imperialism, with all the might of its capital and its highly organised military technique, which represents a real force, a real fortress of international capital, could under no circumstances, under no possible conditions, live side by side with the Soviet republic, both because of its objective situation and because of the economic interests of the capitalist class which was incorporated in it, it could not do this because of commercial ties and of international financial relationships. A conflict is inevitable. This is the greatest difficulty of the Russian Revolution, its greatest historical problem: the necessity to solve international problems, the necessity to call forth the world revolution." (Collected Works, Vol. XXII, pp. 315-317, Russian edition.)

Such is the inner character and the basic idea of the proletarian revolution.

Can such a radical transformation of the old bourgeois system of society be achieved without a violent revolution, without the dictatorship of the proletariat?

Obviously not. To think that such a revolution can be carried out peacefully within the framework of bourgeois democracy, which is adapted to the domination of the bourgeoisie, means one of two things. It means either madness, and the loss of normal human understanding, or else an open and gross repudiation of the proletarian revolution.

It is necessary to insist on this all the more strongly, all the more categorically, since we are dealing with the proletarian revolution which has for the time being triumphed in only one country, a country surrounded by hostile capitalist countries, a country the bourgeoisie of which cannot fail to receive the support of international capital.

That is why Lenin states that ". . . the liberation of the oppressed class is impossible not only without a violent revolution, but also without the destruction of the apparatus of state power, which was created by the ruling class. . . . (Collected Works, Vol. XXI, Book II, p. 155. Also State and Revolution, Little Lenin Library, p. 9.)

"First, let the majority of the population, while private property is still maintained, that is while the power and oppression of capital are maintained, declare itself for the party of the proletariat. Only then can, and should it, take power. That is what is said by petty-bourgeois democrats who call themselves 'socialists' but are really the henchmen of the bourgeoisie. [My italics.—J. S.]

"But we say: Let the revolutionary proletariat first overthrow the bourgeoisie, break the yoke of capital, break up the bourgeoisie state apparatus. Then the victorious proletariat will speedily gain the sympathy and support of the majority of the toiling non-proletarian masses by satisfying their wants at the expense of the exploiters. [My italics.—J. S.] (Collected Works, Vol. XXIV, p. 647, Russian edition.)

"In order to win the majority of the population to its side," Lenin continues, "the proletariat must first of all overthrow the bourgeoisie and seize state power and, secondly, it must introduce Soviet rule, smash to pieces the old state apparatus, and thus at one blow undermine the rule, authority and influence of the bourgeoisie and of the petty-bourgeoisie compromisers in the ranks of the non-proletarian toiling masses. Thirdly, the proletariat must completely and finally destroy the influence of the bourgeoisie and of the petty-bourgeoisie compromisers among the majority of the non-proletarian toiling masses by the revolutionary satisfaction of their economic needs at the expense of the exploiters." (Ibid., p. 641.)

Such are the characteristic symptoms of the proletarian revolution.

Now, if it be admitted that the dictatorship of the proletariat is the basic content of the proletarian revolution, what then are the fundamental characteristics of the dictatorship of the proletariat?

Here is the most general definition of the dictatorship of the proletariat, given by Lenin:

"The dictatorship of the proletariat is not the end of the class struggle but its continuation in new forms. The dictatorship of the proletariat is the class struggle of the proletariat which has achieved victory and has seized political power against the bourgeoisie which has been defeated but not annihilated, which has not disappeared, which has not ceased its resistance, which has increased its resistance." (Ibid., p. 311.)

Replying to those who confuse the dictatorship of the proletariat with "popular," "elected" and "non-class" government, Lenin states:

"The class which has seized political power has done so conscious of the fact that it has seized power alone. This is implicit in the concept of the dictatorship of the proletariat. This concept has meaning only when one class knows that it alone takes political power into its own hands, and does not deceive either itself or others by talk about popular, elected government, sanctified by the whole people." (Collected Works, Vol. XXVI, p. 286, Russian edition.)

This does not mean, however, that the rule of this one class, the class of the proletarians, which does not and cannot share this rule with any other class, does not need an alliance with the toiling and exploited masses of other classes for the attainment of its objectives. On the contrary. This rule, the rule of a single class, can be firmly established and exercised to the full only by means of a special form of alliance between the class of proletarians and the toiling masses of the petty-bourgeois classes, especially the toiling masses of the peasantry.

What is this special form of alliance? What does it consist of? Does not this alliance with the toiling masses of other, non-proletarian classes generally contradict the idea of the dictatorship of one class?

This special form of alliance lies in the fact that the leading force of this alliance is the proletariat, that the leader in the state, the leader within the system of the dictatorship of the proletariat is a single party, the party of the proletariat, the party of the Communists, which does not and cannot share that leadership with other parties.

. . . . . .

Such statements can only be made by those who have failed to grasp Lenin's proposition that "The supreme principle of the dictatorship is the preservation of the alliance between the proletariat and the peasantry, in order that the proletariat may continue to retain the leading role and state power." (Ibid., p. 460.)

Pointing to one of the most important aims of the dictatorship, namely the suppression of the exploiters, Lenin states:

"The scientific concept, dictatorship, means nothing more nor less than power which directly rests on violence, which is not limited by any laws or restricted by any absolute rules. . . . Dictatorship means—note this once and for all, Messrs. Cadets*—unlimited power, resting on violence and not on law. During civil war, victorious power can only be dictatorship." (Collected Works, Vol. XXV, pp. 441 and 436, Russian edition.)

But, of course, the dictatorship of the proletariat does not merely mean violence, although there is no dictatorship without violence.

"Dictatorship," says Lenin, "does not mean violence alone, although it is impossible without violence. It likewise signifies a higher organisation of labour than that which previously existed." (Collected Works, Vol. XXIV, p. 30, Russian edition.)

. . . . . .

Hence there are three fundamental aspects of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

(1) The utilisation of the power of the proletariat for the suppression of the exploiters, for the defence of the country, for the consolidation of the ties with the prole-

* The Constitutional Democrats.—Ed.

tarians of other lands, and for the development and the victory of the revolution in all countries.

(2) The utilisation of the power of the proletariat in order to detach the toiling and exploited masses once and for all from the bourgeoisie, to consolidate the alliance of the proletariat with these masses, to enlist these masses in the work of socialist construction, and to assure the state leadership of these masses by the proletariat.

(3) The utilisation of the power of the proletariat for the organisation of socialism, for the abolition of classes, and for the transition to a society without classes, to a society without a state.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is a combination of all three aspects. None of these three aspects can be advanced as the sole characteristic feature of the dictatorship of the proletariat. On the other hand, it is sufficient for but one of these three characteristic features to be absent, for the dictatorship of the proletariat to cease being a dictatorship in a capitalist environment. Therefore not one of these three features can be omitted without running the risk of distorting the concept of dictatorship. Only all these three features taken together give us a complete and fully rounded out conception of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

The Party and the Working Class Within the System of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

* * * * * * * * * *

First of all there are the workers' trade unions, with their national and local ramifications in the shape of a whole series of production, cultural, educational and other organisations. These unite the workers of all trades. They are not Party organisations. The trade unions may be termed the all-embracing organisation of the working class which holds power in our country. They constitute a school of communism. They promote from their midst the best people to carry out leading work in all branches of administration. They form the link between the advanced and the backward elements in the ranks of the working class. They unite the masses of the workers with their vanguard.

VI

The Question of the Victory of Socialism in a Single Country

. . . . . .

"Our country represents two groups of contradictions. One group of contradictions consists of the internal contradictions that exist between the proletariat and the peasantry (this is in connection with the complete construction of socialism in a single country—J. S.). The other group of contradictions consists of the external contradictions that exist between our country as the country of socialism and all the other countries as countries of capitalism (this is in connection with the question of the final victory of socialism —J. S.). . . . Whoever confuses the first group of contradictions, which can be quite overcome by the efforts of a single country, with the second group of contradictions, which requires the efforts of the proletariat of several countries to solve, commits a grave error against Leninism; he is either a muddle-head or an incorrigible opportunist."

On the question of the victory of socialism in our country, the pamphlet states: "We can build socialism and we will build it together with the peasantry under the leadership of the working class . . . for we possess, under the dictatorship of the proletariat, all the requisites for the building of a complete socialist society by overcoming all internal difficulties, for we can and must overcome them by our own efforts." (Ibid.)

On the question of the final victory of socialism, it states: "The final victory of socialism is a complete guarantee against attempted intervention, and that means against restoration, for any serious attempt at restoration can take place only with support from outside, only with the support of international capital. Hence the support of our revolution by the workers of all countries, and still more the victory of these workers in at least several countries, is a necessary condition for completely guaranteeing the first victorious country against attempts at intervention and restoration, a necessary condition for the final victory of socialism." (Ibid.)

. . . . . .

Let us turn to Lenin. This is what he said about the victory of socialism in a single country even before the October Revolution, in August 1915:

"Uneven economic and political development is an absolute law of capitalism. Hence, the victory of socialism is possible, first in a few or even in one single capitalist country taken separately. The victorious proletariat of that country, having expropriated the capitalists and organised its own socialist production [My italics.—J. S.], would rise against the rest of the capitalist world, attract to itself the oppressed classes of other countries, raise revolts among them against the capitalists, and in the event of necessity, come out even with armed force against the exploiting classes and their states." (Collected Works, Vol. XVIII, p. 272.)

STATE AND REVOLUTION

By V. I. Lenin

Copyright, 1932, by
International Publishers Co., Inc.

. . . . . .

Preface to First Edition

. . . . . .

Socialism in words, chauvinism in deeds is characterised by a base, servile adaptation of the "leaders of Socialism" to the interests not only of "their" national bourgeoisie, but also of "their" state—for a whole series of smaller, weaker nationalities have long since been exploited and enslaved by most of the so-called great powers. The imperialist war is just a war for division and re-division of this kind of booty. The struggle for the emancipation of the labouring masses from the influence of the bourgeoisie in general, and the imperialist bourgeoisie in particular, is impossible without a struggle against the opportunist superstitions concerning the "state."

. . . . . .

Finally, we sum up, in the main, the experiences of the Russian Revolution of 1905 and particularly that of 1917. The revolution is evidently completing at the present time (beginning of August, 1917) the first stage of its development; but, generally speaking, this revolution can be understood in its totality only as a link in the chain of Socialist proletarian revolutions called forth by the imperialist war. The question of the relation of a proletarian Socialist revolution to the state acquires, therefore, not only a practical political importance, but the importance of an urgent problem of the day, the problem of elucidating to the masses what they will have to do for their liberation from the yoke of capitalism in the very near future.

. . . . . .

Chapter I

Class Society and the State

1. The State as the Product of the Irreconcilability of Class Antagonisms

. . . . . .

For instance, when, in the Revolution of 1917, the question of the real meaning and role of the state arose in all its vastness as a practical question demanding immediate action on a wide mass scale, all the Socialist-Revolutionaries and Mensheviks suddenly and completely sank to the petty-bourgeois theory of "reconciliation" of the classes by the "state." Innumerable resolutions and articles by politicians of both these parties are saturated through and through with this purely petty-bourgeois and philistine theory of "reconciliation." That the state is an organ of domination of a definite class which cannot be reconciled with its antipode (the class opposed to it)—this petty-bourgeois democracy is never able to understand. Its attitude towards the state is one of the most telling proofs that our Socialist-Revolutionaries and Mensheviks are not Socialists at all (which we Bolsheviks have always maintained), but petty-bourgeois democrats with a near-Socialist phraseology.

On the other hand, the "Kautskyist" distortion of Marx is far more subtle. "Theoretically," there is no denying that the state is the organ of class domination, or that class antagonisms are irreconcilable. But what is forgotten or glossed over is this: if the state is the product of the irreconcilable character of class antagonisms, if it is a force standing above society and "increasingly separating itself from it," then it is clear that the liberation of the oppressed class is impossible not only without a violent revolution, but also without the destruction of the apparatus of state power, which was created by the ruling class and in which this "separation" is embodied. As we shall see later, Marx drew this theoretically self-evident conclusion from a concrete historical analysis of the problems of revolution. And it is exactly this conclusion which Kautsky—as we shall show fully in our subsequent remarks—has "forgotten" and distorted.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Here is Engels' argument:

"... That force, however, plays another role (other than that of a diabolical power) in history, a revolutionary role; that, in the words of Marx, it is the midwife of every old society which is pregnant with the new; that it is the instrument with whose aid social movement forces its way through and shatters the dead, fossilised political forms—of this there is not a word in Herr Duhring. It is only with sighs and groans that he admits the possibility that force will perhaps be necessary for the overthrow of the economic system of exploitation—unfortunately! because all use of force, forsooth, demoralizes the person who uses it. And this in spite of the immense moral and spiritual impetus which has resulted from every victorious revolution! And this in Germany, where a violent collision—which indeed may be forced on the people—would at least have the advantage of wiping out the servility which has permeated the national consciousness as a result of the humiliation of the Thirty Years' War. And this parson's mode of thought—lifeless, insipid and impotent—claims to impose itself on the most revolutionary party which history has known! * "

How can this panegyric on violent revolution, which Engels insistently brought to the attention of the German Social-Democrats between 1878 and 1894, i.e., right to the time of his death, be combined with the theory of the "withering away" of the state to form one doctrine?

Usually the two views are combined by means of eclecticism, by an unprincipled, sophistic, arbitrary selection (to oblige the powers that be) of either one or the other argument, and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred (if not more often), it is the idea of the "withering away" that is specially emphasised. Eclecticism is substituted for dialectics—this is the most usual, the most widespread phenomenon to be met with in the official Social-Democratic literature of our day in relation to Marxism. Such a substitution is, of course, nothing new; it may be observed even in the history of classic Greek philosophy. When Marxism is adulterated to become opportunism, the substitution of eclecticism for dialectics is the best method of deceiving the masses; it gives an illusory satisfaction; it seems to take into account all sides of the process, all the tendencies of development, all the contradictory factors and so forth, whereas in reality it offers no consistent and revolutionary view of the process of social development at all.

We have already said above and shall show more fully later that the teaching of Marx and Engels regarding the inevitability of a violent revolution refers to the bourgeois state. It cannot be replaced by the proletarian state (the dictatorship of the proletariat) through "withering away," but, as a general rule, only through a violent revolution. The panegyric sung in its honour by Engels and fully corresponding to the repeated declarations of Marx (remember the concluding passages of the Poverty of Philosophy and the Communist Manifesto, with its proud and open declaration of the inevitability of a violent revolution; remember Marx's Critique of the Gotha Programme of 1875 in which, almost thirty years later, he mercilessly castigates the opportunist character of that programme)—this praise is by no means a mere "impulse," a mere declamation, or a polemical sally. The necessity of systematically fostering among the masses this and just this point of view about violent revolution lies at the root of the whole of Marx's and Engels' teaching. The neglect of such propaganda and agitation by both the present predominant social-chauvinist and the Kautskyist currents brings their betrayal of Marx's and Engels' teaching into prominent relief.

The replacement of the bourgeois by the proletarian state is impossible without a violent revolution. The abolition of the proletarian state, i.e., of all states, is only possible through "withering away."

Marx and Engels gave a full and concrete exposition of these views in studying each revolutionary situation separately, in analysing the lessons of the experience of each individual revolution. We now pass to this, undoubtedly the most important part of their work.

Chapter II

The Experiences of 1848-1851

1. On the Eve of Revolution

The doctrine of the class struggle, as applied by Marx to the question of the state and of the Socialist revolution, leads inevitably to the recognition of the political rule of the proletariat, of its dictatorship, i.e., of a power shared with none and relying directly upon the armed force of the masses. The overthrow of the bourgeoisie is realisable only by the transformation of the proletariat into the ruling class, able to crush the inevitable and desperate resistance of the bourgeoisie, and to organise, for the new economic order, all the toiling and exploited masses.

The main point in the teaching of Marx is the class struggle. This has very often been said and written. But this is not true. Out of this error, here and there, springs an opportunist distortion of Marxism, such a falsification of it as to make it acceptable to the bourgeoisie. The theory of the class struggle was not created by Marx, but by the bourgeoisie before Marx and is, generally speaking, acceptable to the bourgeoisie. He who recognises only the class struggle is not yet a Marxist; he may be found not to have gone beyond the boundaries of bourgeois reasoning and politics. To limit Marxism to the teaching of the class struggle means to curtail Marxism—to distort it, to reduce it to something which is acceptable to the bourgeoisie. A Marxist is one who extends the acceptance of class struggle to the acceptance of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Herein lies the deepest difference between a Marxist and an ordinary petty or big bourgeois. On this touchstone it is necessary to test a real understanding and acceptance of Marxism.

Chapter III

Experience of the Paris Commune of 1871: Marx's Analysis

On April 12, 1871, i.e., just at the time of the Commune, Marx wrote to Kugelmann:

"If you look at the last chapter of my Eighteenth Brumaire, you will see that I declare that the next attempt of the French Revolution must be: not, as in the past, to transfer the bureaucratic and military machinery from one hand to the other, but to break it up [Marx's italics—the original is zerbrechen]; and this is the precondition of any real people's revolution on the Continent. And this is what our heroic party comrades in Paris have attempted.[] "

In these words, "to break up the bureaucratic and military machinery," is contained, briefly formulated, the principal lesson of Marxism on the tasks of the proletariat in relation to the state during a revolution. And it is just this lesson which has not only been forgotten, but downright distorted, by the prevailing Kautskyist "interpretation" of Marxism.

. . . . . .

We have seen what Marx means—that the working class must shatter, break up, blow up (Sprengung, explosion, is the expression used by Engels) the whole state machinery. But according to Bernstein it would appear as though Marx by these words warned the working class against excessive revolutionary zeal when seizing power.

A crasser and uglier perversion of Marx's ideas cannot be imagined.

How, then, did Kautsky act in his detailed refutation of Bernsteinism?

[] Neue Zeit, XX-1, 1901-1902, p. 709. The letters from Marx to Kugelmann have come out in Russian in no less than two editions, one of them edited and with an introduction by me. [Karl Marx, Letters to Kugelmann, London and New York, 1933.—Ed.]

He avoided analysing the whole enormity of the perversion of Marxism by opportunism on this point. He cited the above-quoted passage from Engels' preface to Marx's Civil War, saying that, according to Marx, the working class cannot simply take possession of the ready made state machinery, but, generally speaking, it can take possession of it—and that was all. As for the fact that Bernstein attributed to Marx the direct opposite of Marx's real views, that the real task of the proletarian revolution, as formulated by Marx ever since 1852, was to "break up" the state machinery—not a word of all this is to be found in Kautsky.

The result was that the most essential difference between Marxism and opportunism on the question of the proletarian revolution was glossed over!

"The solution of the problem of the proletarian dictatorship," wrote Kautsky "in opposition" to Bernstein, "we can safely leave to the future" (p. 172, German edition).

This is not a polemic against Bernstein, but really a concession to him, a surrender to opportunism; for at present the opportunists ask nothing better than to "safely leave to the future" all the fundamental questions on the tasks of the proletarian revolution.

Marx and Engels, from 1852 to 1891—for forty years—taught the proletariat that it must break up the state machinery. Kautsky, in 1899, confronted on this point with the complete betrayal of Marxism by the opportunists, fraudulently substitutes for the question as to whether it is necessary to break up the machinery, the question as to the concrete forms of breaking it up, and then saves himself behind the screen of the "indisputable" (and barren) philistine truth, that concrete forms cannot be known in advance!!

Between Marx and Kautsky, between their respective attitudes to the task of a proletarian party in preparing the working class for revolution, there is an abyss.

IMPERIALISM

THE HIGHEST STAGE OF CAPITALISM

V. I. LENIN

COPYRIGHT, 1939, BY
INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS CO., INC.

PREFACE TO THE RUSSIAN EDITION

The pamphlet here presented to the reader was written in Zurich in the spring of 1916. In the conditions in which I was obliged to work there I naturally suffered somewhat from a shortage of French and English literature and from a serious dearth of Russian literature. However, I made use of the principal English work, Imperialism, J. A. Hobson's book, with all the care that, in my opinion, that work deserves.

This pamphlet was written with an eye to the tsarist censorship. Hence, I was not only forced to confine myself strictly to an exclusively theoretical, mainly economic analysis of facts, but to formulate the few necessary observations on politics with extreme caution, by hints, in that Æsopian language—in that cursed Æsopian language—to which tsarism compelled all revolutionaries to have recourse whenever they took up their pens to write a "legal" work.[1]

It is very painful, in these days of liberty, to read these cramped passages of the pamphlet, crushed, as they seem, in an iron vise, distorted on account of the censor. Of how imperialism is the eve of the socialist revolution; of how social-chauvinism (socialism in words, chauvinism in deeds) is the utter betrayal of socialism, complete desertion to the side of the bourgeoisie; of how the split in the labour movement is bound up with the objective conditions of imperialism, etc., I had to speak in a "slavish" tongue, and I must refer the reader who is interested in the question to the volume, which is soon to appear, in which are reproduced the articles I wrote abroad in the years 1914-17. Special attention must be drawn, however, to a passage on pages 119-20.[2] In order to show, in a guise acceptable to the censors, how shamefully the capitalists and the social-chauvinist deserters (whom Kautsky opposes with so much inconsistency) lie on the question of annexations; in order to show with what cynicism they screen the annexations of their capitalists, I was forced to quote as an example—Japan! The careful reader will easily substitute Russia for Japan, and Finland, Poland, Courland, the Ukraine, Khiva, Bokhara, Estonia or other regions peopled by non-Great Russians, for Korea.

I trust that this pamphlet will help the reader to understand the fundamental economic question, viz., the question of the economic essence of imperialism, for unless this is studied, it will be impossible to understand and appraise modern war and modern politics.

Preface to the French and German Editions

I

As was indicated in the preface to the Russian edition, this pamphlet was written in 1916, with an eye to the tsarist censorship. I am unable to revise the whole text at the present time, nor, perhaps, is this advisable, since the main purpose of the book was and remains: to present, on the basis of the summarised returns of irrefutable bourgeois statistics, and the admissions of bourgeois scholars of all countries, a general picture of the world capitalist system in its international relationships at the beginning of the twentieth century—on the eve of the first world imperialist war.

To a certain extent it will be useful for many Communists in advance capitalist countries to convince themselves by the example of this pamphlet, legal, from the standpoint of the tsarist censor, of the possibility—and necessity—of making use of even the slight remnants of legality which still remain at the disposal of the Communists, say, in contemporary America or France, after the recent wholesale arrests of Communists, in order to explain the utter falsity of social-pacifist views and hopes for "world democracy." The most essential of what should be added to this censored pamphlet I shall try to present in this preface.

* * * * * * * * * *

III

The Brest-Litovsk Peace Treaty dictated by monarchist Germany, and later on, the much more brutal and despicable Versailles Treaty dictated by the "democratic" republics of America and France and also by "free" England, have rendered very good service to humanity by exposing both the hired coolies of the pen of imperialism and the petty-bourgeois reactionaries, although they call themselves pacifists and socialists, who sang praises to "Wilsonism," and who insisted that peace and reform were possible under imperialism.

The tens of millions of dead and maimed left by the war—a war for the purpose of deciding whether the British or German group of financial marauders is to receive the lion's share—and the two "peace treaties," mentioned above, open the eyes of the millions and tens of millions of people who are downtrodden, oppressed, deceived and duped by the bourgeoisie with unprecedented rapidity. Thus, out of the universal ruin caused by the war a worldwide revolutionary crisis is arising which, in spite of the protracted and difficult stages it may have to pass, cannot end in any other way than in a proletarian revolution and in its victory.

* * * * * * * * * *

Not the slightest progress can be made toward the solution of the practical problems of the Communist movement and of the impending social revolution unless the economic roots of this phenomenon are understood and unless its political and sociological significance is appreciated.

Imperialism is the eve of the proletarian social revolution. This has been confirmed since 1917 on a world-wide scale.

N. LENIN

CHAPTER VII

IMPERIALISM AS A SPECIAL STAGE OF CAPITALISM

We shall see later that imperialism can and must be defined differently if consideration is to be given, not only to the basic, purely economic factors—to which the above definition is limited—but also to the historical place of this stage of capitalism in relation to capitalism in general, or to the relations between imperialism and the two main trends in the working class movement. The point to be noted just now is that imperialism, as interpreted above, undoubtedly represents a special stage in the development of capitalism.

CHAPTER X

THE PLACE OF IMPERIALISM IN HISTORY

In its turn, this finance capital which has grown so rapidly is not unwilling (precisely because it has grown so quickly) to pass on to a more "tranquil" possession of colonies which have to be seized—and not only by peaceful methods—from richer nations. In the United States, economic development in the last decades has been even more rapid than in Germany, and for this very reason the parasitic character of modern American capitalism has stood out with particular prominence. On the other hand, a comparison of, say, the republican American bourgeoisie with the monarchist Japanese or German bourgeoisie shows that the most pronounced political distinctions diminish to an extreme degree in the epoch of imperialism—not because they are unimportant in general, but because in all these cases we are discussing a bourgeoisie which has definite features of parasitism.

. . . . . .

From all that has been said in this book on the economic nature of imperialism, it follows that we must define it as capitalism in transition, or, more precisely, as moribund capitalism.

PLAIN TALKS ON VITAL PROBLEMS

THE STATE

. . . . . .

NO NEED OF REVOLUTION?

The Socialists say there is no need of a revolution. They say democracy has prepared for the workers all the means necessary to achieve Socialism. Let the workers use universal suffrage, they say, to send Socialists into the legislative assemblies. Let the Socialists form a majority in these assemblies. When this is done, the road is open to pass laws abolishing the capitalist system. Of course, there is the Federal Constitution which prohibits the confiscation of property by legal procedure, but this, says the leader of American Socialists, Mr. Norman Thomas, can be overcome. Let us have a Constitutional Convention to amend the Constitution so as to permit Congress to enact Socialist legislation. Let Congress then enact a law which orders the big corporations to cede their industrial establishments and all their property to the State. Let us not expropriate them, say the Socialists, not by any means! Let us pay them with bonds issued by the government and redeemable in thirty years. This will mean introducing Socialism by pacific methods. No revolutions; no seizure of power; no infringement upon the law; no mass action; no expropriation of the exploiters. Everything lawful. Everything in a gentlemanly fashion. The electoral law works. The citizens vote. The legislators assemble. They count noses and find a Socialist majority. The Socialist majority, both in the House of Representatives and in the Senate, passes a law. Capitalism passes out. The big trusts bow before the "will of the people". "Gentlemen, you are the lawful heirs of our system", they say politely, and leave the stage for the Norman Thomases and their associates.

What a sweet picture! And how deceptive! We are sorry to mar such an idyllic scene. But we Communists are realists, and we do not wish to be carried away by fancies, especially when these fancies are beneficial to the capitalist system as they tend to keep workers from fighting the capitalist State.

WHY EVERY WORKER SHOULD JOIN THE COMMUNIST PARTY

* * * * * * * * * *

THE ONLY WORKING-CLASS PARTY—
THE COMMUNIST PARTY

In all countries there is only one Party which stands first, last, and all the time, for the interests of the working class. That is the Communist Party.

The Communist Party of the United States is a section of the World Party of the Working Class,—the Communist International.

The program of the Communist Party includes the organization of the working class in every phase of life. It leads the struggles of the workers, from the most simple everyday demand, clear up to the final struggle for the overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of the workers' government—the proletarian dictatorship.

Why the Communist Party Is Part of A World Party

The Communist Party of the U.S.A. is part of the World Party—the Communist International. No organization which cuts itself off from the workers of other countries can truly represent working-class interests; and that organization which most truly represents the working class is the one which is the most thoroughly international.

The motto of the First International, founded by Karl Marx, was, "You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain; Workers of the World, Unite!" The Communist International is the inheritor of the First International, and carries its policies into life in the present period of history.

The Second International—that organ of the "socialist" servants of the various national capitalist classes—which betrayed the workers into the last world war in 1914-1918, and is actively preparing for another world blood-bath, is not a truly international organization at all. It has no common policy for all its sections, the socialist and labor parties—except the common policy of submission to and service for the capitalist class of each country.

The Communist International is a truly international organization, with sections in 47 different countries of Europe, North and South America, Africa, and Asia, comprising all races and nationalities into one world party with a world policy, the policy of the toiling masses of the entire world.

At the same moment that the Communist Party of the U.S.A. fights the everyday battles of all the exploited of this country, it unites these struggles with the world struggles of the exploited everywhere, through the Communist International.

HELP BUILD SOCIALISM IN THE SOVIET UNION

. . . . . .

The Soviet Union has taken one-sixth of the whole world out of the hands of capitalism, and is building there a socialist society.

That is why the Soviet Union is the stronghold of the working class of the whole world. It is the only country that belongs to the workers and not to the capitalists. It is the fatherland of the working class of the world. It is achievement of the working class under the leadership of the Communist Party.

By joining the Communist Party you not only strengthen the American working class but also help the workers of the Soviet Union in their tremendous tasks of the construction of socialism. At the same time you are building up the power which alone can defend the Soviet Union against imperialist war—the power of the international organized working class.

THE COMMUNIST PARTY IN ACTION

By ALEX BITTELMAN

CHAPTER 1

. . . . . .

In the present period the Party's chief task consists in developing the counter-offensive of the working class against the offensive of the capitalist class, including the organization of the Negro masses and of the small and exploited farmers as allies of the proletariat. This task, which is common to the Communist Parties of all imperialist and colonial countries, and which was laid down by the Eleventh Plenary Session of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, arises from the objective conditions that are characteristic of the present period.

What are these objective conditions? It is primarily the present economic crisis, which is the greatest world economic crisis in history, affecting every imperialist and colonial country and every branch of capitalist economy—industry, commerce, agriculture and finance. The reason why the present economic crisis is so widespread and deep, and why the extent of unemployment and the suffering of the masses are so tremendously great, is the outstanding fact that the present economic crisis is developing on the basis of the general crisis of capitalism, which is shattering the whole capitalist system, leading to the development of colonial and proletarian revolutions, and which has already rejoining the Communist Party. Rather it must have been the sum of many experiences on various points of the class struggle front, among which the fight against imperialist war and for the defense of the Soviet Union had undoubtedly played a very great part in bringing you into the ranks of the Party. This is the case with many workers who join the Communist Party because it is the only Party that is following in the footsteps of Lenin and the Bolsheviks, that is, organizing the American proletariat to follow the example of the working class of Russia led by the Communist (Bolshevik) Party. It is quite likely that you have come into the Party especially through your participation in the anti-imperialist struggles, anti-war campaigns, and the fight for the defense of the Soviet Union that the Communist Party is leading. Possibly you are a member of the Friends of the Soviet Union, or of the Anti-Imperialist League. If so, you can already see the great role that these organizations are playing in the struggle against the capitalist class.

* * * * * * * * * * *

And last, but not least, your experiences of the class struggle on the parliamentary field, that is, in various election campaigns—congressional elections, presidential elections, state and municipal elections, etc. You have voted Communist because you considered correctly that the Communist Party is the only class Party of the workers, and leader of all the oppressed, the only true anti-capitalist Party. By joining the Party you have demonstrated your understanding that voting alone for the Communist program and ticket in an election campaign is not sufficient, that only as a member of the Party, participating daily in the building up of the Party's strength and influence among the masses, also for the extra parliamentary struggle, can you become fully effective in the fight for the overthrow of the dictatorship of the capitalist class, in the fight to establish the dictatorship of the proletariat in the United States.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Chapter 3

Initiative—Activity—Discipline

What is the nature of membership in the Communist Party? This is well stated in the Constitution and Rules of the Communist International, Paragraph 3, which reads as follows:

"Membership in the Communist Party and in the Communist International is open to all those who accept the program and rules of the given Communist Party and of the Communist International, who join one of the basic units of a Party, actively work in it, abide by all the decisions of the Party and of the Communist International, and regularly pay Party dues."

You will observe that all of the specific requirements for membership in the Party aim at one thing, namely, the active, conscious and disciplined participation in the struggles of the masses that are led and organized by the Party. There can be nothing formal, or blind, or passive about membership in the Party, because the Communist Party is the revolutionary vanguard of the working class. Initiative on the part of every member, creative activity for winning and organizing the masses, and discipline in the carrying out of the decisions of the Party and of the Communist International are the very essence of Communist Party membership.

The Organizational Principles of Bolshevism

Each Party member must avail himself or herself of the opportunity provided by the Party for a thorough study of the organizational principles of Bolshevism which are the organizational principles of the Communist International and of our Party. Without it one cannot become a good and active Party member.

To realize how important the organizational principles of our Party are, it would suffice perhaps to mention the fact that one of the most important fights that Bolshevism had made against opportunism, in Russia itself and in the whole pre-war Second International, was on the question of organization. This was the famous struggle of Lenin and the Bolsheviks at the Second Congress of the Russian Party on the question of Party organization, Lenin and the Bolsheviks fighting for the principle of a centralized, active, disciplined proletarian party and the opportunists (the future Mensheviks) fighting for a decentralized, loose, non-disciplined, petty bourgeois organization. It was this question, together with the question of the role of the working class in the revolution and the role of the Party as its leader that precipitated and crystallized the division between the opportunists and proletarian revolutionists, between the Mensheviks and the Bolsheviks.

The organizational principles of Bolshevism follow inevitably from the Bolshevik conception of the role of the Communist Party. What is this conception? Stalin states that in the following words:

"The Party should be the vanguard of the working class. It should group within it the best elements, should embody their experiences, their revolutionary spirit, their unbounded devotion to the cause of the proletariat. . . . The Party is the political leader of the working class."

Stalin compares the Party to the general staff of an army. The Party is the general staff of the working class revolutionary army, leading the war against capitalism. As such the Party must be built as a centralized organization, each member belonging to a Party unit and carrying on daily active work among the masses under the direction of this unit, and fulfilling faithfully, consciously and loyally the Party policies and Party decisions.

. . . . . .

Chapter 5

We Are Members of a World Party

Our Party is the United States Section of the Communist International which is a world Communist Party and each one of us is therefore a member of a world Party. In this lies the greatest hope and promise of success for the world's proletarian revolution and all oppressed and exploited in their struggle against capitalism.

The following constitutes Paragraph 1 of the Constitution and Rules of the Communist International, which gives the character and aims of our World Party:

"The Communist International—the International Workers' Association—is a union of Communist Parties in various countries; it is a World Communist Party. As the leader and organizer of the world revolutionary movement of the proletariat and the upholder of the principles and aims of Communism, the Communist International strives to win over the majority of the working class and the broad strata of the propertyless peasantry, fights for the establishment of the world dictatorship of the proletariat, for the establishment of a World Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, for the complete abolition of classes and for the achievement of Socialism—the first stage of Communist society."

. . . . . .

International discipline is of course a basic principle in the organization of the Communist International. Without it no working class revolutionary International is possible. It is noteworthy that every opportunist tendency that arises in our midst seeks to attack, first of all, the discipline of the Communist International, because in this way, the revolutionary Leninist policy of the Communist International would be weakened and opportunism would meet with less resistance.

. . . . . .

But our World Communist movement always presented an iron front against any such weakening of international discipline, fighting for the Leninist principle that the Communist Party is a monolithic and homogeneous body of revolutionary workers functioning as the vanguard of the working class.

. . . . . .

Proletarian internationalism constitutes the very heart of our World Party.

. . . . . .

Chapter 6

The Chief Strategic Aim of Our Party

. . . . . .

The 13th Plenum of the Central Committee of our Party has formulated the concrete measures which we must take in order to fight effectively for the transformation of our Party into a mass Communist Party. Concretizing the decisions of the 11th Plenum of the E. C. C. I. and applying them to the specific conditions in the United States, the Plenum of our Central Committee issued a number of slogans with which to mobilize the Party and the workers for the development of the proletarian counter-offensive. Chief of these slogans is the slogan of "Face to the Shops." In accordance with the general line of the Communist International for the present period, our Central Committee undertook to direct the attention of the Party and the workers that follow the Party's leadership to the vital importance of building up the strength of the revolutionary workers in the shops and factories. This is where the power of the working class counts most. This is the place where the Party and the revolutionary unions, as well as the revolutionary oppositions in the reformist unions must root themselves in order to be able to promote effectively the organization of the proletarian counter-offensive. Consequently, the task of transforming our Party into the mass Party of the American proletariat must be carried out primarily by building our strength in the shops and factories without weakening in any way our work among the unemployed.

The fulfillment of this task also involves the giving of systematic assistance and guidance to the Young Communist League, the Party's assistant in the fight for Socialism, and the building up of the Y. C. L. into a mass organization of the American working class and toiling youth. Every Party unit, and every Party member must help the Y. C. L. carry out this basic task.

. . . . . .

The 11th Plenum of the E. C. C. I. has made it the duty of every individual Communist to expose the social-fascists as agents of the imperialist bourgeoisie in the preparations for military intervention against the Soviet Union, to expose their false pacifism as an organic and integral part of these war preparations, and to win the masses away from the social-fascists for the anti-war struggles under the leadership of the Communist Party.

Developing the Daily Struggles of the Workers

There exists a grave underestimation of the importance of organizing and leading the daily struggles of the workers for their "small" grievances and immediate demands. Some comrades think that the attitude of minimizing the importance of such struggles is a sign of being a good proletarian revolutionist. Nothing is further from the truth. Behind this unwillingness and hesitation to organize the daily fight of the workers, especially in the shops and factories, for the rectification of their grievances and for their economic demands, there usually lurks either plain right opportunist passivity, if not cowardice, or a narrow sectarian conception of the tasks of the Communist Party, which conception is also opportunist although it covers itself with "left" phrases.

The truth is that the organization and leadership of these daily struggles of the workers, even for their smallest demands, is one of the most important tasks of the Communists and the Communist Party. It is only through the fulfillment of this task that we will be able to develop the proletarian counter-offensive, building up in the process the revolutionary unions and the other transmission belts, transforming our Party into a mass Party and winning the majority of the working class. This task of developing the daily struggles of the workers is the very essence of the united front policy from below and this policy is the most powerful weapon in our hands for the fulfilment of the main aims of our movement in the present period. The 11th Plenum of the Communist International concludes its general political resolution with the following words:

"Only by conducting persistent systematic and everyday struggle, only by really fighting for the everyday interests of the workers and utilizing even the slightest signs of protest of the masses of the workers, against exploitation and fascist reaction, will the Communist Parties, be able to achieve the broad united front from below, defeat social democracy, create mass revolutionary trade unions, or revolutionary trade union oppositions, win the majority of the working class and lead the working class to the decisive battle for the dictatorship of the proletariat."

Chapter 8

The Struggle Against Deviations from the Leninist Line

Bolshevik Intolerance to Opportunism and Opportunist Deviations

Bolshevism is highly intolerant towards opportunism and opportunist deviations because opportunism in the labor movement constitutes the influence of the capitalist ideology upon the working class.

. . . . . .

But the successful fight against opportunist deviations requires on the part of every Party member the utmost alertness, intolerance, and irreconcilability towards opportunist deviations, especially against sectarianism and formalism. We observe however, among certain Party members, a tendency to be easy going, tolerant and conciliatory towards opportunist deviations. This is a dangerous attitude which is very harmful to the interests of the working class and to the growth of our Party. It is this attitude that Comrade Stalin attacked so sharply, branding it as "rotten liberalism" and calling upon every communist to demonstrate in practice in his everyday revolutionary work true Bolshevik intolerance of and irreconcilability with all opportunist deviations from the Leninist line.

A Manual on Organization

By J. Peters

Workers Library Publishers

. . . . . .

Preface

. . . . . .

Comrade Peters has added much to the existing material both from more recent international experience and especially from the recent experience of our own Party, experience that is very rich and valuable. The Manual embodies, therefore, the best that is available in the theory and practice of organization in our own Party and the Communist International. Comrade Peters not only is thoroughly acquainted with the fundamental principles of Leninist organization but has had a wide and varied experience in organizational work over a period of many years. It is this combination of theory and practice permeating the Manual that makes it so valuable to our Party. I am sure that when this Manual becomes popularized in the Party we will wonder how we could have gotten along without such a weapon for so long.

THE ROLE AND AIM OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY

As the leader and organizer of the proletariat, the Communist Party of the U.S.A. leads the working class in the fight for the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, for the establishment of a Socialist Soviet Republic in the United States, for the complete abolition of classes, for the establishment of socialism, the first stage of the classless Communist society.

* * * * * * * * * *

THE ALLIES OF THE PROLETARIAT

* * * * * * * * * *

The revolutionary overthrow of the capitalist system is the historic mission of the working class. But the workers cannot fulfill their mission if they fail to win over the wide sections of the toiling masses. It is essential that the proletariat wins to its cause all its allies, without whom there cannot be a successful revolution.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Party can stand at the head of the national revolutionary struggle of the Negro masses against American imperialism only if it energetically carries through the following tasks:

"The Party must mobilize the masses for the struggle for equal rights of the Negroes and for the right of self-determination for the Negroes in the Black Belt. It must ruthlessly combat any form of white chauvinism and Jim-Crow practices. It must not only in words, but in deeds, overcome all obstacles to the drawing in of the best elements of the Negro proletariat, who in the recent years have shown themselves to be self-sacrificing fighters in the struggle against capital.

• • • • • • • • • • •

International Solidarity

• • • • • • • • • • •

The Communist Party mobilizes the masses for international solidarity with the struggle of the workers in other capitalist countries.

The Communist Party rallies the masses against imperialist war and fascism, and for the defense of the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union is the only fatherland of workers all over the world. It is the achievement of the international proletariat. It is the most important factor for the liberation of all workers in every country. Therefore, the workers all over the world must help the Soviet Union in building socialism, and must defend it with all their power against the attacks of the capitalist powers.

• • • • • • • • • • •

II. Basic Principles of Party Organization

• • • • • • • • • • •

Democratic Centralism

Democratic centralism is the system according to which:

1. All leading committees of the Party, from the Unit Bureaus up to the highest committees, are elected by the membership or delegates of the given Party organization.

2. Every elected Party committee must report regularly on its activity to its Party organization. It must give an account of its work.

3. The lower Party committees and all Party members of the given Party organization have the duty of carrying out the decisions of the higher Party committees and of the Communist International. In other words, decisions of the C.I. and of the higher Party committees are binding upon the lower bodies.

4. Party discipline is observed by the Party members and Party organizations because only those who agree with the program of the Communist Party and the C.I. can become members of the Party.

5. The minority carries out the decisions of the majority (subordination of the minority to the majority). Party questions are discussed by the members of the Party and by the Party organization until such time as a decision is made by the Party committee or organization. After a decision has been made by the leading committees of the C.I., by the Central Committee of the Party, or by the National Convention, this decision must be unreservedly carried out even if a minority of the Party membership or a minority of the local Party organizations is in disagreement with it.

6. The Party organizations, Units, Sections, and Districts, have the full initiative, right and duty to decide on local questions within the limits of the general policies and decisions of the Party.

Decisions of Higher Bodies Binding on Lower Bodies

On the basis of democratic centralism, all lower Party organizations are subordinated to the higher bodies; District organizations are subordinated to the Central Committee; Section organizations are subordinated to the District Committee; Party Units (shop, street and town) are subordinated to the Section Committees.

All decisions of the World Congress and committees of the C.I. must be fulfilled by all parties of the C.I. All decisions of the National Convention and the Central Committee must be fulfilled by the whole Party; all decisions of the District Convention and Committee must be fulfilled by the Section organizations of that District; all decisions of the Section Convention and Committee are binding on the shop, street and town Units in that Section.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Party Discussion and Freedom of Criticism

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is clear, however, that basic principles and decisions, such, as for example, the Program of the Communist International, cannot be questioned in the Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

We do not question the correctness of the revolutionary theory of the class struggle laid down by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin. We do not question the counter-revolutionary nature of Trotskyism.

We do not question the political correctness of the decisions, resolutions, etc., of the Executive Committee of the C.I., of the Convention of the Party, or of the Central Committee after they are ratified.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Why Do the Communists Attach So Much Importance to Discipline?

Because without discipline there is no unity of will, no unity in action. Our Party is the organized and most advanced section of the working class. The Party is the vanguard of the proletariat in the class war. In this class war there is the capitalist class with its henchmen and helpers, the reformist leaders, on one side, and the working class and its allies, on the other. The class war is bitter. The enemy is powerful; it has all the means of deceit and suppression (armed forces, militia, police, courts, movies, radio, press, schools, churches, etc.). In order to combat and defeat this powerful enemy, the army of the proletariat must have a highly skilled, trained General Staff (the Communist Party), which is united in action and has one will.

What Is Self-Criticism?

Self-criticism is the most important means for developing Communist consciousness and thereby strengthening discipline and democratic centralism. Self-criticism helps to discover all the mistakes, deviations, shortcomings, which separate us from the masses, and to correct them. It helps us to discover and expose the harmful policies or practices of organizations and individuals who work against the interest of the masses. Self-criticism helps us to improve the work of the Party organizations; to exterminate bureaucracy; to expose the agents of the enemy in our ranks.

Two Kinds of Criticism

Self-criticism is a natural part of the life of the Party.

Without self-criticism there can be no Communist Party. But this criticism must never depart from the line of the Party, from the principles of Marxism-Leninism.

The other is the kind of criticism which is based on distortion of the line of the Party or does not offer any proposal to improve the work, or to correct mistakes. This is destructive criticism, which, if tolerated, inevitably leads not only to driving out new members, discouraging the weaker elements and disrupting the work of the Party, but also leads to factionalism.

III. Structure and Functions of the Party Organizations

The most important points where the Communist Party must work untiringly so as to fulfill the task of winning the majority of the working class for the struggle against capitalism are the following:

1. The big factories, mines, mills, docks, ships, railroads, etc., where the great masses of the basic sections of the proletariat are employed.

2. The A. F. of L. unions and Railroad Brotherhoods, where millions of organized workers can be won for the Party program and led in decisive struggles.

3. The independent unions where the Communists must work with the same energy and perspective as in the A. F. of L. unions.

4. The organized and unorganized masses of unemployed.

5. The fraternal, cultural and sport organizations in which there are large numbers of working people.

6. The Negro organizations (churches, fraternal, cultural, etc.).

7. The huge farms where large numbers of agricultural workers are employed.

The Communist International (Comintern)

The Communist International is the international organization of Communist Parties in all countries. It is the World Communist Party. The Communist Parties in the various countries affiliated to the Comintern are called Sections of the Communist International.

The Daily Worker—The Main Instrument of the Units for Reaching the Masses

One of the main and most important instruments of agitation and propaganda in the hands of the Party Units is the Daily Worker, the central organ of our Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The best leaders of our Party speak to the workers through articles in the Daily Worker. The Central Committee speaks to the workers through editorials. Comrades in the unions, worker correspondents from the factories and towns, tell the stories of their fight against capitalism. If we hand the Daily Worker to a worker, we get him in daily touch with the leadership of our Party, with the Central Committee, with the best, most experienced Communists.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Our Agitational and Propaganda Literature—Theory to the Masses

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Party has made and is making available the most important works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin in low-priced editions. There can be no sound revolutionary movement built without the distribution of this literature. This is why the importance of literature distribution is stressed so much by the Party.

The Communist, the theoretical organ of the Central Committee, and The Communist International, organ of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, should be read by all the Party members, and receive a broad sale among the masses. There should be no Party member who does not read the Party Organizer, the monthly organ of the Central Committee which takes up all the current organizational problems of the Party giving concrete experiences and directives to aid our Party members in their every-day work.

* * * * * * * * * * *

What Is the Relation Between the C.P. and Y.C.L.?

The Young Communist League is a mass organization of youth. The Communist Party is responsible for building this very important mass organization.

* * * * * * * * * *

What Are the Conditions for Membership in the Communist Party?

The conditions for membership in our Party are contained in the following pledge read by Comrade Browder to 2,000 workers who were initiated into the Party in the New York District in 1935.

"I now take my place in the ranks of the Communist Party, the Party of the working class. I take this solemn oath to give the best that is in me to the service of my class. I pledge myself to spare no effort in uniting the workers in militant struggle against fascism and war. I pledge myself to work unsparingly in the unions, in the shops, among the unemployed, to lead the struggles for the daily needs of the masses. I solemnly pledge to take my place in the forefront of the struggle for Negro rights; against Jim-Crowism and lynching, against the chauvinist lies of the ruling class. I pledge myself to rally the masses to defend the Soviet Union, the land of victorious Socialism. I pledge myself to remain at all times a vigilant and firm defender of the Leninist line of the Party, the only line that insures the triumph of Soviet Power in the United States."

Our Party application carries this declaration:

"The undersigned declares his adherence to the program and statutes of the C.I. and the Communist Party of the U.S.A. and agrees to submit to the discipline of the Party and to engage actively in its work."

* * * * * * * * * *

Forces—Cadres

* * * * * * * * * *

Comrade Stalin in his speech in 1929 in the American Commission, said:

"The struggle for the winning of the millions of the working masses to the side of Communism must be intensified. The fight must be intensified for the forging of real revolutionary Party cadres and for the selection of real revolutionary leaders of the Party, of individuals capable of entering the fight and bringing the proletariat with them, individuals who will not run before the face of storm and will not fall into panic, but will sail into the face of the storm.

. . . . . .

How Shall We Safeguard the Party Organization Against Stool-Pigeons and Spies?

The working class is constantly at war with its enemy, the capitalist class. In this war (class struggle), as in any other war, the capitalist class has one main objective—to defeat its enemy, the working class. In order to achieve this aim, the capitalists use all possible methods to disorganize, demoralize and divide the ranks of the proletariat. One of the most effective weapons in the hands of the enemy is the agent-provocateur, the stool-pigeon, the spy in the ranks of the working class, and especially in the ranks of the vanguard of the proletariat—the Communist Party.

The most effective weapon in the hands of the Communist Party against these agents-provocateurs is the carrying out of the general line of the Party, the uncompromising fight against any one who attempts to deviate from this line, Bolshevik self-criticism and correction of mistakes and shortcomings in the work of the Party organization or individuals in the process of applying or carrying out the general line of the Party. In a Party organization where these principles are strictly adhered to, agents-provocateur will be exposed very quickly.

2. The second type of class enemy in the ranks of the Party and in other workers' organizations is the stool pigeon.

. . . . . .

. . . . . .

Every Communist must become a leader of the workers. Every Communist must know that the Party has a historical mission to fulfill, that it has the mission of liberating the oppressed exploited masses from the yoke of capitalism, that it has the mission of organizing and leading the masses for the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, and for the establishment of the new world, a Soviet America.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST IMPERIALIST WAR AND THE TASKS OF THE COMMUNISTS

RESOLUTION OF THE SIXTH WORLD CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL, JULY-AUGUST, 1928

. . . . . .

II. ATTITUDE OF THE PROLETARIAT TOWARDS WAR

. . . . . .

War is inseparable from capitalism. From this it follows that the "abolition" of war is possible only through the abolition of capitalism, i.e., through the overthrow of the bourgeois class of exploiters, through the proletarian dictatorship, the building of Socialism, and the elimination of classes. All other theories and proposals, however, "realistic" they may claim to be, are nothing but a deception calculated to perpetuate exploitation and war.

For this reason, Leninism combats all pacifist theories concerning the abolition of war and points out to the masses of the workers and to all the exploited people the only way leading to this goal: the overthrow of capitalism.

8. But the overthrow of capitalism is impossible without force, without armed uprising and proletarian wars against the bourgeoisie. In the present epoch of imperialist wars and world revolution, as Lenin has stated, proletarian civil wars against the bourgeoisie, wars of the proletarian dictatorship against bourgeois states and against world capitalism, and national revolutionary wars of the oppressed peoples against imperialism, are inevitable and revolutionary. Therefore, the revolutionary proletariat, precisely because it is fighting for Socialism and for the abolition of war, cannot be against every war.

* * * * * * * * * * *

A. The Proletariat Fights Against Imperialist Wars

* * * * * * * * * * *

(d) A matter of decisive importance is the work among the youth, especially among the industrial youth. The greatest efforts must be exerted—not only by the youth organizations, but by all Communists—in combating bourgeois sport organizations, fascist organizations, military schools, etc., through which the bourgeoisie are training the youth for imperialist wars. Furthermore, bourgeois military training of the youth must also be combated. Where the military training of the youth is compulsory, the Communists should urge the young workers to accept it, but they must organize work for the political education of these young workers and for the disintegration of the bourgeois military organizations. Similar work must be carried on in the bourgeois voluntary military training organizations. For this purpose the Communist Party and the Young Communist League must send members into these organizations, but they must not urge the young workers to join them. Instead, they must urge the young workers to join, or form, Labor Defense organizations.

THE UNITED FRONT

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST FASCISM AND WAR
BY GEORGI DIMITROFF

General Secretary, Communist International

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is perfectly obvious that the interests of the American proletariat demand that all its forces dissociate themselves from the capitalist parties without delay. It must find in good time ways and suitable forms to prevent fascism from winning over the wide mass of discontented working people. And here it must be said that under American conditions the creation of a mass party of working people, a "Workers' and Farmers' Party," might serve as such a suitable form. Such a party would be a specific form of the mass People's Front in America and should be put in opposition to the parties of the trusts and the banks, and likewise to growing fascism. Such a party, of course, will be neither Socialist nor Communist. But it must be an anti-fascist party and must not be an anti-Communist Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It goes without saying that such a party will fight for the election of its own candidates to local government, to the state legislatures, to the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Our comrades in the United States acted rightly in taking the initiative for the creation of such a party. But they still have to take effective measures in order to make the creation of such a party the cause of the masses themselves. The question of forming a "Workers' and Farmers' Party," and its program, should be discussed at mass meetings of the people. We should develop the most widespread movement for the creation of such a party, and take the lead in it. In no case must the initiative of organizing the party be allowed to pass to elements desirous of utilizing the discontent of the millions who have become disillusioned in both the bourgeois parties, Democratic and Republican, in order to create a "third party" in the United States, as an anti-Communist party, a party directed against the revolutionary movement.

• • • • • • • • • •

The working class possesses a firm, well-knit revolutionary vanguard, the Communist International. It has a tried and recognized, a great and wise leader—Stalin.

The whole course of historical development, comrades, favors the cause of the working class. In vain are the efforts of the reactionaries, the fascists of every hue, the entire world bourgeoisie, to turn back the wheel of history. No, that wheel is turning forward and will continue to turn forward until a worldwide Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall have been established, until the final victory of socialism throughout the whole world.

There is but one thing that the working class of the capitalist countries still lacks—unity in its own ranks.

So let the clarion call of Marx and Engels, Lenin and Stalin, the battle cry of the Communist International, ring out all the more loudly from this platform to the whole world:

Workers of all countries, unite!

• • • • • • • • • •

The whole anti-fascist youth is interested in uniting and organizing its forces. Therefore you, comrades, must find such ways, forms and methods of work as will assure the formation, in the capitalist countries, of a new type of mass youth organizations, to which no vital interest of the working youth will be alien, organizations which, without copying the Party, will fight for all the interests of the youth and will bring up the youth in the spirit of the class struggle and proletarian internationalism, in the spirit of Marxism-Leninism.

. . . . . .

The land of victorious socialism, which is playing such an outstanding part in uniting the international proletariat, is rallying all sincere supporters of the workers' cause still more closely around the U.S.S.R. In the present international situation there is not, nor can there be any other, more certain criterion, than one's attitude toward the Soviet Union, in determining who is the friend and who the enemy of the cause of the working class and socialism, of determining who is a supporter and who an opponent of democracy and peace. The touchstone in checking the sincerity and honesty of every individual active in the working class movement, of every working class party and organization of the working people, and of every democrat in the capitalist countries, is their attitude toward the great land of socialism. You cannot carry on a real struggle against fascism if you do not render all possible assistance in strengthening the most important buttress of this struggle, the Soviet Union. You cannot carry on a serious struggle against the fascist instigators of a new world blood bath, if you do not render undivided support to the U.S.S.R., a most important factor in the maintenance of international peace. You cannot carry on a real struggle for socialism in your own country, if you do not oppose the enemies of the Soviet State, where this socialism is being fulfilled by the heroic efforts of the working people. You cannot be a real friend of the U.S.S.R., if you do not condemn its enemies—the Trotsky-Bukharinite agents of fascism.

The historical dividing line between the forces of fascism, war and capitalism, on the one hand, and the forces of peace, democracy and socialism on the other hand, is in fact becoming the attitude toward the Soviet Union, and not the formal attitude toward Soviet power and socialism in general, but the attitude to the Soviet Union, which has been carrying on a real existence for twenty years already, with its untiring struggle against enemies, with its dictatorship of the working class and the Stalin Constitution, with the leading role of the Party of Lenin and Stalin.

Herein lies the third and most important lesson of principle for the proletariat of the capitalist countries in connection with the twentieth anniversary of the great October Socialist Revolution.

WILLIAM Z. FOSTER
Candidate for President
AND BENJAMIN GITLOW
Candidate for Vice-President
Of the Workers (Communist) Party

NATIONAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE
WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY
1928

* * * * * * * * * * *

ACCEPTANCE SPEECH OF WILLIAM Z. FOSTER
Candidate for President

* * * * * * * * * * *

OUR REVOLUTIONARY PURPOSE

We are not going into the national election campaign solely for the purpose of getting votes. It is of course important that we register the extent of our Party's support in the working class by mobilizing the maximum number to vote for our candidates. It is also important, should the possibility present itself in any of the state or local elections, to elect Communist candidates, so that they can utilize the legislative bodies as a forum wherefrom to acquaint the workers with the iniquities of capitalism and the necessity of the Communist program. But we also have other, bigger objectives in the national election campaign. Our aim must be to arouse the class-consciousness of the masses in a political sense and to mobilize them for struggle on all fronts. Vote-getting is only one aspect of this general mobilization of the workers.

Our Party, different from the Socialist Party, creates no illusions amongst the workers that they can vote their way to emancipation, that they can capture the ready-made machinery of the state and utilize it for the emancipation of the working class. On the contrary, we must utilize this campaign to carry on a widespread and energetic propaganda to teach the workers that the capitalist class would never allow the working class peacefully to take control of the state. That is their strong right arm and they will fight violently to the end to retain it. The working class must shatter the capitalist state. It must build a new state, a new government, a workers' and farmers' government, the Soviet Government of the United States. (Applause.)

No Communist, no matter how many votes he should secure in a national election, could, even if he would, become president of the present government. When a Communist heads a government in the United States—and that day will come just as surely as the sun rises (Applause)—that government will not be a capitalistic government but a Soviet government, and behind this government will stand the Red Army to enforce the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. (Applause.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

But on the other hand, we must not put forth our immediate demands in the sense that they of themselves make for the emancipation of the working class. In all our agitation around these demands we must emphasize the absolute necessity for the proletarian revolution. Our strategy is to utilize these immediate demands to educate and organize the masses in preparation for the final revolutionary struggle, which will abolish capitalism altogether. Reliance upon immediate demands would lead us merely to reformism. Our Party is a revolutionary Party. It aims not simply to ease conditions a bit under capitalism for the workers but to abolish capitalism altogether. (Applause.)

GENERAL STRIKE SWEEPS FRISCO

125,000 WORKERS WALK OUT TODAY TO BACK MARINE STRIKERS' FIGHT

---

City Already in Grip of Walkout as Street Railway Workers Quit; Strike Actions Spread Over Entire Pacific Coast

---

BULLETIN

Portland, Ore., July 15.—Eighty local unions here voted for a general strike. Not one union voting has yet refused to favor a general walk-out.

San Francisco, July 15.—The entire Golden Gate area will be in the grip of a general strike at 8 o'clock Monday morning.

Following the walk-out of thousands of workers in many trades here during the last few days, the street railway workers struck today, giving the general strike movement a powerful forward sweep.

The general strike was decided upon at a meeting of representatives of 125,000 San Francisco workers yesterday. Responding with overwhelming power to the militant fight of the embattled longshoremen, the workers of every organized industry forced through their determination to fight it out side by side with the dock workers by a vote of 89 for and only 3 against.

The motion that all come out on strike on Monday morning was made by Harry Bridges, militant longshore strikers' leader.

Meanwhile, with many unions already out in full force, the entire city was strangely quiet today. Lack of gasoline tied up normal automobile traffic. Restaurants were closing as 6,000 cooks, waiters and culinary workers voted to strike tomorrow morning. Over 3,000 ice-men and almost 2,000 retail butchers today also voted to quit work tomorrow morning.

The general strike will not be limited to San Francisco, but to the entire Bay region. It will affect the cities of Oakland, Berkeley, Richmond, Alameda, Palo Alto, Redwood City, San Mateo, Sausalito, San Rafael, and other towns along San Francisco and San Pedro Bays.

Oakland workers are expected to walk out at 8 a.m. on Tuesday.

The call for the San Francisco strike vote conference was issued to the locals on Friday night. Each union was instructed to send five delegates. All of these delegations were hand-picked, either members of the executive committees or officials, as the locals had no chance to meet.

Reactionary Move

This move was put through by the reactionaries, who feared the election of a militant strike committee. Of the locals represented, 69 voted to strike, and only three against. Forty-nine other locals reported that they had not yet been instructed by their memberships to vote, but they decided to go in answer to the general call. All locals were instructed to meet immediately if necessary to take the strike vote, and to elect five delegates apiece for a meeting at 10 a.m., Monday, when it is promised that a strike committee can be voted for.

The meeting of the conference yesterday was one of the stormiest ever witnessed here. At least 700 delegates were in the hall, with thousands of workers outside of the Labor Temple, shouting for the general strike. All efforts for postponements were defeated.

The motion of Bridges that all go out on strike on Monday morning was passed overwhelmingly. In the election of officers of the strike committee all those chosen by the small body were reactionaries. Edward D. Vanderleur, chairman, had been working for "peaceful arbitration." C. W. Deal of the Ferryboat Men's Union, was elected vice-president by a close vote over Harry Bridges. Kidwell was chosen secretary. Bridges, however, was elected to the general strike committee. All three of these officers have consistently been opposed to the general strike, but were forced by the sentiment of the workers to vote in favor of it. Throughout the meeting storms of boos greeted the reactionaries, in contrast to the wild cheers for Bridges.

In addition to the 125,000 organized workers who will go out on strike the general walkout will affect thousands of other unorganized non-union workers.

The thousands of workers who flocked to the American Federation of Labor unions were so powerful in their strike sentiment that not one union voted against the walkout. The Labor Council on Friday night read a telegram from William Green, president of the A. F. of L., similar to the one sent to Seattle. Thereupon the fakers, facing a unanimous demand for the strike, decided to shift technical responsibility, although at the same time holding on to the leadership. They could not, however, avoid the strike, since at the same meeting locals totalling about 10,000 members, in addition to the 14,000 already out, reported that they were coming out anyway before Monday.

The same sentiment prevailed in Oakland.

Before the action of the conference was taken, the Market Street Railway men voted to strike at two o'clock Sunday morning. They have won their own demands. It is reported that the Municipal car men will follow, making the street-car tie-up complete.

Those who voted for strike prior to decision are: 6,000 ordinary workers, 1,200 laundry drivers, retail butchers and many hundreds in smaller trades and crafts.

Mayor Rossi of San Francisco, in a vicious radio address, virtually promised martial law in the city, and ordered 500 additional policemen on duty. Every likelihood exists that regular army troops will be sent to the scene.

Paralysis is gradually creeping through the city. Few vehicles are on the streets, as the gas supply is practically exhausted. Stores are running short of food supplies.

A statement issued by the Communist Party here denounces the strike committee officers and the executive committee of 25 picked by Chairman Vanderleur. This statement calls for the election of rank and file delegations at tomorrow's conference, and to effect a change in the leadership, bringing it under the leadership of the rank and file workers. The Communist Party warns against provocation and the possibility that Roosevelt will come here personally in an arbitration move. It appeals also that the food problem for the workers be solved by proper distribution, by fighting against profiteering.

Portland, Oregon has also reported that it will meet on Monday to decide upon its participation in the general strike. The Los Angeles Central Labor Union has thus far confined its aid to finances. The likelihood of a general walkout is strong in San Pedro.

President Roosevelt's trip to Hawaii has been cancelled, it is known, and he is undoubtedly coming here to intervene personally in the strike situation.

The solidarity and spirit of all the people here in favor of the strike is unprecedented in the country. The prestige of the Communist Party here, which took a leading part in the organization and preparation of the general strike, is tremendous.

Provocations against the workers are undoubtedly brewing, as the entire capitalist press featured a story about an alleged Communist march on San Francisco to "blow up bridges," etc., as well as other incendiary anti-working class stories.

For Victory of the General Strike

An Editorial

The general strike is on in San Francisco!

Overwhelmingly, the workers of San Francisco have rejected every effort of the small group of decrepit misleaders who fought to stave off the general strike in support of the marine and dock workers.

Every worker throughout the country should joyously greet this action of the San Francisco workers. They are in the front ranks of the great battle against the vicious attacks of the bosses and their government on every elementary right of the American workers. They are fighting against the same bloody murder terrorism that is harrassing the workers throughout the country.

Now that the San Francisco workers are tying up every wheel of industry, the bosses resort to the most depraved charges, to the wildest provocations. They declare that the Communist Party wants to destroy the railroads, wants to turn the strike into an armed insurrection, into revolution. They know this is the sheerest nonsense. But it is done in order beforehand to justify the most bloody onslaught against the workers, particularly its most devoted, its most loyal, class-conscious leadership, the Communist Party, the revolutionary trade union leaders, and the rank and file militants.

The Communist Party is the first to declare that this general strike is not for armed insurrection or revolution, but is a battle for the most elementary rights of the workers, the right to organize, union recognition, the right to strike without the strikers being murdered by the militia, for better conditions, and against the company unions and fink hiring halls. These rights are being shamelessly smashed by the Roosevelt government. The Communist Party is for the most effective united front of the workers, the rousing and rallying of the workers throughout the United States in support of this heroic general strike.

* * *

The workers in San Francisco took the correct steps. The whole government apparatus, the city, state, and federal forces, including representatives of the Roosevelt government, were lined up against the dockers and seamen who have been striking since May 9. The workers bitterly felt that their brothers were being attacked by the whole force of the capitalist government, and that if they lost their strike, it would be a blow to the whole labor movement. Hence, they decided to bring up the most powerful reinforcements of the working class in this battle—the general strike! Only in this way, they realized, could they beat back the superior enemy.

Now that the general strike has been called, the Communist Party, which has been exposing every move of the misleaders to prevent its being called, warns the workers against their treachery now more than ever. The greatest danger to the general strike now is the enemies of the workers in their own ranks who, finding they could not prevent it, go along only to be able better to stab it in the back at the most opportune moment.

The first step of Edward D. Vanderleur, heading the "strategy committee" (whose strategy consisted of how best to avoid and impede the strike) was bureaucratically to take it upon himself to "appoint" a committee of 25 "to lead the general strike." Here is where the great danger lies! Even though Vandeleur was forced to appoint Harry Bridges, militant leader of the dockers, on the committee because he has been acclaimed as leader by thousands of workers in the general strike, unless the workers themselves, through a broad rank and file general strike committee, can take the destiny of the strike into their own hands, they are in for the most rotten treachery, as the history of all general strikes shows.

The great task before the workers, entering the struggle so enthusiastically with such high spirit of working class solidarity, is to make the most effective use of their powerful weapon, the general strike. All workers are coming out together, shoulder to shoulder, and should stick together until the victory has been won. All unions entering the strike should take up the question of union recognition, where this has not been won; unorganized workers who join the strike, should draw up their own demands; the fight of every union, the main aim, victory of the dock strike, should be directed against the company unions, against the terror, for the right to organize, strike and picket, for better conditions.

In every port in the United States, the Communists should take the lead in the most energetic campaign to extend the dock and seamen's strike to cover the whole country. Now is the time for the East, South and Gulf ports to join their brothers and win for themselves recognition and better conditions. Never in the history of the country has there been a more favorable opportunity for all marine workers to walk out and win what for many years they have been striving for.

Every ounce of energy, every step should be taken, to spread the marine strike to every port in the country.

* * *

Already, the capitalists and their government agents have seen to it that the whole country is propagandized with lying, poison blasts against the San Francisco general strike. On Saturday night, Mayor Rossi of San Francisco broadcast a vicious speech against the strike over a nation-wide hook-up. He praised the strike-breakers, and besmirched the militant leaders of the strike.

The San Francisco strike has become the leading national issue before the entire American working-class. The San Francisco workers are fighting the battle so near to the heart of the steel workers, the coal miners, the railroad workers, the auto workers—in fact, of every worker in the United States.

Every worker is involved in this struggle, as his rights are involved, his living conditions will be affected by the outcome of the San Francisco strike.

Every worker, organized and unorganized, especially trade union members, must take immediate action in support of their brothers in the San Francisco general strike. The whole working class in the United States must take steps to help insure the victory of the San Francisco general strike.

Every A. F. of L. union should immediately pass resolutions of sympathy and solidarity with the San Francisco strike, which should be forwarded post-haste to the general strike committee. Resolutions of protest should be sent to Governor Merriam of California and Mayor Rossi of San Francisco! Protesting the slaughter of workers and the reign of terror. Wherever possible, sympathy strikes should be called, even if of the shortest duration, in support of the San Francisco general strike.

All workers' organizations should make it the first order of business to declare their support and solidarity with the San Francisco strikers. A flood of telegrams, letters, money for relief, protests to all government forces, should be sent out. Mass meetings should be arranged throughout the country to arouse and organize the workers in support of the strike.

The whole working class, which is following this strike like a hawk, should be mobilized for some form of action, for some definite, tangible, concrete step in order to help our brothers in San Francisco win victory that will have the greatest effect on all future struggles of the workers in the United States.

For the victory of the general strike, above all, the main necessity is that the control of the strike shall rest in the hands of the most trusted, the most reliable, and most militant rank and file representatives of every union.

Workers throughout the United States! Mass your forces behind your brothers in the heroic General Strike in San Francisco! Leave no stone unturned in your union, in your shop, in your neighborhood, to win support for the general strike, in arousing the enthusiasm and sympathy and solidarity of every worker behind their brothers in San Francisco!

Rally behind the workers in San Francisco!

Defeat the terror and provocation and lies of the bosses!

Spread the marine strike to every port!

Act now to insure the victory of the general strike—which will be a victory for the entire working class of the United States!

THE XI PLENUM OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE COMINTERN

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT TO 13TH PLENUM OF THE C. C. C. P. U. S. A.

By WILLIAM W. WEINSTONE

THE IMPENDING DANGER OF WAR

I wish now to pass over to the question of the war danger. As a result of the economic crisis and the revolutionary up-surge, all imperialist tendencies of the bourgeois are becoming sharper, war preparations are increasing, the conflict among the imperialist powers is taking on more acute forms, in the center of which stands the antagonism between the United States and Great Britain. The main danger of war is the danger of a counter-revolutionary war of intervention against the U.S.S.R. Particularly aggressive is becoming the position of American capitalism against the U.S.S.R. American capitalism has always been the most hostile to the system in the Soviet Union. Of all major capitalist countries, it has been the only one that has refused recognition. As the crisis deepens, the aggressiveness against the Soviet Union increases and this imposes upon the Party the task of exposing the role of American imperialism, showing the true meaning of its pacifist phrases and maneuvers, of exposing the attacks against the Soviet Union under the cover of a host of viciously deceptive slogans such as "forced labor" in the U.S.S.R. and "dumping," which are accompanied with propaganda that American imperialism is trying to bring about peace in the world.

In this connection the Plenum combatted certain illusions in the ranks of the proletariat and revolutionary movement that it is useless to struggle against war, that wars being inevitable under capitalism, we can do nothing about them. This idea is a variation of the old Guesdist theme that "militarism is an effect of capitalism. Why fight against effects? Overthrow capitalism!" There is also an idea that the sooner the war, the better, because war will bring revolution, and along with this idea, the opportunists' conceptions that revolutions are possible only as a result of war. The position of the C.I. is that as long as the struggle against war does not lead to the overthrow of the capitalist society, wars are inevitable, but the struggle against war can prolong the period for the peaceful upbuilding of socialism in the U.S.S.R. while preparing the masses for the utilization and transformation of imperialist war into civil war; thus the proletariat under the leadership of the Communist Party must play an active role in the postponement of war. Can anyone doubt that had the bourgeoisie not feared the action of the proletariat they would have already commenced war for the destruction of the Soviet Union? That was clearly brought out in the trial of the Industrial party and Mensheviks in the Soviet Union.

TASKS IN THE STRUGGLE AGAINST HUNGER, REPRESSION AND WAR

RESOLUTION OF THE 13TH PLENUM, CENTRAL COMMITTEE, C.P. U.S.A., ON THE MAIN TASKS IN THE ORGANIZATION OF MASS STRUGGLES AGAINST THE OFFENSIVE OF THE CAPITALISTS.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Central Committee emphasizes that the Party center and districts must take the most energetic measures to overcome all weaknesses and mobilize the widest front of struggle against imperialist war.

The Central Committee calls attention to the task assigned by the 11th Plenum of the E.C.C.I. which calls upon every member of the Communist Party to regard as a task of first importance the struggle against the war danger and the fight for the defense of the Soviet Union. As an important means to develop the struggle for the defense of the Soviet Union is the building of the Friends of the Soviet Union into a mass organization, the Communist Party organizations must assist in the building of the F.S.U. and in the organization of a workers' delegation to the November 7th celebrations, consisting chiefly of industrial workers from the basic industries.

RESOLUTION OF THE FIFTEENTH PLENUM OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE, C. P., U. S. A.

f) The struggle against imperialist war, which becomes increasingly important and pressing each day, must be seriously strengthened. The lag in this work since the 14th Plenum, revealed in our agitation, but especially in the dropping off of the number of special actions (against shipment of munitions, against Japanese imperialism) and in the inadequate August 1 demonstrations, reveals weaknesses which must be overcome. The most systematic and energetic efforts must be made to carry out the directives given for this campaign, to rouse a mass movement against American imperialism and its war preparations, to defend the Chinese people, and to build a living wall of defense around the Workers' Fatherland, the Soviet Union.

THE FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF OUR PARTY

From the first our Party came forward as the Party of proletarian class struggle. It grew from the ranks of the matured American proletariat whose vanguard it is in the conduct of the day-to-day struggle toward its historic culmination in the overthrow of the bourgeoisie and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Campaign Against Imperialist War and for Defense of the Soviet Union

In all our campaigns there must be tireless activity to mobilize the masses for struggle against the war plans of the imperialists, to protest and organize definite actions, such as stopping arms and munitions shipments. The feverish war preparations are a warning to the toiling masses that the most decisive actions must be taken against the conspiracies to unleash a new world slaughter, designed to be even more colossal and devastating than the war of 1914-18. In this connection special activity must be carried on among the toiling youth and particular assistance given to the Young Communist League in its anti-imperialist activity, in its work of penetrating the armed forces, etc.

The Communist Party rallies the American working class and all the toiling masses to defend the Soviet Union against the war plots of world imperialism, to defend the Chinese people against the ravages of imperialism, to demand that all war appropriations be converted into unemployment insurance for the millions of unemployed workers.

We constantly warn the American workers against the illusions of pacifism spread by liberals and Socialists. We bring before the masses the Marxist-Leninist analysis of capitalism to demonstrate that war is inherent in the capitalist system, that the only way to end war is to overthrow the capitalist system. Our Party equips the workers with the understanding that the struggle against the imperialist war must, in the event of war, be turned at the opportune moment into civil war for the overthrow of the war-breeding capitalist order. At the same time, we fight against the illusions prevalent among some Communists that revolution without imperialist war is impossible.

INTERNATIONALIZATION OF THE PARTY

As the United States section of the Communist International, our Communist Party takes part in the world revolutionary movement. It contributes in every possible way to aiding the fight of the working class and the oppressed masses in all parts of the world. It has representatives in the Communist International who study and contribute to the solution of the problems of all other Parties in the world. At the same time our Party has the benefit of the universal experiences of the revolutionary working class of the whole world which are expressed through the leadership of the Communist International. On many occasions since 1919 our Party has had the guidance of the Communist International in solving the most complicated problems.

REVOLUTIONARY WAY OUT OF CRISIS

The Communist Party of the U. S. A., section of the Communist International, points out that the only guarantee of peace is the abolition of capitalism. Its main task is the abolition of capitalism in the United States.

The deepening of the crisis of American capitalism, the growing sympathy for the Soviet Union, gives the Communist Party of the U.S.A. the widest possibilities of convincing and winning the American toiling masses for the revolutionary way out of the crisis.

In this country, the Communist Party, section of the Communist International, basing itself on the principles of Lenin and Stalin, will more determinedly than ever strive to win the American workers for the revolutionary way out of the crisis, for the emulation of the Soviet Union and its revolutionary victories.

Now, as before, the only guarantee against the anti-Soviet war moves, which thus far have been driven back by the tremendous strengthening of the economic, diplomatic and military position of the Soviet Union, lies in the mobilization of the widest movement for the defense of the Soviet Union among the oppressed masses in all lands and for the final overthrow of the capitalist war mongers.

THE PROGRAM OF THE STRUGGLE FOR THE UNITY OF THE WORKING CLASS

The brilliant report of Comrade Georgiy Dimitrov has already been discussed for the fourth day by the delegates of the Congress of the Comintern. A most urgent question is being discussed, which has occupied the thoughts of the proletarians of all the world, of all the working people. Before the working class, before the working people stands the alternative: Fascism or Socialism, peace or war, freedom or slavery, bread or hunger.

In the working masses there has now set in a turning from reformism toward a joint struggle with the Communists.

And if a single proletarian front, a people's anti-Fascist front, has not yet been brought about in all countries, this can be explained mainly by the resistance of the Second International and of the leaders of its sections. Comrade Dimitrov analyzed in detail the objections of the opponents of a single front with the Communists. And every honest workman, every laborer, every anti-Fascist, can be convinced of how groundless and artificial these objections are.

The Comintern does not impose any conditions as to the creation of unity of action except one: that this unity be directed against Fascism, against the danger of a new imperialist war, against the offensive of capital.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Communist parties are faced by a series of problems which determine the substance, the character and the direction of their struggle for the masses. Before each party there stands the problem of approaching closer to the masses than ever before, of developing work in all mass organizations more than ever, irrespective of by whom they were created and for what purposes.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The life and struggle of the working masses is less like a system than anything else, and can be fitted into prepared patterns less than anything else. The Communists cannot be alien to anything that agitates the popular masses. Concern for the every-day interests of the working people, petty at first sight, and ability to sense closely the attitudes of the masses, to teach these masses and to learn from them—by this at the present time is verified the fighting ability and intensity of the revolutionary attitude of a Communist.

The Communists know that bourgeois democracy is not able at all to ensure firmly the interests of the proletariat and the working people. They know that only the dictatorship of the proletariat, only the Soviet Government is the sole salvation of the working class from the yoke of exploitation, from capitalistic barbarism, and is the only way to socialism, one that has been tested by the experience of the U.S.S.R.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The report of Comrade Dimitrov is a fighting program of action which even more decisively and under new conditions turns all the parties of the Communist International to face the masses, a program which brings the parties on the road of the struggle for the cause of Communism. This program has been tested in battles. And it must be carried out. Victory must be achieved, because on it depends the future of our class, the future of socialism, the future of humanity.

THE SEVENTH WORLD CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL AND THE TASKS OF OUR PARTY

(RESOLUTION ADOPTED AT THE NOVEMBER PLENUM OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE C.P.U.S.A.)

The Central Committee of the C.P.U.S.A. endorses fully and wholeheartedly the decisions of the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International. These decisions are already proving the most powerful weapon for building the united front and the people's front against fascism and war, in the struggle for peace, for trade union unity, and for one working class political party.

It is vitally necessary that the decisions of the Seventh World Congress be made the property of the widest masses of American toilers. The Central Committee therefore greets the popularization campaign initiated by the Political Bureau through such means as open membership meetings, public symposium and debates, mass distribution of Dimitroff's report, etc. The enthusiastic reception given to the Browder reports, and the reports of the other comrades, by wide circles of workers, non-Communists as well as Communists, at such large gatherings as the memorable Madison Sq. Garden meeting and others throughout the country, proves the possibility for the widest mass popularization of the united front message of our Party.

The Central Committee urges the Party organizations to prosecute further this campaign with the utmost energy. We must strive especially to stimulate fraternal, comradely discussions with Socialists, trade unionists and farmer organizations, through symposiums and similar means, on the practical tasks of building the united and people's front. A most vital phase of this campaign is the popularization of the decisions of the Sixth World Congress of the Young Communist International to help build the widest anti-fascist youth front throughout the world. The Party press can and must play a most important role in this work.

The Central Committee approves wholeheartedly the work of the Party's delegation. The Central Committee notes especially the prominent part taken by the delegation —Party and Young Communist League—in the Congress deliberations and decisions, the coming forward of the C.P. U.S.A. as a major party in the world organization of the Communists and the harmonious working of the delegation as a body. From this arises a great responsibility, namely, the responsibility of making the united and people's front in the United States an example and a fortress of the world united front against fascism and war.

The Central Committee takes this occasion to send fraternal and revolutionary greetings to the Executive Committee of the Communist International, to its helmsman, Comrade Dimitroff, and to the great leader of the world revolutionary movement, Comrade Stalin.

Our chief task at present is to reorientate the work of the Party in accord with the tactical line of the Seventh World Congress. This line rests upon the central idea that the working class is now in a position to exercise a decisive influence upon the affairs of its own country as well as upon world affairs. The final and irrevocable victory of socialism in the Soviet Union strengthens immeasurably the positions of the workers all over the world. The inability of the bourgeoisie to overcome the collapse of capitalist stabilization and the increasing urge of the Socialists and trade unionists to the united front enable the workers of every capitalist country to carry on an active revolutionary policy of weakening the positions of the bourgeoisie and of strengthening the positions of the proletariat and its allies. It is the policy of thwarting the imperialist designs of the bourgeoisie and its contemplated attacks upon the U.S.S.R. It is the policy of frustrating the offensive of the bourgeoisie upon the toilers and of checking its attempt to introduce fascism. It is a policy that is profoundly hostile to the policy of reforming capitalism which makes the working class the tail end of the bourgeoisie.

In order to help the American workers to pursue such an active revolutionary policy, the Communists must break with the remnants of the old methods of mere general propaganda, must eradicate all remnants of the old traditions of functioning as revolutionary oppositions to the Socialist Party, to the mass trade unions and other mass organizations of the toilers. The bankruptcy of reformist policies, the greater opportunities for winning the masses to revolutionary policies, and the growing urge to the united front—these developments are creating a condition where Communists can and must assume responsibilities for the fate and well-being of the working class and of all toilers today and everyday. We must seek to become an important political factor in the daily life of our country and in the life of the world.

To strengthen the positions of the proletariat in the United States, the Communists must carry on their daily work in such a way as will contribute most effectively to the organization of the millions of unorganized workers into industrial unions and to the building up of the people's Farmer-Labor Party. This means also the organization and unification of the unemployed, much more serious work among the toiling farmers, the rendering of the most active assistance to the development of the people's liberation movement among the Negroes, the widest mobilization of the toiling women and youth. Only in this way will we enable the American working class to combat the capitalist offensive, to frustrate the incipient fascist movements, to fight effectively for peace and for the defense of the Soviet Union, to combat American imperialism and to render the utmost assistance to the national liberation movements especially in China, in the Caribbean and South America.

Our main weapon for accomplishing the above aims is the united front, trade union unity and trade union democracy. Despite the desperate opposition of the "Old Guard" in the Socialist Party and of the reactionaries in the American Federation of Labor the possibilities are growing more favorable every day for the realization of the united front between the Communists and Socialist Parties as well as for the struggle to realize trade union unity and trade union democracy. The Central Committee calls upon the Party organizations and every Party member to prosecute the struggle for the united front with the utmost determination and flexibility in the new way pointed out by the Seventh World Congress.

Every Party member must realize that in fighting for the realization of the united front of the working class we are fighting for the establishment of "the decisive link in the preparation of the toilers for the forthcoming great battles of the second round of proletarian revolutions". This is the link that will fuse the proletariat into a single mass political power and "will ensure its victory in the struggle against fascism, against the power of capital, for the dictatorship of the proletariat and the power of the Soviets". This gives us the line and methods to infuse the masses with the idea of Communism, the principles of Marxism-Leninism, in the present period. This gives us the true weapon for the building and strengthening of the Communist Party, for the realization of the political unity of the American proletariat—one party—and for building the transition to the revolutionary struggle for a Soviet America.

The Central Committee calls upon the Party to do all in its power to help the Young Communist League to accomplish successfully the change in its character indicated by the Sixth World Congress of the Young Communist International. The cause of uniting the toiling youth is of the most vital importance for the successful struggle against fascism and war. Consequently we must help the Young Communist League to carry through its reconstruction in such a way as will make it most effective in the creation of a genuine mass non-Party youth organization "which will include in its ranks not only Communist youth but also Socialist, national revolutionary, pacifist, religious and other youth, which will educate all its members in the spirit of Marxism-Leninism".

The Central Committee places before the Party the important task of studying and devising the best ways of adjusting the Party organization and its structure to the practical tasks confronting us at present. The Central Committee especially urges the Party organizations to improve radically the quality of its cadres by promoting to responsible activity and leadership mass workers, leaders and organizers of mass struggles in the trade unions, among the unemployed, among the toiling farmers, among the youth and women, straining all efforts to enable these cadres to strengthen their theoretical and political education.

Realizing that sectarianism is the chief obstacle to the rapid reorientation of our work along the above lines, the Central Committee calls upon the Party to eradicate all vestiges of sectarianism, all stereotyped and mechanical approaches and methods, uprooting every resistance to effective mass revolutionary work and policies, and guarding vigilantly against Right opportunist tendencies. The Central Committee calls upon the Party membership to cultivate and display the utmost initiative, the ability to apply in a living way the teachings of Marx, Lenin, Engels and Stalin, political alertness and tactical ability inseparably linked with firmness in the prosecution of our revolutionary aims and boundless loyalty to our revolutionary principles and program.

THE COMINTERN DECISION:

All the important implications and consequences of the proposed dissolution of the Comintern center are not yet fully apparent, nor can they be immediately visible.

The conditions which have made the Comintern as a guiding center both impossible and unnecessary will be discussed in a later article. What I want to emphasize at this point is that the Presidium does not propose to dissolve the Comintern center because the need to unite the workers on a world scale has disappeared. It proposes to do so because that particular organizational form for international proletarian unity, which was established at the First Congress of the Comintern in 1919

"and which corresponded to the needs of the initial period of the rebirth of the labor movement, more and more outlived itself in proportion to the growth of this movement and to the increasing complexity of problems in each country; and that this form even became a hindrance to the further strengthening of the national workers' parties."

That the leading body of any international workingclass organization frankly recognizes that it has outlived its useful function and has even become a hindrance to the growth of workers' parties in various lands must not be mistaken for a sign of weakness or of helpless collapse.

On the contrary, it is a token of the present strength, vitality and basic Marxist-Leninist approach to all those forces throughout the world which for a quarter century maintained and sought to extend workers' unity through the medium of the Comintern.

COMINTERN DECISION MARKS NEW PERIOD OF WORKINGCLASS ACTIVITY

The dissolution of the Comintern is, therefore, a well-aimed blow at the very base of fascist propaganda, at Hitler, his Fifth Columns and their agents within the United Nations.

It is also a heavy blow at those who have been unable to overcome their prejudices against Communism, based mostly on the hard struggles of the past quarter century, and have themselves played into the hands of the nation's enemies by continuing their work against unity within the labor movement.

For these reasons the self-dissolution of the Comintern will help remove the obstacles to greater unity among the anti-Axis nations and to working class and national unity.

RESOLUTION ON THE DISSOLUTION OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

1. The Communist Party of the United States, through its National Committee, declares its full approval and agreement with the proposal of May 15, 1943, by the Presiding Committee of the Communist International for the dissolution of the International. The C.P.U.S.A. discontinued its international affiliation in November, 1940, and is therefore not called upon to participate in the decision. The proposal is, however, of the greatest political importance, since it profoundly influences all political relationships, promotes the unification of the anti-Hitler coalition, disarms the Axis of its most potent weapon of disruption—the anti-Communist bogey—and opens the way within each nation toward more complete national unity in the prosecution of the war to victory.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Without analyzing in detail Browder's full position on the dissolution of the C.P.U.S.A. and creation of the Communist Political Association, and without making a developed critique of this position, one can nevertheless deduce from it the following conclusions.

1. The course applied under Browder's leadership ended in practice in liquidation of the independent political party of the working class in the U. S.

2. Despite declarations regarding recognition of the principles of Marxism, one is witnessing a notorious revision of Marxism on the part of Browder and his supporters, a revision which is expressed in the concept of a long-term class peace in the United States, of the possibility of the suppression of the class struggle in the postwar period and of establishment of harmony between labor and capital.

. . . . . .

In truth, nothing justifies the dissolution of the American Communist Party, in our opinion.

. . . . . .

And as far as the American Communists are concerned, it is clear that their desire to serve the unity of their country and the cause of human progress places before them tasks which pre-suppose the existence of a powerful Communist Party.

. . . . . .

The American Communists have an especially important role to play in the struggle taking place between the progressive forces of the earth and fascist barbarism.

The New Post-War Alignment of Political Forces and the Formation of Two Camps: the Imperialist and Anti Democratic Camp, and the Anti-Imperialist and Democratic One.

A new alignment of political forces has arisen.

The principal driving force of the imperialist camp is the U.S.A. Allied with it are Great Britain and France.

The anti-fascist forces comprise the second camp. This camp is based on the U.S.S.R. and the new democracies. It also includes countries that have broken with imperialism and have firmly set foot on the path of democratic development, such as Rumania, Hungary and Finland.

All the forces of the anti-imperialist and anti-fascist camp are united in the effort to secure a just and democratic peace. It is this united effort that has brought about and strengthened friendly co-operation between the U.S.S.R. and democratic countries on all questions of foreign policy. These countries, and in the first place the new democracies—Yugoslavia, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Albania, which played a big part in the war of liberation from fascism, as well as Bulgaria, Rumania, Hungary and to some extent Finland, which have joined the anti-fascist front—have proved themselves in the post-war period staunch defenders of peace, democracy and their own liberty and independence against all attempts on the part of the United States and Great Britain to turn them back in their course and to bring them again under the imperialist yoke.

III.

The American Plan for the Enthrallment of Europe.

Under present conditions imperialist countries like the U.S.A., Great Britain and the states closely associated with them become dangerous enemies of national independence and the self-determination of nations, while the Soviet Union and the new democracies are a reliable bulwark against encroachments on the equality and self-determination of nations.

IV.

The Tasks of the Communist Parties in Uniting the Democratic, Anti-Fascist, Peace-Loving Elements to Resist the New Plans of War and Aggression

The Comintern was founded after the first world war, when the Communist Parties were still weak, when practically no ties existed between the working classes of the different countries, and when the Communist Parties had not yet produced generally recognized leaders of the labour movement. The service performed by the Comintern was that it restored and strengthened the ties between the working people of the different countries, that it elaborated theoretical questions of the labour movement in the new, post-war conditions of development, that it established general standards of propaganda of the ideas of Communism, and that it facilitated the preparation of leaders of the labour movement. This created the conditions for the conversion of the young Communist Parties into mass labour parties. But once the young Communist Parties had become mass labour parties, the direction of these parties from one centre became impossible and inexpedient. As a result, the Comintern, from a factor promoting the development of the Communist Parties began to turn into a factor hindering their development. The new stage in the development of the Communist Parties demanded new forms of contact among the parties. It was these considerations that made it necessary to dissolve the Comintern and to devise new forms of connection between the parties.

. . . . . .

But the present position of the Communist Parties has its shortcomings. Some comrades understood the dissolution of the Comintern to imply the elimination of all ties, of all contact, between the fraternal Communist Parties. But experience has shown that such mutual isolation of the Communist Parties is wrong, harmful and, in point of fact, unnatural.

. . . . . .

There can be no doubt that if the situation were to continue it would be fraught with most serious consequences to the development of the work of the fraternal parties. The need for mutual consultation and voluntary coordination of action between individual parties has become particularly urgent at the present juncture when continued isolation may lead to a slackening of mutual understanding, and at times, even to serious blunders.

. . . . . .

The Communists must be the leaders in enlisting all antifascist and freedom-loving elements in the struggle against the new American expansionist plans for the enslavement of Europe.

The victory over German fascism and Japanese imperialism and the decisive role of the USSR in the crushing of these aggressive forces brought about important changes in the international situation.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Since the October Revolution in our country, the victory of the national liberation movement in China appears as a new and most powerful blow at the entire system of world imperialism and at all plans of imperialist aggression in our time.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In the capitalist countries themselves we now have millions of active friends who are closing ranks more and more in a broad democratic, anti-imperialist movement.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The democratic camp, which unites the USSR and the countries of the people's democracy, is opposed by the camp of the imperialist powers headed by the ruling circles of the United States of America.

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is our permanent task and important duty to watch everything that is going on in the camp of imperialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The ruling circles of the imperialist camp are steering an entirely different course.

The imperialists are countering the policy of enduring peace in the whole world with the policy of preparing a new world war.

* * * * * * * * * * *

All kinds of blackmailers from this camp were yesterday trying to frighten us with the atom bomb. Today they are frightening us with the so-called "hydrogen bomb", which still does not actually exist. They should not brag so much and should remember that while they were practicing blackmail with regard to the monopolistic possession of the atom bomb, the Soviet people, as is well known, did not waste time but became the possessors of the secret of producing atomic energy and atomic weapons (Prolonged applause). Only fools, like one of the ministers who went mad, could devote themselves to the crazy idea of frightening the Soviet Union and confusing their own people by advertising various aggressive plans, not understanding that in the present conditions, by rejecting peaceful competition and unleashing a new war, the imperialists will unavoidably provoke such just and decisive indignation of peoples that it will sweep imperialism and aggression from the face of the earth forever. (Stormy applause).

We fully stand for the Leninist-Stalinist principles of peaceful coexistence of the two systems and their peaceful economic competition. But we know it to be true that while imperialism exists, there also exists the danger of new aggression and that in the presence of imperialism and its predatory plans wars are unavoidable. Therefore, the advocates of a durable peace among the peoples must not be passive and become empty pacifists who are charmed by phrases, but they must everyday conduct a stubborn and still more effective struggle for peace, drawing into it the masses of the people and not stopping before appropriate measures when the imperialists attempt to unleash new aggression.

PEOPLE'S FRONT AND PEOPLE'S DEMOCRACY

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER

In using the at the time current phrase "new route to Socialism," which has since been rejected by the Parties in the People's Democracies, I, in the pamphlet In Defense of the Communist Party and the Indicted Leaders, was speaking in the tactical sense.

Of course, it is a matter of simple, ascertainable fact that, tactically speaking, the workers of the People's Democracies of Eastern Europe and of the Chinese People's Republic are not proceeding toward the achievement of Socialism with the identical tactics used by the Russian working class. And it could not be otherwise. They would not be Marxist-Leninists but political fools who would try to apply rigid, uniform tactics to all these widely ranging situations. These tactical variations are extremely important. Good or bad tactics in a given situation can make the difference between victory and defeat. But, regardless of tactical variations that may be necessary as the class struggle proceeds, the road to Socialism remains the same—through the defeat of the capitalist class and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

THE SOVIET UNION STANDS FOR PEACE AND DEFENDS THE CAUSE OF PEACE

Comrades.

If asked what is the main thing in our foreign policy, it is, to put it briefly, that the Soviet Union stands for peace and upholds the cause of peace. (Prolonged applause).

The Soviet Union steadfastly pursues the policy of peace and friendship among nations. We do not want war and we shall do everything in our power to prevent it.

Our peace policy arises from the very foundations of our Socialist system and from the interests of the Soviet people. Having completely abolished in our country the age-old exploitation of man by man, we have eliminated the reasons and conditions which, in the capitalist world, give rise to the policy of exploiting and enslaving other peoples.

Having created a model of fraternal co-operation among peoples of different races and nationalities, unparalleled in human history, we have abolished for ever the policy of basing the welfare of one State on the suppression of other States.

A policy, which has as its guiding principle the suppression of the national sovereignty of other peoples, is alien to us. A Socialist State does not need foreign expansion. It does not need colonial seizures. The Soviet Socialist system has uprooted the causes giving rise to economic crises, from which the rulers of the capitalist world usually seek to escape along the road of military gambles.

. . . . . .

We live in an epoch when the movement of the masses toward democracy and Socialism daily becomes more powerful; when the camp of peace and democracy has become a mighty factor in the entire international arena.

History knows no such mass movement as that uniting the international supporters of peace. There is not a single country in which this movement does not possess a base nor one in which it is not growing and spreading.

. . . . . .

It is precisely the successes of the camp of peace that drive the warmongers to increasing frenzy. The programme of the main enemies of peace stands out clearer with every passing day; a programme which envisages the creation, by means of violence and new wars, of an American world empire which, in scale, would surpass any of the world empires built by any conqueror in history.

The idea is nothing more or less than that of turning the whole world into a colony of the American imperialists, of reducing sovereign peoples to a state of slavery.

DEFENCE OF PEACE AND THE STRUGGLE AGAINST THE WARMONGERS

REPORT SUBMITTED TO THE MEETING OF THE INFORMATION BUREAU OF THE COMMUNIST PARTIES HELD IN THE SECOND HALF OF NOVEMBER 1949

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1949, No. 29 (56)

Comrades. A little more than two years have passed since the first Information Meeting of the representatives of a number of Communist Parties was held.

The Declaration issued by this Meeting gave a profound analysis of changes which had taken place in the international situation as a result of World War Two and during the first post-war years. It revealed the formation of two camps in the world arena and the contrast of their aims and tasks; it exposed the aggressive plans of the imperialist camp headed by the U.S.; plans aimed at establishing world domination of Anglo-American imperialism and destroying democracy; it laid bare the treacherous role of the chieftains of Right-Wing Social Democracy as accomplices of imperialism in all its anti-popular activities.

The entire course of events for the past two years has fully confirmed the correctness of the estimation of the international situation given by the first Meeting of the Information Bureau, and of the perspectives and tasks of the anti-imperialist camp as outlined by that Meeting.

. . . . . .

III.

COMMUNIST AND WORKERS' PARTIES IN THE VANGUARD OF THE STRUGGLE AGAINST WARMONGERS

. . . . . .

To frustrate the plans of imperialist aggression, the greatest vigilance by the peoples is essential, also the further extension of the front of peace and the further consolidation and active struggle of all forces standing for peace.

. . . . . .

Particular attention should be devoted to drawing into the peace movement trade unions, women's, youth, co-operative, sport, cultural-education, religious and other organisations, and also scientists, writers, journalists, cultural workers, parliamentary and other political and public leaders who act in defence of peace and against war.

. . . . . .

That is why the cardinal task of the Communist and Workers' Parties is to draw the broadest sections of the working class into the ranks of fighters for the cause of peace; to effect firm working class unity; resolutely combat the Right-Wing Socialist disrupters and disorganizers of the working class movement: organise joint actions of various sections of the proletariat on the basis of a joint platform of struggle for peace and for the national independence of their countries.

. . . . . .

Trade union bodies affiliated to the W.F.T.U. play a great role in organising peace supporters. In many countries they are the initiators of the national peace movement and of the formation of national committees in defence of peace.

. . . . . .

The democratic youth of all countries demonstrated its will for peace and the readiness to struggle for it at the World Conference of Working Youth held in Warsaw in 1947 and at World Youth congresses and festivals in 1948 and 1949. The World Federation of Democratic Youth, rallying in its ranks over 60 million young men and women, actively champions the cause of peace.

. . . . . .

The duty of Communist and working class parties in capitalist countries is to merge the struggle for national independence with the struggle for peace; tirelessly to expose the anti-national, treacherous nature of the policy of bourgeois governments which have become direct lieutenants of U.S. imperialism; to rally and consolidate all democratic patriotic forces in each country round the slogans of eliminating the shameful U.S. bondage, and the adoption of an independent foreign and home policy corresponding to the national interests of the peoples.

The Communist and Workers' parties should carry high the banner defending the national independence and sovereignty of their countries.

STATEMENT OF THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS OF THE USSR CONCERNING THE NORTH ATLANTIC PACT

On January 14th the Department of State of the United States of America published a wordy statement under the bombastic phrase "Let us build peace. Collective security in the North Atlantic area."

. . . . . .

I. THE WESTERN ALLIANCE—A WEAPON OF THE AGGRESSIVE ANGLO-AMERICAN BLOC IN EUROPE

. . . . . .

The Western Alliance is expected also to include certain other European countries which are ready to adapt their policy to the purposes of the said grouping, headed by Great Britain. Moreover, it is a known fact that the founders of the Western Alliance from the very beginning excluded the possibility of participation in this alliance on the part of all people's democracies and the Soviet Union, thereby revealing that the Western Alliance was created not for the purpose of uniting peace-loving European countries and in general not in the interest of assuring lasting peace in Europe but for other purposes which have absolutely nothing to do with the interests of strengthening peace and international security.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Just as the execution of the Marshall Plan has not been directed toward the real economic recovery of European states but is a means of adapting the policy and economy of the "Marshall Plan" countries to the narrowly self-centered and strategic plans of Anglo-American domination in Europe, in the same way the formation of the new grouping is not at all designed for purposes of mutual assistance and collective defense of the members of the Western Alliance, since under the conditions of fulfillment of the Yalta and Potsdam Agreements these countries are not threatened by any aggression, but is endeavoring to strengthen and further expand the predominant influence of the Anglo-American ruling circles in Europe by subordinating to their narrow interests the entire foreign and domestic policy of the corresponding European states. The incompatibility of such political plans of the Anglo-American bloc with the interests of peace and the fulfillment of the principles of democracy in the European countries is absolutely manifest.

* * * * * * * * * * *

II.

The North Atlantic Pact and Anglo-American Plans for World Domination

. . . . . .

The North Atlantic Draft Treaty and the circumstances accompanying its preparation clearly reveal the aspirations of the Anglo-American bloc for world domination.

. . . . . .

Finally, we must speak of the Soviet Union and the people's democracies, which are carrying out the real will of their people and the great principles of friendship and equal rights in relations with other nations.

The very existence of the Soviet State, with its growing power and its international authority, and likewise the powerful support given to it by the democratic forces in other countries constitute an insurmountable barrier in the way of all plans of any kind for the establishment of world domination by one power or another; this has already found its historical confirmation in the liquidation of the fascist states and their attempts to achieve their fantastic plans for world domination, which differ little from the present plans for establishing Anglo-American domination.

. . . . . .

No intelligent person can claim that this is being done for purposes of self-defense on the part of the USA. On the contrary, it is likewise known that since the Second World War, which ended with the destruction of the aggressive powers, no danger of aggression exists for the United States.

Moreover, can it be considered an accidental fact that the United States and Great Britain, even after the termination of the Second World War, have maintained their combined military staff in Washington, which is stealthily continuing its work and preparing new plans of aggression. If there were no such plans, there would be no reason for maintaining this Washington staff under present world conditions and there would be no need for sending American and also British troops to the territories of a new and ever increasing number of states.

. . . . . .

The aggressive character of U.S. policy with respect to the growing democratic forces and entire democratic countries is widely known. Thus the Greek people cannot get out of the blind alley which has been created, since reactionary forces alien to the people find powerful support from abroad. Last year all the people of Czechoslovakia had to do was to check the reactionary circles of their own country somewhat and lend support to the leading democratic forces, and the ruling circles in the USA and in the entire Anglo-American bloc raised an incredible howl over the internal events in Czechoslovakia, with every kind of attempt at intervention in these internal affairs.

. . . . . .

This Pact is backed not only by the ruling aggressive circles in the USA and by its British exponents such as Churchill or Bevin, but also by quite a number of warmongers of lesser importance. However, it should not be forgotten that the signing of such or similar pacts still does not give a guarantee and still does not create the possibility of achieving the aggressive aims set by the authors of these pacts. In this connection we must remember the unanimous support given by the democratic circles in all countries to the famous statement made by J. V. Stalin, the head of the Soviet Government, to the effect that "the horrors of the recent war are too vivid in the memory of the nations and the social forces standing for peace are too great for Churchill's disciples in aggression to be able to overcome them and turn them in the direction of a new war."

III

The North Atlantic Alliance—An Undermining of the United Nations

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

The said resolution gives free rein to the government of the USA in the matter of forming any kind of international alliances in time of peace and, under the pretext of assuring security, it permits the ruling circles of the USA to enter into any kind of groupings and to embark on any kind of adventure, which fully corresponds to the present aggressive moods of the ruling circles in the United States.

The adoption of this resolution by the United States Senate means that the ruling circles in the USA have not only broken all their principal obligations with respect to the United Nations but have also shifted to a new course in their foreign policy, which from now on is directed toward the forcible establishment of Anglo-American world domination. From this it follows that the resolution adopted by the United States Senate means that the ruling circles in the USA have expressed themselves in favor of a policy of aggression, in favor of a policy of unleashing a new war.

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

Consequently, the so-called "new direction" in the foreign policy of the ruling circles of these states means that they have returned to the old anti-Soviet course of foreign policy, based on isolating the USSR, which they adhered to during the years preceding the Second World War and which almost led European civilization to ruin.

• • • • • • • • • • • • •

Fundamental Conclusions

First Conclusion

The Soviet Union has been compelled to take into consideration the fact that the ruling circles in the United States and Great Britain have shifted to an openly aggressive political course, the ultimate aim of which is the forcible establishment of Anglo-American world domination, and that the policy of aggression adopted by them, the policy of unleashing a new war, serves this aim.

In view of this situation the Soviet Union must still more energetically and more consistently conduct the struggle against all and any warmongers, against the policy of aggression and of unleashing a new war, and in favor of universal and lasting democratic peace.

In this struggle for strengthening universal peace and international security the Soviet Union considers as its allies all other peace-loving states and all those countless champions of universal democratic peace who are the real spokesmen of the feelings and thoughts of nations which have carried on their shoulders the incredible burdens of the last world war and with legitimate reasons repudiate all aggressors and instigators of a new war.

Second Conclusion

Everybody sees that the United Nations is now being undermined, because to a certain extent it checks and restrains aggressive circles in their policy of aggression and unleashing a new war.

In view of this situation the Soviet Union must struggle still more firmly and still more persistently against the undermining and destruction of the United Nations by aggressive elements and their helpers and must strive to prevail upon the United Nations not to indulge such elements, as often happens these days, but to set a higher value on its authority when it is a case of thwarting those who are conducting a policy of aggression and unleashing a new war.

COMMUNIST PARTY OF YUGOSLAVIA IN THE POWER OF MURDERERS AND SPIES

Resolution of the Information Bureau

The Information Bureau, consisting of representatives of the Communist Party of Bulgaria, Rumanian Workers' Party, Working People's Party of Hungary, United Workers Party of Poland, Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks), Communist Party of France, and the Czechoslovak and Italian Communist Parties, having considered the question: "The Yugoslav Communist Party in the power of murderers and spies," unanimously reached the following conclusions:

Whereas, in June 1948 the meeting of the Information Bureau of the Communist Parties noted the change over of the Tito-Rankovic clique from democracy and socialism to bourgeois nationalism, during the period that has elapsed since the meeting of the Information Bureau, this clique has travelled all the way from bourgeois nationalism to fascism and outright betrayal of the national interests of Yugoslavia.

. . . . . .

The change-over of the Tito clique to fascism was not fortuitous. It was effected on the order of their masters, the Anglo-American imperialists, whose mercenaries, it is now clear, this clique has been for long.

The Yugoslav traitors, obeying the will of the imperialists, undertook to form, in the People's Democracies political gangs consisting of reactionaries, nationalists, clerical and fascist elements and, relying on these gangs, to bring about counter-revolutionary coups in these countries, wrest them from the Soviet Union and the entire socialist camp and subordinate them to the forces of imperialism.

The Tito clique transformed Belgrade into an American centre for espionage and anti-Communist propaganda.

When all genuine friends of peace, democracy and socialism see in the U.S.S.R. a powerful fortress of Socialism, a faithful and steadfast defender of the freedom and independence of nations and the principal bulwark of peace. The Tito-Rankovic clique, having attained power under the mask of friendship with the U.S.S.R., began on the orders of the Anglo-American imperialists, a campaign of slander and provocation against the Soviet Union, utilising the most vile calumnies borrowed from the arsenal of Hitler.

The transformation of the Tito-Rankovic clique into a direct agency of imperialism, and accomplices of the warmongers, culminated in the lining up of the Yugoslav Government with the imperialist bloc at U.N.O., where the Kardeljs, Djilas and Beblers, joined in a united front with American reactionaries on vital matters of international policy.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Information Bureau of the Communist and Workers' Parties considers therefore, that the struggle against the Tito clique—hired spies and murderers, is the international duty of all Communist and Workers' Parties.

It is the duty of Communist and Workers' Parties to give all possible aid to the Yugoslav working class and working peasantry who are fighting for the return of Yugoslavia to the camp of democracy and socialism.

A necessary condition for the return of Yugoslavia to the socialist camp is active struggle on the part of revolutionary elements both inside the Yugoslav Communist Party and outside its ranks, for the regeneration of the revolutionary, genuine Communist Party of Yugoslavia, loyal to Marxism-Leninism, to the principles of proletarian internationalism, and fighting for the independence of Yugoslavia from imperialism.

The loyal Communist forces in Yugoslavia, who, in the present brutal conditions of fascist terror, are deprived of the possibility of engaging in open action against the Tito-Rankovic clique, were compelled in the struggle for the cause of Communism, to follow the path taken by the Communists in those countries where legal work is forbidden.

The Information Bureau expresses the firm conviction that, among the workers and peasants of Yugoslavia, forces will be found capable of ensuring victory over the bourgeois-restoration espionage Tito-Rankovic clique; that the toiling people of Yugoslavia led by the working class will succeed in restoring the historical gains of People's Democracy, won at the price of heavy sacrifice and heroic struggle by the peoples of Yugoslavia and that they will take the road of building socialism.

The Information Bureau considers one of the most important tasks of the Communist and Workers' Parties to be an all-round heightening of revolutionary vigilance in Party ranks; exposing and rooting out bourgeois-nationalist elements and agents of imperialism, no matter under what flag they conceal themselves.

The Information Bureau recognises the need for more ideological work in the Communist and Workers' Parties; more work to train Communists in the spirit of loyalty to proletarian internationalism; irreconcilability to any departure from the principles of Marxism-Leninism, and in the spirit of loyalty to Peoples' Democracy and Socialism.

Comrade Stalin's telegram to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Italy said: "The Central Committees of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) is grieved that Comrade Togliatti's friends failed to protect him from this foul and cowardly attack."

The reply sent by the Central Committee of the Italian Communist Party to Comrade Stalin is worthy of this well-tested Party. In their answer the Italian comrades assure Comrade Stalin that the solidarity of the heroic Soviet people and Stalin's warning about vigilance will be for the Italian Communists "a spur to strengthen and develop the struggle of the united international front of peace, democracy and socialism."

All the Communist Parties took Comrade Stalin's message to the Italian Communist Party as the expression of his great solicitude for the international working class movement and its leaders.

Increased struggle against remnants and revivals of fascism, the welding of all supporters of democracy and progress into a single socialist camp will be the best answer of the Communists of all countries to Comrade Stalin's solicitude.

THE PEACE MOVEMENT IS AMERICA'S ONLY SALVATION

BY MICHAEL RUSSO

Assistant National Organizational Secretary, Communist Party

The pages of history are crowded with examples of the infamy of the exploiting classes. But few, if any, match the infamous role of American imperialism in Korea. None has been fraught with more danger to the world. Wall Street's rapacious hand has shoved us to the very edge of the precipice; the fate of the world hangs in balance. Unless the people act at once to halt Wall Street's mad adventure, millions of people will pay with their lives, for the atomic catastrophe against which the decent people of the world have warned will become a tragic reality.

Not the least of Wall Street's objectives in its criminal attack upon the Korean people is to undermine and destroy the rapidly growing peace movement in our own country and to prevent its merging with the world movement for peace.

This powerful current for peace can, if organized, become a formidable obstacle to the further enfolding of Wall Street's design for war. Despite the sustained and furious campaign to condition them into accepting the inevitability of a new world war, despite the lies about Soviet "aggression," despite the Korean provocation, the American people, in their overwhelming majority, still cling tenaciously to the view that peace can and must be won.

By confronting the American people with an accomplished fact, the Korean invasion was calculated, in part, to achieve what cold war propaganda could not accomplish, namely, the breaking down of the people's desire for peace and mounting resistance to war. The people, however, though momentarily confused by events, view the Korean provocation with deep suspicion and with growing fear that it will precipitate world war.

If the American people want to give expression to their desire for peace and against atomic war they must demand that Washington withhold all military aid from the Korean quislings and withdraw all American troops and military personnel.

THE COMMUNIST

JULY, 1929

THE REVOLUTIONARY STRUGGLE AGAINST IMPERIALIST WAR

BY H. M. WICKS

The recognition on the part of Communists that the question of the imminence of another world war is the central problem of the day places sharply before us the question of revolutionary tactics in the struggle against imperialist war. August 1st has been set aside by the Communist International as a day of strikes and mighty mass demonstrations in every country in the world against the threats of the warmongers. This fifteenth anniversary of the outbreak of the last world war is a day of world-wide mobilization of the masses against capitalism, a challenge to the capitalist states of the world that are driving relentlessly toward another world war.

* * * * * * * * * *

In this situation the Second International is an active aid of the capitalist states by trying to confuse the masses with pacifist phrases and openly assisting the bourgeoisie organize an anti-Bolshevik bloc. The social democratic international and all its sections have been placed at the disposal of the imperialist powers in their campaign against the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union. The social-democratic press has become a publicity bureau for the imperialists by publishing the most malignant slanders against the Soviet Union, by talking about "red imperialism" and endeavoring to alienate the masses from defense of the Soviet Union so that their imperialist masters will not fear to wage a war of intervention in an effort to destroy it. The social democrats try to conceal their role as servants of capitalism by pacifist talk. They spread illusions concerning the possibility of preventing war by disarmament, by committees of arbitration, by reparations agreements, by the action of the League of Nations, etc.

Against this sort of deception is the clear call to action by the Communist International, which urges a determined revolutionary struggle against war. As a section of the world revolutionary party, the Communist Party of the United States, is engaged in mobilizing all its resources to organize mass demonstrations and strikes throughout the country.

The first prerequisite for any effective campaign is the internal strengthening and clarification of the Party. The face of the Party must be toward the industries. There must be activization of all the factory nuclei and careful preparations for enlisting the broadest masses in the demonstrations. The shop papers must expose the war plans of the government. The struggle against the war danger must be utilized to aid in the drive to organize the unorganized workers in the war industries. The Party district conferences that are being held must not only mobilize the nuclei but must strengthen the departments of the Party organizationally. The women's departments must be strengthened and a drive made to enlist the working women in the demonstrations and strikes. The organization of defense groups is imperative not merely for one day's activity on International Red Day, but as permanent forces in the struggle against the tyranny of the police, the gangsters and thugs of the employers. The agitation and propaganda departments of the Party must be strengthened and conferences held so that the maximum of our resources may be concentrated on the ideological campaign for International Red Day during the remaining weeks before August 1st.

* * * * * * * * * *

But it is not sufficient in our drive against imperialist war merely to concentrate upon the war industries. We must be able to reach the masses in the armed forces of the nation with revolutionary agitation and propaganda calculated to cause defections and mutiny in the ranks.

We do not indulge in the social-democratic twaddle about disarmament. We will not tell the soldiers in the army to throw away their guns and run home. We tell them to hold their guns in their hands and use them against their own capitalist oppressors. When faced with an imperialist war as an accomplished fact we must be able to popularize definite revolutionary slogans among the armed forces. In case of a war between imperialist nations we raise the slogan of fraternization with the soldiers of the opposing army, refusal to obey commands of officers, mutinies, and other forms of disruptive work. In case of a war against the Soviet Union our main slogan will be different. We will then urge the soldiers in the imperialist armies to desert the army and with their guns and as much ammunition as they can get, go over to the side of the Red Army against the imperialist forces.

While the capitalists prepare for another imperialist war, we prepare to utilize the difficulties for capitalism arising out of such a war in order to initiate the next stage of the world revolution.

We realize that such a conflict requires careful preparation under the leadership of a determined Bolshevik party. Turning an imperialist war between nations into a civil war against capitalism is not a simple matter, it is not a game for dilletantes to play. It requires the most highly developed revolutionary strategy and an ability to estimate the relative forces involved in the struggle as well as the precise moment for the launching of the insurrection.

When a revolutionary situation is developing, as a result of war or from any other cause, the Party of the proletariat must lead a direct attack against the capitalist state. The slogans put forth must be of such a nature as to guide the movement in its development, which will take the form at first of mass strikes and armed demonstrations. In that stage there arises the question of arming of the working class and disarming the capitalist class. Finally the highest form of struggle is reached wherein it culminates in the general strike and a merging of large sections of the military forces and the workers for armed insurrection against the capitalist state power.

We thus indicate the high-lights in the development of the revolutionary struggle against the bourgeoisie in order to emphasize the world-historic importance of the mobilization of the working class for the struggle against imperialist war. Every revolutionary worker, realizing the significance of August 1st, will work day and night to make our strikes and demonstrations the greatest concerted action on the part of the working class this country has ever seen.

WORKERS' ENEMIES EXPOSED

The New York State Committee of the Communist Party has expelled from its ranks Manning Johnson, who is running as a candidate for public office on the Democratic Party ticket. Johnson, an official of Local 302 of the Cafeteria Workers Union, has frequently in the past exhibited opportunistic tendencies and has more recently shown himself to be a politically degenerate and totally unreliable person.

All members and sympathizers are warned not to have anything to do with him.

ON THE DISTRIBUTION AND STUDY OF THE "HISTORY OF THE C.P.S.U.(B.)" AND THE PROPAGATION OF MARXISM-LENINISM IN THE WORLD COMMUNIST MOVEMENT

RESOLUTION ADOPTED AUG. 10, 1939

1. THE IMPORTANCE OF THE "HISTORY OF THE C.P.S.U.(B.)" FOR THE COMMUNIST WORLD MOVEMENT, THE INTERNATIONAL PROLETARIAT AND THE WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL COUNTRIES

The appearance of the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) is one of the greatest events in the life of the Communist world movement and of the international labor movement, in the struggle of the working people of all countries for emancipation. Written with the immediate participation of Comrade Stalin and authorized by the Central Committee of the C.P.S.U.(B.), the History occupies an extraordinary place among the classic works of Marxism-Leninism. The History is intended to play—and will undoubtedly play—a very important role in the successful mastering of Bolshevism by the Communists of the capitalist countries, in the consolidation of the Sections of the Communist International, and in raising their ideological and political level.

. . . . . .

The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (B.) is the common property of the Communists, the labor movement, the toilers of all countries. It is the history of the Bolshevik Party of that country which has become the birthplace of Leninism, the fatherland of the Leninist-Stalinist theory of the socialist revolution, the country of the victorious dictatorship of the proletariat, the country of socialism, the fatherland of the toilers of all countries.

. . . . . .

The Communists must always remember Lenin's and Stalin's instructions that one must know how to apply the experiences of the C.P.S.U.(B.), to the new historical conditions of the struggle of the working class. The Communist Parties must always bear in mind that "some fundamental features of our revolution have no local, no specific national, exclusively Russian, but international importance" (Lenin), but the Communists of every country must "investigate, study, find out, judge and understand the specifically national feature in the concrete methods of every country in solving the uniform international task." (Lenin) This is the more necessary as the paths to the attainment of the proletarian dictatorship, Soviet power, may be different in the various capitalist countries.

The History of the C.P.S.U.(B.) teaches the international proletariat how the struggle for the fulfillment of the fundamental task, to defeat capitalism, can be successfully combined with the defense of the daily interests of the toilers and the fulfillment of the daily tasks confronting the proletariat in the various stages of its struggle. By the study and thoroughgoing exposition of the History of the C.P.S.U. (B.) the Communist Parties obtain a powerful weapon for the struggle against fascism and the fascist warmongers, for the setting up and consolidation of the workers' united front and people's front, for the establishment of the united international front of the nations against the aggressors: they obtain a weapon enabling them to rally the millions of toilers round the great country of socialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

By their improved mastery of the theory of Marxism-Leninism the Communists can, in applying the tactics of the united front, avoid both its Right-opportunist distortion and lapses into sectarianism. They are able to isolate and defeat the capitulators and other enemies in the labor movement and overcome the difficulties in the way of rallying the toilers under the leadership of the working class.

"But theory can become the greatest force in the labor movement if it is built up in indissoluble connection with revolutionary practice, for it, and it alone, can give to the movement confidence, the power of orientation and an understanding of the inner connection between events; for it, and it alone, can help us in our practical work to discern how and in which direction classes are moving not only at the present time, but also how and in which direction they will move in the near future."[1]

2. On the Distribution of the "History of the C.P.S.U.(B.)"

* * * * * * * * * * *

It would be a mistake to compare the distribution of the History with that of other earlier published books. In their sales campaigns for the History the Communist Parties must bear in mind that behind each member of the Communist Party (as can be seen by the votes cast for the Communist Party candidates at elections in the countries with a legal Communist movement) there stand ten to fifteen sympathizers who are ready to support the Party. It is necessary to make the appearance of the History the turning point in the sale of Marxist-Leninist literature, the powerful lever, in order to spread the ideas of Marxism-Leninism among the broad masses.

[1] Joseph Stalin, Leninism, Vol. I, p. 27. International Publishers, New York.

In order to secure a broad and correct distribution of the book it is necessary to adopt the following measures:

(a) To see that every member of the Party gets a copy of the History, studies it and makes it his or her textbook;

(b) To employ every method to distribute the History among the Social-Democratic workers and cadres of the Social-Democratic parties;

(c) To devote particular attention to the distribution of the book among the members, and in particular the officials, of the trade unions, the mass labor organizations and the democratic organizations (cooperatives, cultural organizations, etc.); to see to it that the libraries of these organizations are supplied with the History;

(d) To organize the sale of the book among the progressive intelligentsia, including the progressive section of the students;

(e) To devote greatest attention to the distribution of the History among the youth, to overcome the inadmissible lagging behind in this sphere (even in France where up to now the distribution of the work has been successfully conducted); the young Communists must become the champions for the distribution of the History.

(f) To organize the distribution of the book also among the progressive elements of the peasantry, and thereby to put an end to the prejudice of some Communists that "the peasants are unable to read and study a serious Marxist book."

(g) For the distribution of the History in the countries of fascist dictatorship and in the colonies where the work of the Communist Parties is encountering great difficulties, it is necessary that the legal Communist Parties (Communist Parties of France, United States, Great Britain, Holland and other countries) assist the illegal and weaker Communist Parties.

(h) The guidance of the distributive work of the History must by no means be left entirely in the hands of the publishers. It must be in the hands of the Central Committee of the Party. All Party organizations, propagandists and agitators, as well as those persons who sympathize with the Party, must be drawn into the work of distribution. It is advisable to publish in the press comments of readers, Communists, non-Party people, trade union officials, prominent members of the progressive intelligentsia, etc., on the book. The reporting on the distribution must be made in an exact manner (as is being done in France). It is necessary to ascertain in every locality how this work is being carried on, whereby inadequate and wrong methods must be corrected. The achieved results are to be published in the press and reported at meetings and conferences, as is being done in France and in the United States in order to stimulate the increased sale of the History.

It is particularly important in the countries with a legal labor movement to maintain a permanent contact with the purchasers of the book, to assist them in the study and to try to make them active propagandists and canvassers for the History.

3. On the Organization of the Study of "The History of the C.P.S.U.(B.)"

* * * * * * * * * * *

The organizing of the study of the History must not bear the character of a temporary campaign. A systematic activity must be initiated which should in every way arouse among the Communists and the toilers the desire to study more of the Marxist-Leninist theory.

In organizing the study of the History attention must be directed that in the first place the Party cadres, the Communist officials, the officials of the Young Communist League, of the trade unions and other mass organizations study the book. It must be considered as an axiom in the Party that only those members can be real Bolsheviks who study the "Short Course" and indefatigably work to raise their level of theoretical knowledge.

At the same time it is necessary that the leadership of the Party adopt every measure in order to draw also sympathizers, Social-Democratic workers, trade union officials who are not Communists, and others into the study of the History.

In considering the peculiarities of the various capitalist countries it would be advisable to take into account the following suggestions as guiding lines for the study of the History.

I. In Countries With A Legal Communist Movement

(a) The study of the History should be organized according to groups, and care must be taken to bring in all Party members. A great political educational task must be accomplished, and all necessary organizational measures must be carried out so that the Party members really participate in the study of the History and do not restrict themselves to formal resolutions of the leadership to the effect that participation of Communists in the study is necessary.

(b) For the responsible functionaries who are politically more educated, for the leading cadres of the Party, it is considered necessary to organize in the main centers of the countries some special circles of a higher type at which the source material, and primarily the works quoted in the History are used for study.

(c) Side by side with the study of the History in the groups and circles, independent study of the History of the C.P.S.U.(B.) must throughout be organized and furthered, particularly among the more politically educated cadres of the Party.

(d) For the propaganda of the History and of the theory of Marxism-Leninism among the non-Party elements and among the membership of anti-fascist parties and organizations, lectures, readings and discussions should be organized within these organizations, with particular reference to theoretical questions which have an immediate importance.

It is necessary that the most highly educated Communists, politically and theoretically, should, under the direction of the Party organizations, form circles in factories and working class districts for the study of the History among the non-Party workers, particularly Social-Democrats.

II. In Countries Where the Communist Movement is Illegal

The correct organization of the study of the History is, in the countries under fascist dictatorship, the most important means for the creation of a strong illegal Communist Party, capable, in spite of the raging terror, of carrying on systematic mass work and of organizing and leading the struggle of the working class and of the toilers for the overthrow of the fascist power. The study of the History must become an effective factor in the establishment of new lower Party organizations, in the recruitment of new members, and in the building up and strengthening of the illegal Communist Parties. In these countries, it is necessary to apply the most various and elastic forms of study of the History.

* * * * * * * * * * *

IV. The Study of the "History" in the Party Schools

For the more rapid and more basic education of strong Marxist-Leninist cadres, it is necessary to extend the network of schools, to transform their curriculum, and critically to examine all literature used by the schools, in accordance with the viewpoints given in the History.

The most important measures with regard to the schools are as follows:

(a) To introduce in the central Party schools a course, "Foundations of Marxism-Leninism," as the sole course for the study of the science of Marxism-Leninism. The History and Comrade Stalin's Leninism to be used as the basis of this study program. The course on "History of the Working Class" of the particular country in question is to be maintained as an independent course in the school's program, and must be most closely related to the History of the C.P.S.U.(B.) and to Leninism.

(b) Whenever conditions of legality permit, care should be taken to establish evening courses for the study of the History to the widest possible extent throughout the lower and middle cadres of the Party.

(c) In the short-term schools the chief effort should be directed towards enabling those Party cadres who have been through the school to continue independently a more thorough study of the History and of the other works of Marxism-Leninism.

4. The Propagation of Marxism-Leninism Must be Brought to A Higher Level

. . . . . .

A situation must be brought about in which every Party functionary without exception not only himself studies the History of the C.P.S.U.(B.) and works to raise the level of his theoretical knowledge, but also that he undertakes alongside his general Party work a specific task of teaching.

. . . . . .

(g) The work of the publishing houses is to be so organized that, besides the contemporary agitational literature, they not only publish the works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, but also strive to achieve for them the very widest distribution.

. . . . . .

The history of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union teaches us that:

"Only a party which has mastered the Marxist-Leninist theory can confidently advance and lead the working class forward."*

Only such a Party will be capable of defending the interests of the proletariat and of the toiling masses, of fusing the forces of the anti-fascist front, of repelling fascism and the fascist incendiaries and of bringing about the overthrow of the hated fascist dictatorship. Only such a Party will be capable of leading the working class in the attack upon capitalism, of standing at the head of the struggle of the toilers for their liberation from capitalist slavery, and leading them, through the achievement and consolidation of the dictatorship of the proletariat, to the gleaming summits of the Communist society.

Signed by the Communist Parties of France, Great Britain, the U.S.A., Germany and Italy.

CP ASKS PEOPLE UNITE FOR KOREA ARMISTICE AND WORLD PEACE

The National Committee of the Communist Party yesterday urged that the people unite to bring about the speedy conclusion of an armistice in Korea and the "peaceful settlement of all other issues." The statement declared that "broadest united front actions, around this demand as well as in the fight against the war-economy measures, and against the fascist trampling of the Bill of Rights, are urgently necessary and possible of realization."

"The fight for peace can be immeasurably strengthened and advanced," the National Committee asserted, "if the American people intervened at this critical stage and make their voices heard in no uncertain terms."

Warning against "further pretexts" by the Truman Administration and the military brass to disrupt ceasefire negotiations, the statement said that "the American people ought to challenge the Truman Administration's propaganda about the 'danger of peace,' which is used to cover up their desire to go full speed ahead with all war preparations, with the consequent militarization and fascization of the country; with the attacks on labor, the Negro people, and the constitutional rights of all Americans; with its continued undermining of the people's standard of living and economic welfare while war profits soar to fantastic heights. The American people do not fear the so-called danger of peace; "they fear only the danger of war and all the consequences of a war economy."

CONSTITUTION OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

* * * * * * * * * *

PREAMBLE

The Communist Party of the United States is the political party of the American working class, basing itself upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism. It champions the immediate and fundamental interests of the workers, farmers and all who labor by hand and brain against capitalist exploitation and oppression. As the advanced party of the working class, it stands in the forefront of this struggle.

The Communist Party upholds the achievements of American democracy and defends the United States Constitution and its Bill of Rights against its reactionary enemies who would destroy democracy and popular liberties. It uncompromisingly fights against imperialism and colonial oppression, against racial, national and religious discrimination, against Jim Crowism, anti-Semitism and all forms of chauvinism.

The Communist Party struggles for the complete destruction of fascism and for a durable peace. It seeks to safeguard the welfare of the people and the nation, recognizing that the working class, through its trade unions and by its independent political action, is the most consistent fighter for democracy, national freedom and social progress.

* * *

The Communist Party holds as a basic principle that there is an identity of interest which serves as a common bond uniting the workers of all lands. It recognizes further that the true national interests of our country and the cause of peace and progress require the solidarity of all freedom-loving peoples and the continued and ever closer cooperation of the United Nations.

The Communist Party recognizes that the final abolition of exploitation and oppression, of economic crises and unemployment, of reaction and war, will be achieved only by the socialist reorganization of society—by the common ownership and operation of the national economy under a government of the people led by the working class.

The Communist Party, therefore, educates the working class, in the course of its day-to-day struggles, for its historic mission, the establishment of Socialism. Socialism, the highest form of democracy, will guarantee the full realization of the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and will turn the achievements of labor, science and culture to the use and enjoyment of all men and women.

* * *

In the struggle for democracy, peace and social progress, the Communist Party carries forward the democratic traditions of Jefferson, Paine, Lincoln and Frederick Douglass, and the great working class traditions of Sylvis, Debs and Ruthenberg. It fights side by side with all who join in this cause.

For the advancement of these principles, the Communist Party of the United States establishes the basic laws of its organization in the following Constitution:

CHAPTER FIVE

THE BOLSHEVIK PARTY DURING THE NEW RISE OF THE WORKING-CLASS MOVEMENT BEFORE THE FIRST IMPERIALIST WAR (1912-1914)

2. The Bolshevik Newspaper "Pravda." The Bolshevik Group in the Fourth State Duma

A powerful instrument used by the Bolshevik Party to strengthen its organization and to spread its influence among the masses was the Bolshevik daily newspaper Pravda (Truth), published in St. Petersburg. It was founded, according to Lenin's instructions, on the initiative of Stalin, Olminsky and Poletayev. Pravda was a mass working-class paper founded simultaneously with the new rise of the revolutionary movement. Its first issue appeared on April 22 (May 5, New Style), 1912. This was a day of real celebration for the workers. In honour of Pravda's appearance it was decided henceforward to celebrate May 5 as workers' press day.

Previous to the appearance of Pravda, the Bolsheviks already had a weekly newspaper called Zvezda, intended for advanced workers. Zvezda played an important part at the time of the Lena events. It printed a number of trenchant political articles by Lenin and Stalin which mobilized the working class for the struggle. But in view of the rising revolutionary tide, a weekly newspaper no longer met the requirements of the Bolshevik Party. A daily mass political newspaper designed for the broadest sections of the workers was needed. Pravda was such a newspaper.

The tsarist government suppressed Pravda eight times in the space of two and a half years; but each time, with the support of the workers, it reappeared under a new but similar name, e.g., Za Pravdu (For Truth), Put Pravdy (Path of Truth), Trudovaya Pravda (Labour Truth).

. . . . . .

What did Pravda write about?

Every issue contained dozens of letters from workers describing their life, the savage exploitation and the various forms of oppression and humiliation they suffered at the hands of the capitalists, their managers and foremen. These were trenchant and telling indictments of capitalist conditions. Pravda often reported cases of suicide of unemployed and starving workers who had lost hope of ever finding jobs again.

Pravda wrote of the needs and demands of the workers of various factories and branches of industry, and told how the workers were fighting for their demands. Almost every issue contained reports of strikes at various factories. In big and protracted strikes, the newspaper helped to organize collections among the workers of other factories and branches of industry for the support of the strikers. Sometimes tens of thousands of rubles were collected for the strike funds, huge sums for those days when the majority of the workers received not more than 70 or 80 kopeks per day. This fostered a spirit of proletarian solidarity among the workers and a consciousness of the unity of interests of all workers.

The workers reacted to every political event, to every victory or defeat, by sending to Pravda letters, greetings, protests, etc. In its articles Pravda dealt with the tasks of the working-class movement from a consistent Bolshevik standpoint. A legally published newspaper could not call openly for the overthrow of tsardom. It had to resort to hints, which, however, the class-conscious workers understood very well, and which they explained to the masses. When, for example, Pravda wrote of the "full and uncurtailed demands of the Year Five," the workers understood that this meant the revolutionary slogans of the Bolsheviks, namely, the overthrow of tsardom, a democratic republic, the confiscation of the landed estates, and an 8-hour day.

Pravda organized the advanced workers on the eve of the elections to the Fourth Duma. It exposed the treacherous position of those who advocated an agreement with the liberal bourgeoisie, the advocates of the "Stolypin Labour Party"—the Mensheviks. Pravda called upon the workers to vote for those who advocated the "full and uncurtailed demands of the Year Five," that is, the Bolsheviks.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Pravda helped to organize the mass actions of the proletariat. At the time of a big lockout in St. Petersburg in the spring of 1914, when it was inexpedient to declare a mass strike, Pravda called upon the workers to resort to other forms of struggle, such as mass meetings in the factories and demonstrations in the streets. This could not be stated openly in the newspaper. But the call was understood by class-conscious workers when they read an article by Lenin bearing the modest title "Forms of the Working-Class Movement" and stating that at the given moment strikes should yield place to a higher form of the working-class movement—which meant a call to organize meetings and demonstrations.

In this way the illegal revolutionary activities of the Bolsheviks were combined with legal forms of agitation and organization of the masses of the workers through Pravda.

Pravda not only wrote of the life of the workers, their strikes and demonstrations, but also regularly described the life of the peasants, the famines from which they suffered, their exploitation by the feudal landlords. It described how as a result of the Stolypin "reform" the kulak farmers robbed the peasants of the best parts of their land. Pravda drew the attention of the class-conscious workers to the widespread and burning discontent in the countryside. It taught the proletariat that the objectives of the Revolution of 1905 had not been attained, and that a new revolution was impending. It taught that in this second revolution the proletariat must act as the real leader and guide of the people, and that in this revolution it would have so powerful an ally as the revolutionary peasantry.

* * * * * * * * * * *

At the time Pravda was founded the illegal Social-Democratic organizations were entirely under the direction of the Bolsheviks. On the other hand, the legal forms of organization, such as the Duma group, the press, the sick benefit societies, the trade unions, had not yet been fully wrested from the Mensheviks. The Bolsheviks had to wage a determined struggle to drive the Liquidators out of the legally existing organizations of the working class. Thanks to Pravda, this fight ended in victory.

Pravda stood in the centre of the struggle for the Party principle, for the building up of a mass working-class revolutionary party. Pravda rallied the legally existing organizations around the illegal centres of the Bolshevik Party and directed the working-class movement towards one definite aim—preparation for revolution.

Pravda had a vast number of worker correspondents. In one year alone it printed over eleven thousand letters from workers. But it was not only by letters that Pravda maintained contact with the working-class masses. Numbers of workers from the factories visited the editorial office every day. In the Pravda editorial office was concentrated a large share of the organizational work of the Party. Here meetings were arranged with representatives from Party nuclei; here reports were received of Party work in the mills and factories; and from here were transmitted the instructions of the St. Petersburg Committee and the Central Committee of the Party.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Bolsheviks at that time were called "Pravdists." A whole generation of the revolutionary proletariat was reared by Pravda, the generation which subsequently made the October Socialist Revolution. Pravda was backed by tens and hundreds of thousands of workers. During the rise of the revolutionary movement (1912-14) the solid foundation was laid of a mass Bolshevik Party, a foundation which no persecution by tsardom could destroy during the imperialist war.

"The Pravda of 1912 was the laying of the corner-stone of the victory of Bolshevism in 1917." (Stalin.)

CHAPTER SIX

THE BOLSHEVIK PARTY IN THE PERIOD OF THE IMPERIALIST WAR. THE SECOND REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA (1914-MARCH 1917)

. . . . . .

3. THEORY AND TACTICS OF THE BOLSHEVIK PARTY ON THE QUESTION OF WAR, PEACE AND REVOLUTION

The Bolsheviks were not mere pacifists who sighed for peace and confined themselves to the propaganda of peace, as the majority of the Left Social-Democrats did. The Bolsheviks advocated an active revolutionary struggle for peace, to the point of overthrowing the rule of the bellicose imperialist bourgeoisie. The Bolsheviks linked up the cause of peace with the cause of the victory of the proletarian revolution, holding that the surest way of ending the war and securing a just peace, a peace without annexations and indemnities, was to overthrow the rule of the imperialist bourgeoisie.

In opposition to the Menshevik and Socialist-Revolutionary renunciation of revolution and their treacherous slogan of preserving "civil peace" in time of war, the Bolsheviks advanced the slogan of "converting the imperialist war into a civil war." This slogan meant that the labouring people, including the armed workers and peasants clad in soldiers' uniform, were to turn their weapons against their own bourgeoisie and overthrow its rule if they wanted to put an end to the war and achieve a just peace.

In opposition to the Menshevik and Socialist-Revolutionary policy of defending the bourgeois fatherland, the Bolsheviks advanced the policy of "the defeat of one's own government in the imperialist war." This meant voting against war credits, forming illegal revolutionary organizations in the armed forces, supporting fraternization among the soldiers at the front, organizing revolutionary actions of the workers and peasants against the war, and turning these actions into an uprising against one's own imperialist government.

The Bolsheviks maintained that the lesser evil for the people would be the military defeat of the tsarist government in the imperialist war, for this would facilitate the victory of the people over tsardom and the success of the struggle of the working class for emancipation from capitalist slavery and imperialist wars. Lenin held that the policy of working for the defeat of one's own imperialist government must be pursued not only by the Russian revolutionaries, but by the revolutionary parties of the working class in all the belligerent countries.

It was not to every kind of war that the Bolsheviks were opposed. They were only opposed to wars of conquest, imperialist wars. The Bolsheviks held that there are two kinds of wars:

a) Just wars, wars that are not wars of conquest but wars of liberation, waged to defend the people from foreign attack and from attempts to enslave them, or to liberate the people from capitalist slavery, or, lastly, to liberate colonies and dependent countries from the yoke of imperialism; and

b) Unjust wars, wars of conquest, waged to conquer and enslave foreign countries and foreign nations.

Wars of the first kind the Bolsheviks supported. As to wars of the second kind, the Bolsheviks maintained that a resolute struggle must be waged against them to the point of revolution and the overthrow of one's own imperialist government.

Of great importance to the working class of the world was Lenin's theoretical work during the war. In the spring of 1916 Lenin wrote a book entitled Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism. In this book he showed that imperialism is the highest stage of capitalism, a stage at which it has already become transformed from "progressive" capitalism to parasite capitalism, decaying capitalism, and that imperialism is moribund capitalism. This, of course, did not mean that capitalism would die away of itself, without a revolution of the proletariat, that it would just rot on the stalk. Lenin always taught that without a revolution of the working class capitalism cannot be overthrown. Therefore, while defining imperialism as moribund capitalism, Lenin at the same time showed that "imperialism is the eve of the social revolution of the proletariat."

Lenin showed that in the era of imperialism the capitalist yoke becomes more and more oppressive, that under imperialism the revolt of the proletariat against the foundations of capitalism grows, and that the elements of a revolutionary outbreak accumulate in capitalist countries.

Lenin showed that in the era of imperialism the revolutionary crisis in the colonial and dependent countries becomes more acute, that the elements of revolt against imperialism, the elements of a war of liberation from imperialism accumulate.

Lenin showed that under imperialism the unevenness of development and the contradictions of capitalism have grown particularly acute, that the struggle for markets and fields for the export of capital, the struggle for colonies, for sources of raw material, makes periodical imperialist wars for the redivision of the world inevitable.

Lenin showed that it is just this unevenness of development of capitalism that gives rise to imperialist wars, which undermine the strength of imperialism and make it possible to break the front of imperialism at its weakest point.

From all this Lenin drew the conclusion that it was quite possible for the proletariat to break the imperialist front in one place or in several places, that the victory of Socialism was possible first in several countries or even in one country, taken singly, that the simultaneous victory of Socialism in all countries was impossible owing to the unevenness of development of capitalism, and that Socialism would be victorious first in one country or in several countries, while the others would remain bourgeois countries for some time longer.

Here is the formulation of this brilliant deduction as given by Lenin in two articles written during the imperialist war:

1) "Uneven economic and political development is an absolute law of capitalism. Hence, the victory of Socialism is possible first in several or even in one capitalist country, taken singly. The victorious proletariat of that country, having expropriated the capitalists and organized its own Socialist production, would stand up against the rest of the world, the capitalist world, attracting to its cause the oppressed classes of other countries: . . ." (From the article, "The United States of Europe Slogan," written in August, 1915.—Lenin, Selected Works, Vol. V, p. 141.)

2) "The development of capitalism proceeds extremely unevenly in the various countries. It cannot be otherwise under the commodity production system. From this it follows irrefutably that Socialism cannot achieve victory simultaneously in all countries. It will achieve victory first in one or several countries, while the others will remain bourgeois or pre-bourgeois for some time. This must not only create friction, but a direct striving on the part of the bourgeoisie of other countries to crush the victorious proletariat of the Socialist country. In such cases a war on our part would be a legitimate and just war. It would be a war for Socialism, for the liberation of other nations from the bourgeoisie." (From the article, "War Program of the Proletarian Revolution," written in the autumn of 1916.—Lenin, Collected Works, Russ. ed., Vol. XIX, p. 325.)

This was a new and complete theory of the Socialist revolution, a theory affirming the possibility of the victory of Socialism in separate countries, and indicating the conditions of this victory and its prospects, theory whose fundamentals were outlined by Lenin as far back as 1905 in his pamphlet, Two Tactics of Social-Democracy in the Democratic Revolution.

This theory fundamentally differed from the view current among the Marxist in the period of pre-imperialist capitalism, when they held that the victory of Socialism in one separate country was impossible, and that it would take place simultaneously in all the civilized countries. On the basis of the facts concerning imperialist capitalism set forth in his remarkable book, Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism, Lenin displaced this view as obsolete and set forth a new theory, from which it follows that the simultaneous victory of Socialism in all countries is impossible, while the victory of Socialism in one capitalist country, taken singly, is possible.

The inestimable importance of Lenin's theory of Socialist revolution lies not only in the fact that it has enriched Marxism with a new theory and has advanced Marxism, but also in the fact that it opens up a revolutionary perspective for the proletarians of separate countries, that it unfetters their initiative in the onslaught of their own, national bourgeoisie, that it teaches them to take advantage of a war situation to organize this onslaught, and that it strengthens their faith in the victory of the proletarian revolution.

Such was the theoretical and tactical stand of the Bolsheviks on the questions of war, peace and revolution.

It was on the basis of this stand that the Bolsheviks carried on their practical work in Russia.

The Bolshevik Party in the Period of Preparation and Realization of the October Socialist Revolution (April 1917-1918)

4. The Bolshevik Party Adopts the Course of Preparing for Armed Uprising. Sixth Party Congress

The congress adopted a resolution on the Youth Leagues, which at that time frequently sprang up spontaneously. As a result of the Party's subsequent efforts it succeeded in definitely securing the adherence of these young organizations which became a reserve of the Party.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Sixth Congress adopted new Party Rules. These rules provided that all Party organizations shall be built on the principle of democratic centralism.

This meant:

1) That all directing bodies of the Party, from top to bottom, shall be elected;

2) That Party bodies shall give periodical accounts of their activities to their respective Party organizations;

3) That there shall be strict Party discipline and the subordination of the minority to the majority;

4) That all decisions of higher bodies shall be absolutely binding on lower bodies and on all Party members.

2. Defeat of Germany in the War. Revolution in Germany. Founding of the Third International. Eighth Party Congress.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The tide of revolution in Europe began to mount. A revolutionary movement started in Austria, and a Soviet Republic arose in Hungary. With the rising tide of the revolution Communist parties came to the surface.

A real basis now existed for a union of the Communist parties, for the formation of the Third, Communist International.

In March 1919, on the initiative of the Bolsheviks, headed by Lenin, the First Congress of the Communist Parties of various countries, held in Moscow, founded the Communist International. Although many of the delegates were prevented by the blockade and imperialist persecution from arriving in Moscow, the most important countries of Europe and America were represented at this First Congress. The work of the congress was guided by Lenin.

Lenin reported on the subject of bourgeois democracy and the dictatorship of the proletariat. He brought out the importance of the Soviet system, showing that it meant genuine democracy for the working people. The congress adopted a manifesto to the proletariat of all countries, calling upon them to wage a determined struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat and for the triumph of Soviets all over the world.

The congress set up an Executive Committee of the Third, Communist International (E.C.C.I.).

Thus was founded an international revolutionary proletarian organization of a new type—the Communist International—the Marxist-Leninist International.

5. The Soviet Union Towards the End of the Restoration Period. The Question of Socialist Construction and the Victory of Socialism in Our Country. Zinoviev-Kamenev "New Opposition." Fourteenth Party Congress. Policy of Socialist Industrialization of the Country

* * * * * * * * * * *

But the Party knew that the problem of the victory of Socialism in one country did not end there. The construction of Socialism in the Soviet Union would be a momentous turning point in the history of mankind, a victory for the working class and peasantry of the U.S.S.R., marking a new epoch in the history of the world. Yet this was an internal affair of the U.S.S.R. and was only a part of the problem of the victory of Socialism. The other part of the problem was its international aspect. In substantiating the thesis that Socialism could be victorious in one country, Comrade Stalin had repeatedly pointed out that the question should be viewed from two aspects, the domestic and the international. As for the domestic aspect of the question, i.e., the class relations within the country, the working class and the peasantry of the U.S.S.R. were fully capable of vanquishing their own bourgeoisie economically and building a complete Socialist society. But there was also the international aspect of the question, namely, the sphere of foreign relations, the sphere of the relations between the Soviet Union and the capitalist countries, between the Soviet people and the international bourgeoisie, which hated the Soviet system and was seeking the chance to start again armed intervention in the Soviet Union, to make new attempts to restore capitalism in the U.S.S.R. And since the U.S.S.R. was as yet the only Socialist country, all the other countries remaining capitalist, the U.S.S.R. continued to be encircled by a capitalist world, which gave rise to the danger of capitalist intervention. Clearly, there would be a danger of capitalist intervention as long as this capitalist encirclement existed. Could the Soviet people by their own efforts destroy this external danger, the danger of capitalist intervention in the U.S.S.R.? No, they could not. They could not, because in order to destroy the danger of capitalist intervention the capitalist encirclement would have to be destroyed; and the capitalist encirclement could be destroyed only as a result of victorious proletarian revolutions in at least several countries. It followed from this that the victory of Socialism in the U.S.S.R., as expressed in the abolition of the capitalist economic system and the building of a Socialist economic system, could not be considered a final victory, inasmuch as the danger of foreign armed intervention and of attempts to restore capitalism had not been eliminated, and inasmuch as the Socialist country had no guarantee against this danger. To destroy the danger of foreign capitalist intervention, the capitalist encirclement would have to be destroyed.

Of course, as long as the Soviet Government pursued a correct policy, the Soviet people and their Red Army would be able to beat off a new foreign capitalist intervention just as they had beaten off the first capitalist intervention of 1918-20. But this would not mean that the danger of new capitalist intervention would be eliminated. The defeat of the first intervention did not destroy the danger of new intervention, inasmuch as the source of the danger of intervention—the capitalist encirclement—continued to exist. Neither would the danger of intervention be destroyed by the defeat of the new intervention if the capitalist encirclement continued to exist.

It followed from this that the victory of the proletarian revolution in the capitalist countries was a matter of vital concern to the working people of the U.S.S.R.

Chapter Eleven

The Bolshevik Party in the Struggle for the Collectivization of Agriculture (1930-1934)

1. International Situation in 1930-34. Economic Crisis in the Capitalist Countries. Japanese Annexation of Manchuria. Fascists' Advent to Power in Germany. Two Seats of War

* * * * * * * * * * *

The world economic crisis further aggravated the contradictions between the imperialist states, between the victor countries and the vanquished countries, between the imperialist states and the colonial and dependent countries, between the workers and the capitalists, between the peasants and the landlords.

In his report on behalf of the Central Committee to the Sixteenth Party Congress, Comrade Stalin pointed out that the bourgeoisie would seek a way out of the economic crisis, on the one hand, by crushing the working class through the establishment of fascist dictatorship, i.e., the dictatorship of the most reactionary, most chauvinistic, most imperialistic capitalist elements, and, on the other hand, by fomenting war for the redivision of colonies and spheres of influence at the expense of the poorly defended countries.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Chapter Twelve

The Bolshevik Party in the Struggle to Complete the Building of the Socialist Society. Introduction of the New Constitution (1935-1937)

1. Internatonal Situation in 1935-37. Temporary Mitigation of the Economic Crisis. Beginning of a New Economic Crisis. Seizure of Ethiopia by Italy. German and Italian Intervention in Spain. Japanese Invasion of Central China. Beginning of Second Imperialist War.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

This war, it will be seen, is of a rather strange and one-sided character. But that does not prevent it from being a brutal war of unmitigated conquest waged at the expense of the poorly defended peoples of Ethiopia, Spain and China.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

Clearly, the U.S.S.R. could not shut its eyes to such a turn in the international situation and ignore the ominous events. Any war, however small, started by the aggressors, constitutes a menace to the peaceable countries. The second imperialist war, which has so "imperceptibly" stolen upon the nations and has involved over five hundred million people, is bound all the more to represent a most serious danger to all nations, and to the U.S.S.R. in the first place. This is eloquently borne out by the formation of the "Anti-Communist Bloc" by Germany, Italy and Japan. Therefore, our country, while pursuing its policy of peace, set to work to further strengthen its frontier defences and the fighting efficiency of its Red Army and Navy. Towards the end of 1934 the U.S.S.R. joined the League of Nations. It did so in the knowledge that the League, in spite of its weakness, might nevertheless serve as a place where aggressors can be exposed, and as a certain instrument of peace, however feeble, that might hinder the outbreak of war. The Soviet Union considered that in times like these even so weak an international organization as the League of Nations should not be ignored. In May 1935 a treaty of mutual assistance against possible attack by aggressors was signed between France and the U.S.S.R. A similar treaty was simultaneously concluded between the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia. In March 1936 the U.S.S.R. signed a treaty of mutual assistance with the Mongolian People's Republic, and in August 1937 a pact of non-aggression with the Republic of China.

. . . . . .

Conclusion

. . . . . .

2) The history of the Party further teaches us that a party of the working class cannot perform the role of leader of its class, cannot perform the role of organizer and leader of the proletarian revolution, unless it has mastered the advanced theory of the working-class movement, the Marxist-Leninist theory.

The power of the Marxist-Leninist theory lies in the fact that it enables the Party to find the right orientation in any situation, to understand the inner connection of current events, to foresee their course and to perceive not only how and in what direction they are developing in the present, but how and in what direction they are bound to develop in the future.

Only a party which has mastered the Marxist-Leninist theory can confidently advance and lead the working class forward.

On the other hand, a party which has not mastered the Marxist-Leninist theory is compelled to grope its way, loses confidence in its actions and is unable to lead the working class forward.

It may seem that all that is required for mastering the Marxist-Leninist theory is diligently to learn by heart isolated conclusions and propositions from the works of Marx, Engels and Lenin, learn to quote them at opportune times and rest at that, in the hope that the conclusions and propositions thus memorized will suit each and every situation and occasion. But such an approach to the Marxist-Leninist theory is altogether wrong. The Marxist-Leninist theory must not be regardod as a collection of dogmas, as a catechism, as a symbol of faith, and the Marxists themselves as pedants and dogmatists. The Marxist-Leninst theory is the science of the development of society, the science of the working-class movement, the science of the proletarian revolution, the science of the building of the Communist society. And as a science it does not and cannot stand still, but develops and perfects itself. Clearly, in its development it is bound to become enriched by new experience and new knowledge, and some of its propositions and conclusions are bound to change in the course of time, are bound to be replaced by new conclusions and propositions corresponding to the new historical conditions.

Mastering the Marxist-Leninist theory does not at all mean learning all its formulas and conclusions by heart and clinging to their every letter. To master the Marxist-Leninist theory we must first of all learn to distinguish between its letter and substance.

Mastering the Marxist-Leninist theory means assimilating the substance of this theory and learning to use it in the solution of the practical problems of the revolutionary movement under the varying conditions of the class struggle of the proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Marxist-Leninist theory is not a dogma but a guide to action.

* * * * * * * * * * *

However, the Russian Revolution of 1905, and especially the Revolution of February 1917, advanced a new form of political organization of society—the Soviets of Workers' and Peasants' Deputies. As a result of a study of the experience of the two Russian revolutions, Lenin, on the basis of the theory of Marxism, arrived at the conclusion that the best political form for the dictatorship of the proletariat was not a parliamentary democratic republic, but a republic of Soviets. Proceeding from this, Lenin, in April 1917, during the period of transition from the bourgeois to the Socialist revolution, issued the slogan of a republic of Soviets as the best political form for the dictatorship of the proletariat. The opportunists of all countries clung to the parliamentary republic and accused Lenin of departing from Marxism and destroying democracy. But it was Lenin, of course, who was the real Marxist who had mastered the theory of Marxism, and not the opportunists, for Lenin was advancing the Marxist theory by enriching it with new experience, whereas the opportunists were dragging it back and transforming one of its propositions into a dogma.

What would have happened to the Party, to our revolution, to Marxism, if Lenin had been overawed by the letter of Marxism and had not had the courage to replace one of the old propositions of Marxism, formulated by Engels, by the new proposition regarding the republic of Soviets, a proposition that corresponded to the new historical conditions? The Party would have groped in the dark, the Soviets would have been disorganized, we should not have had a Soviet power, and the Marxist theory would have suffered a severe setback. The proletariat would have lost, and the enemies of the proletariat would have won.

. . . . . .

It may be said without fear of exaggeration that since the death of Engels the master theoretician Lenin, and after Lenin, Stalin and the other disciples of Lenin, have been the only Marxists who have advanced the Marxist theory and who have enriched it with new experience in the new conditions of the class struggle of the proletariat.

And just because Lenin and the Leninists have advanced the Marxist theory, Leninism is [illegible] development of Marxism; it is Marxism in the new conditions of the class struggle of the proletariat, Marxism of the epoch of imperialism and proletarian revolutions, Marxism of the epoch of the victory of Socialism on one-sixth of the earth's surface.

The Bolshevik Party could not have won in October 1917 if its foremost men had not mastered the theory of Marxism, if they had not learned to regard his theory as a guide to action, if they had not learned to advance the Marxist theory by enriching it with the new experience of the class struggle of the proletariat.

. . . . . .

3) The history of the Party further teaches us that unless the petty-bourgeois parties which are active within the ranks of the working class and which push the backward sections of the working class into the arms of the bourgeoisie, thus splitting the unity of the working class, are smashed, the victory of the proletarian revolution is impossible.

. . . . . .

4) The history of the Party further teaches us that unless the Party of the working class wages an uncompromising struggle against the opportunists within its own ranks, unless it smashes the capitulators in its own midst, it cannot preserve unity and discipline within its ranks, it cannot perform its role of organizer and leader of the proletarian revolution, nor its role as the builder of the new, Socialist society.

U. S. COMMUNISTS WILL OPPOSE WALL ST. WAR, SAY FOSTER, DENNIS

William Z. Foster and Eugene Dennis, chairman and general secretary of the Communist Party, yesterday declared that, in the event Wall Street succeeded in starting a new world war, despite the efforts of peace forces to prevent it, American Communists would oppose such "an unjust, aggressive, imperialist war" and would work "with all democratic forces" to bring that war to an end.

Their statement came after requests by newspapers that they comment on the recent statements of Maurice Thorez of France and Palmiro Togliatti of Italy in respect to war and peace in Europe. Foster and Dennis hailed the Thorez and Togliatti statements, saying they "emphatically serve the cause of peace."

Six questions seeking elaboration on the statement were sent in by reporters to Dennis, who was engaged in a conference concerning the trial of the Communist Party leaders set to open next Monday. Dennis replied that he would seek to answer the questions in the course of the trial.

A seventh question, whether the Foster-Dennis statement came in response to "orders from Moscow," was termed "nonsense" by a spokesman for the Party. Text of the Foster-Dennis statement follows:

"The Thorez and Togliatti statements emphatically serve the cause of universal peace.

"Only those who plot a third world war and seek to embroil France and Italy in aggressive military operations against our great ally of World War II, the Soviet Union, could read anything un-French or un-Italian in these statements.

"French and Italian sovereignty and independence are threatened today solely by Wall Street's schemes of world domination as expressed in the Marshall Plan and the proposed Atlantic war alliance. It is our military and those of the British who have established a General Headquarters at Fontainbleau. Not Russian but Americans have military bases and are intervening in the internal affairs of Greece, Turkey, Iran, China, Canada, Greenland, Brazil, as well as France and Italy.

"On Feb. 27 the 'New York Times' editorially termed the danger of an invasion of our shores wildly improbable. What the 'Times' failed to say, however, was that the threat of aggression against other nations is not wildly improbable—and that this threat emanates precisely from Wall Street and its cartel-connected trusts. It is this which explains the colossal peace-time military budget, the effort to stampede the nation into the Atlantic war alliance and plunge America and the world into an atomic war.

OPPOSE NEW WAR

"We Communists join with millions of other patriotic Americans in opposing those who seek a new world war. We strive for peace and friendship between the U. S. A., the USSR, the new democracies, the colonial and all other peoples. We do not regard a new world holocaust as inevitable. We hold the peaceful co-existence of two different social systems wholly possible. We believe that efforts of the peoples to achieve peace can check the war-makers and create new opportunities to achieve peace. The peace camp is infinitely stronger than the war camp.

"It is this which makes the war camp so reckless and ruthless. An atmosphere is rapidly being created in our nation that to work for peace and American-Soviet amity is considered equivalent to treason. The trial of the Communist leaders, the current witch-hunts and other attacks on civil liberties are indicative of today's political climate.

"If, despite the efforts of the peace forces of America and the world, Wall Street should succeed in plunging the world into war, we would oppose it as an unjust, aggressive, imperialist war, as an undemocratic and an anti-Socialist war, destructive of the deepest interests of the American people and all humanity. Even as Lincoln while a Congressman opposed the unjust, annexationist Mexican War and demanded its termination, so would we Communists cooperate with all democratic forces to defeat the predatory war aims of American imperialism and bring such a war to a speedy conclusion on the basis of a democratic peace.

"American security and American peace lie in world security and world peace—not in any Wall Street-Ueber-Alles policy decked out in the trappings of 'the American century.'

"For our part we will work with all those who seek peace, democracy and social progress. The American people, assuming their historic responsibility, must reject the war policies of the Wall Street-Churchill cartelists and their bipartisan puppets and return our nation to the peace policies of Franklin D. Roosevelt; the 'Grand Design' and cornerstone of which is firm American-Soviet friendship."

FRANKFELD ANSWERS SUNPAPER

Baltimore.—Philip Frankfeld, chairman of the Communist Party of Maryland and the District of Columbia announced that Communist Party members in this country would oppose Wall Street's plans to embroil this country in any war of aggression and would "co-operate with all democratic forces to defeat the predatory war aims of American imperialism and bring such a war to a speedy conclusion on the basis of a democratic peace."

This declaration was a response to a query by the Baltimore Sun on a statement made by William Z. Foster and Eugene Dennis.

"I believe the statement in its entirety represents a patriotic contribution in the struggle for peace which is for the general welfare of all Americans," Frankfeld declared.

COMMUNIST PARTY OF FRANCE LEADS STRUGGLE OF MASSES FOR PEACE

(PLENUM CENTRAL COMMITTEE, COMMUNIST PARTY, FRANCE)

A Plenum of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of France was held in Paris on February 22 and 23. Jacques Duclos, Secretary of the Central Committee, reported on the political line of the Party and on the cantonal elections.

In his report Comrade Duclos thoroughly analysed the international situation and said that the forthcoming cantonal elections should be fought under the slogan of the struggle for peace and against the instigators of a new war.

The same day, Maurice Thorez, General Secretary of the Party addressed the Plenum, reports "l'Humanite". He made the following statement:—

Hoping to confuse us, the enemies of the people put the question: "What would you do if the Red Army occupied Paris?"

Here is our answer:

1. The Soviet Union has never been and can never be an aggressor against any country. The land of Socialism, by its very essence, cannot pursue the policy of aggression and war characteristic of the imperialist powers. The Soviet Army, the army of the heroic defenders of Stalingrad, has never attacked another nation. It has fulfilled its glorious mission of liberator of the peoples from Hitler Germany and has won the heartfelt gratitude of those peoples.

2. We base our stand on facts, not on suppositions. Today the facts are these: the French Government is cooperating actively in the aggressive policy of the Anglo-American imperialists; a foreign general staff has been set up at Fontainbleau; our country and its over-seas territories have been turned into bases of aggression against the Soviet Union and the people's democracies.

3. Since this question has been raised, we shall answer firmly: should the joint efforts of all French lovers of freedom and peace fail to bring our country back to the camp of democracy and peace; if, as a result, our people are involved against their will in a war against the Soviet Union; if under such conditions the Soviet Army—defending the cause of the peoples, the cause of Socialism—in its battle against the aggressor were forced to enter our territory, could the working people and the entire people of France conduct themselves any differently in relation to the Soviet Army than the working people and the peoples of Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia had done?

* * * * * * * * *

We are faithful to the genuine traditions of Socialism, the traditions of the international working class movement. Illustrating this statement, Thorez quoted from the resolutions adopted at national and international Socialist congresses. At the Fourth Congress of the French Socialist Party held in Nancy in 1907 a resolution was adopted which called on the proletariat to prepare and organise united action to set in motion all the forces of the working class and the Socialist Party in each country, according to the circumstances, in order to fight the danger of war in every possible way, in Parliament, by public agitation, popular demonstrations, a general strike and insurrection.

The people who asked these questions would like to insult and slander us. Now they are screaming for repression. But what hypocrisy there is in their venomous outbursts and how many admissions. We affirm that because of its very nature, the land of Socialism can never wage an aggressive war.

COMMUNIST PARTIES AND WORKING PEOPLE OF ALL COUNTRIES RAISE BANNER OF STRUGGLE IN DEFENCE OF PEACE AND ACTIVELY OPPOSE THE WARMONGERS—THE ANGLO-AMERICAN AGGRESSORS

The statement made by Maurice Thorez, General Secretary of the Communist Party of France, about the attitude of the working class and working people of France in the event of aggression against the Soviet Union and the New Democracies has been echoed by the Communist Parties and working people of the capitalist countries. Millions have voiced their determination to frustrate the plans of the Anglo-American warmongers and to defend the bulwark of peace—the Soviet Union and the countries of People's Democracy.

Below we publish excerpts from the statements made by the leaders of the Communist and Workers' Parties of Italy, Great Britain, Norway, Denmark, Mexico, Canada, Finland, Argentina, Australia and Columbia. Similar statements were made by the Communist Parties of the United States, Austria, Japan, Cuba, Uruguay and other countries.

Curb the Aggressor and Defend the Peace

Replying to questions put by a correspondent of the "Giornala della Sera", Palmiro Togliatti, General Secretary of the Communist Party of Italy stated:

"There are no grounds whatsoever for assuming that the Soviet Union entertains even the slightest intention of attacking any country or that the Soviet Union has taken action, or intends to take action, that runs counter to the national interests of Italy. On the contrary, it was the Soviet Union which delivered the decisive blows that brought about the defeat of fascism.

"Consequently, I consider it absurd to discuss the hypothesis of war arising between the Soviet Union and Italy. If there is anybody who advances such a hypothesis it merely means that he is of the opinion that Italy should wage war against the Soviet Union for the very same reasons that the American multimillionaires would like to wage war against the Soviet Union, precisely because the U.S.S.R. is not a capitalist state, but a socialist state of working people.

"It is quite clear that this is not the hypothesis of a national war but the typical line of a class and ideological war by reactionaries and capitalists against social progress and against the working people.

It is also quite clear what would be the position in this event of those who stand for social progress and Socialism and against reaction.

"As for the hypothesis about pursuit of an aggressor by the Soviet Army on our territory, in this event I think it would be the direct duty of the Italian people, who cannot but condemn any and every aggression, to render the Soviet Army the most effective aid and to teach the aggressor the lesson he deserves to be taught. To announce immediately to the whole world that the Italian people—at any rate the overwhelming majority of the active and militant sections—view the matter in just this way means, unquestionably, to contribute to curbing the aggressor and preserving the peace."

The Working Class Will Resist

In a recent statement Comrade Sharkey, General Secretary of the Australian Communist Party, declared:

I support the declaration of Maurice Thorez, leader of the French Communist Party. The task of Communists is to fight to prevent war and to educate the mass of the people in the spirit of struggle against war ideology. But if the fascists in Australia resort to force to prevent the workers achieving this aim, the Communists will tell the workers to meet force with force.

To Combat the Aggressor in Every Way and to the Bitter End

A resolution passed by the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Belgium states:

If the servants of American imperialism ruling our country succeeded in drawing Belgium into an aggressive war against the Soviet Union, the Communists and the vast majority of the Belgian workers, would refuse to share such shame. They would fight in every way and to the bitter end against those who will expose themselves as the worst enemies of the Belgian people and of mankind.

Call For Anti-Imperialist Front in Western Hemisphere

At its recent meeting, the Executive Committee of the Communist Party of Argentina declared that the Party would do everything to secure the victory of the Soviet Union if a third world war should break out. The Party called for an anti-imperialist front in the Western hemisphere. It also called on all citizens of Argentina to support the Congress for Peace and Democracy which will be an important step toward forming an anti-imperialist front.

The Working Class—Organiser of the Struggle for Peace

Addressing a recent meeting in Oslo dedicated to the cause of peace and to the memory of members of the Communist Party of Norway who gave their lives for the liberation of the country, Emil Levlien, Chairman of the Communist Party, said:

"The decisive national and socialist task of the people of Norway today is to refuse to join the Atlantic Pact. It is to be feared that new aggressors will continue their economic and political occupation of our country, and that they will intensify their military plans for turning Norway into a bridgehead in preparation for their criminal aggressive war against the land of Socialism. Only a people's movement, embracing the entire country can put a stop to this harmful policy and prevent our country from being handed over to the war politicians.

"To actively resist the war policy we must form a broad united front of Norwegian people like that created during the liberation war against fascism. We must consolidate and activise the forces of peace.

"We must raise the working class to the level where it will fight for peace instead of being dragged into a criminal war policy. If we prosecute this work with vigour and singleness of purpose, we shall be fighting for those aims for which our comrades fought and died, we shall be acting in their spirit."

FORM A BROAD FRONT OF PEACE SUPPORTERS

In his report to the recent Extended Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Communist Party of Britain, Harry Pollitt, General Secretary of the Party, stated:

Pressure must be directed to the reduction of Britain's armed forces to their former level and to end our present overseas military commitments, with the removal of British troops from Malaya, the Middle East, Greece and other areas where their presence aroused the indignation of the people against whom they have been sent.

Pressure must be equally forceful for the withdrawal of all American military forces and aircraft from Britain and the refusal to provide military bases.

The struggle for peace cannot be separated from the need to reduce the armed forces and armaments and to outlaw the atom bomb.

Moreover, it is quite clear against what countries these bellicose preparations are directed. Unquestionably, the U.S.S.R., which is not interested in war, in imperialist markets, or spheres of investments and exploitation, is a more natural ally of the British working-class movement than the aggressive imperialists of the United States.

An alliance between Britain and the Soviet Union would quite definitely make war impossible.

Pollitt stated that it was necessary to organise a broad front of peace supporters: We are so much more numerous and much stronger than the warmongers.

In another statement Pollitt declared:

If we are asked what we will do in the event of an imperialist aggressive war against the U.S.S.R., we will reply in the same way as Ernest Bevin in 1920: organise strikes and councils of action to prevent that war from being carried through.

Canadian Workers Are Against War

In the opinion of the Labour Progressive Party of Canada the country is not threatened with a hostile invasion, neither is there any sign of such a danger.

The Labour Progressive Party opposes and will oppose the Government proposal which, before the event, binds Canada to take part in the war the American imperialists want to start. We are fighting to prevent Canada from being drawn into war. That is why we are against Canada signing the North Atlantic military pact. That is why we insist that all United States troops must be withdrawn from Canada.

The Labour Progressive Party opposes the attempts of the imperialists to smash Socialism by war.

Peace Forces are Strong Enough to Avert War

Addressing a gathering of several thousand people held to protest against Denmark joining the North Atlantic Pact, Axel Larsen, Chairman of the Communist Party of Denmark, said:

"There is a real danger of war at present. Our peace and national independence are likewise menaced. But the danger threatens from the West, not the East. Denmark's adherence to the North Atlantic bloc would enhance the danger of war for our country and our people.

"Should war break out we shall rally the people to fight against the aggressor, irrespective of whether it will be one country, or a coalition such as the North Atlantic bloc, we shall fight together with all who will resist the aggressor."

Remove the Danger of Imperialist Aggression

Dionisio Ensina, General Secretary of the Mexican Communist Party, commenting on the Thorez and Togliatti declarations said that a common front would be formed in Mexico in the near future, uniting all elements who are determined to oppose any imperialist war which the United States or Britain may unleash against the U.S.S.R.

Statement of Columbia Communists

The Communist Party of Columbia declares that in the event of war "we, Communists, will stand at the side of the armies fighting against our mortal enemy—American imperialism."

2: Capitalist Encirclement

What are these facts which our Party comrades forgot, or which they simply did not notice?

They forgot that Soviet power has conquered only one-sixth of the world, that five-sixths of the world is in possession of capitalist powers. They forgot that the Soviet Union is in the conditions of capitalist encirclement. It is an accepted thing to talk loosely about capitalist encirclement, but people do not want to ponder upon what sort of thing this capitalist encirclement is.

Capitalist encirclement—that is no empty phrase; that is a very real and unpleasant feature. Capitalist encirclement means that here is one country, the Soviet Union, which has established the socialist order on its own territory and besides this there are many countries, bourgeois countries, which continue to carry on a capitalist mode of life and which surround the Soviet Union, waiting for an opportunity to attack it, break it, or at any rate to undermine its power and weaken it.

Our comrades forgot this fundamental fact. But it is that precisely, which determines the basis of relations between the capitalist encirclement and the Soviet Union.

. . . . . .

4. It should be remembered and never forgotten that as long as capitalist encirclement exists there will be wreckers, diversions, spies, terrorists, sent behind the frontiers of the Soviet Union by the intelligence services of foreign states; this should be remembered and a struggle should be carried on against those comrades who underestimate the significance of the fact of capitalist encirclement, who underestimate the strength and significance of wrecking.

It should be explained to our Party comrades that no economic successes whatsoever, no matter how great they are, can annul the fact of capitalist encirclement and the results arising therefrom.

On the contrary, the further forward we advance, the greater the successes we achieve, the greater will be the fury of the remnants of the broken exploiting classes, the sooner will they resort to sharper forms of struggle, the more will they seek to harm the Soviet state and the more will they clutch at the most desperate means of struggle, as the last resort of doomed people.

It should be borne in mind that the remnants of the broken classes in the U.S.S.R. are not alone. They have the direct support of our enemies beyond the bounds of the U.S.S.R. It would be a mistake to think that the sphere of the class struggle is limited to the bounds of the U.S.S.R. While one end of the class struggle has its operation within the bounds of the U.S.S.R., its other stretches to the bounds of the bourgeois states surrounding us. The remnants of the broken classes cannot but be aware of this. And precisely because they are, they will continue their desperate assaults in the future.

This is what history teaches us. This is what Leninism teaches us.

5 SESSION INTRODUCTORY COURSE ON PRINCIPLES OF COMMUNISM

Draft Outline

1. Purpose of the introductory class.

* * * * * * * * * * *

As an introductory course, these sessions can only highlight some aspects of Marxist theory. They do not, for example, treat separately such basic questions as the role of the state, the national question, the nature of fascism, etc., but refer to them under general topics. Thus the role of the state will enter into all sessions; the national question and specifically the position of the Negro people in the United States is dealt with in all of the last 4 sessions; the struggle against revisionism and Social Democracy in Sessions 3 and 5.

STRATEGY AND TACTICS OF THE PROLETARIAN REVOLUTION

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS

I. FORMULATION OF THE QUESTION OF STRATEGY AND TACTICS IN LENINISM

1. BOLSHEVIK STRATEGY AND TACTICS AS A SCIENCE OF LEADERSHIP OF THE CLASS STRUGGLE OF THE PROLETARIAT

The period of the domination of the Second International was mainly the period of the formation and instruction of the proletarian armies in an environment of more or less peaceful development. This was the period when parliamentarism was the outstanding form of class struggle. Questions of great class conflicts, of preparing the proletariat for revolutionary combats, of the ways and means leading to the conquest of the dictatorship of the proletariat, did not seem to be on the order of the day at that time. The task reduced itself to utilizing all paths of legal development for the formation and instruction of the armies of proletarians; for the utilization of parliamentarism in conformity with the conditions under which the proletariat was (and as it seemed then, was destined to remain) in the opposition. It need hardly be pointed out that during such a period and with such a conception of the tasks of the proletariat, there could be neither complete strategy nor any elaborated tactics. There were fragmentary and detached ideas about tactics and strategy, but no tactics or strategy as such.

The mortal sin of the Second International was not that it adopted the tactic of utilizing the parliamentary forms of struggle, but that it overestimated the importance of these forms, that it considered them to be virtually the only forms; and when the period of open revolutionary combats arrived and the question of extra-parliamentary forms of struggle came to the fore, the parties of the Second International turned their backs on these new tasks and refused to shoulder them.

Only in the subsequent period, the period of direct action by the proletariat, in the period of proletarian revolution, when the question of the overthrow of the bourgeoisie became a question of immediate practice, when the question of the reserves of the proletariat (strategy) became one of the most burning questions, when all forms of struggle and of organization, parliamentary and extra-parliamentary (tactics), assumed definite shape—only in this period could a complete strategy and detailed tactics for the struggle of the proletariat be elaborated. It was precisely in that period that Lenin dragged into the light of day the brilliant ideas of Marx and Engels on tactics and strategy, that had been immured by the opportunists of the Second International. But Lenin did not rest content with restoring certain tactical theses of Marx and Engels. He developed them further and supplemented them with new ideas and new theses, correlating them all in a system of rules and guiding principles for the leadership of the class struggle of the proletariat. Lenin's pamphlets, such as What Is to Be Done?; Two Tactics; Imperialism; State and Revolution; The Proletarian Revolution and Renegade Kautsky; "Left-Wing" Communism, etc., will doubtless be treasured as priceless contributions to the general store of Marxism and to its revolutionary arsenal. The strategy and tactics of Leninism constitute the science of leadership of the revolutionary struggle of the proletariat.

3. Leadership in a Situation and Consideration for Its Peculiarities—the Main Characteristic of Leninist Strategy and Tactics

". . . while the working class movement is everywhere passing through what is practically a similar preparatory school for victory over the bourgeoisie, it is in each country achieving this development in its own way. The big, advanced capitalist countries are marching along this road much more rapidly than did Bolshevism, which history granted a period of fifteen years to prepare itself for victory as an organized political trend. The Third International has already scored a decisive victory in the short space of one year; it has defeated the yellow, social-chauvinist Second International, which only a few months ago was incomparably stronger than the Third International, and which seemed to be firm and strong, enjoying the all-round support—direct and indirect, material (ministerial posts, passports, the press) and ideological—of the world bourgeoisie.

The main thing now is that the Communists of every country should quite consciously take into account the fundamental tasks of the struggle against opportunism and "Left" doctrinairism as well as the concrete peculiar features which this struggle assumes and inevitably must assume in each separate country in accordance with the peculiar features of its economics, politics, culture, national composition (Ireland, etc.), its colonies, religious divisions, etc.

As long as national and state differences exist among peoples and countries—and these differences will continue to exist for a very long time, even after the dictatorship of the proletariat has been established on a world scale—the unity of international tactics of the communist working class movement of all countries demands, not the elimination of variety, not the abolition of national differences (this is a foolish dream at the present moment), but such an application of the fundamental principles of Communism (Soviet power and the dictatorship of the proletariat) as will correctly modify these principles in certain particulars, will properly adapt, apply them to the national and national-state differences. To investigate, study, seek out, divine, grasp that which is specifically national in the concrete manner in which each country approaches the fulfillment of the single international task, the victory over opportunism and "Left" doctrinairism in the working class movement, the overthrow of the bourgeoisie, the establishment of a Soviet republic and a proletarian dictatorship—this is the main task of the historical period through which all the advanced (and not only the advanced) countries are now passing. The main thing—not everything, by a long way—but the main thing has already been achieved, in that the vanguard of the working class has been won over, in that it has gone over to the side of the Soviet power against parliamentarism, to the side of the dictatorship of the proletariat against bourgeois democracy. Now all efforts, all attention, must be concentrated on the next step—which means, and from a certain standpoint really is, less fundamental, but which in fact is much closer to the practical carrying out of the task—namely, on seeking out the forms of transition or approach to the proletarian revolution.

. . . History generally, and the history of revolutions in particular, is always richer in content, more varied, more many-sided, more lively and "subtle" than the best parties and the most class conscious vanguards of the most advanced class imagine. This is understandable, because the best vanguards express the class consciousness, the will, the passion, the phantasy of tens of thousands, while the revolution is made, at the moment of its climax and the exertion of all human capabilities, by the class consciousness, the will, the passion, and the phantasy of tens of millions who are urged on by the very acutest class struggle. From this follow two very important practical conclusions: first, that the revolutionary class, in order to fulfill its task, must be able to master all forms or sides of social activity without exception (and complete after the capture of political power, sometimes at great risk and amidst very great dangers, what it did not complete before the capture of power); second, that the revolutionary class must be ready to pass from one form to another in the quickest and most unexpected manner.

V. I. Lenin, "Left-Wing" Communism: An Infantile Disorder, pp. 71-72; 75.

4. International Significance of Bolshevik Strategy and Tactics

The Bolshevik's tactics were correct; they were the only internationalist tactics, because they were based, not on the cowardly fear of a world revolution, not on a philistine "disbelief" in it, not on the narrow nationalist desire to protect "one's own" fatherland (the fatherland of one's bourgeoisie), and not "care a hang" for all the rest; they were based on a correct (and universally admitted, before the war and before the renegacy of the social-chauvinists and social-pacifists) estimation of the revolutionary situation in Europe. These tactics were the only internationalist tactics, because they did the utmost possible in one country for the development, support and stirring up of the revolution in all countries. The correctness of these tactics has been confirmed by the enormous success that has been achieved, because Bolshevism (owing, not to the merits of the Russian Bolsheviks, but to the most profound sympathy the masses everywhere displayed for tactics that are revolutionary in practice) has become world-Bolshevism, it has produced an idea, a theory, a program, and tactics, which differ concretely and in practice from those of social-chauvinism and social-pacifism. Bolshevism has vanquished the old, decayed International of the Scheidemanns and Kautskys, the Renaudels and Longuets, the Hendersons and the MacDonalds, who, henceforth, will be treading on each other's heels, dreaming about "unity" and trying to revive a corpse. Bolshevism created the ideological and tactical foundations of a Third International, a really proletarian and Communist International, which will take into consideration both the gains of the peaceful epoch and the experience of the epoch of revolution, which has now begun.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Bolshevism has helped in a practical way to develop the proletarian revolution in Europe and America more powerfully than any party in any other country has ever succeeded in doing.

. . . . . .

Not only the European, but the world proletarian revolution is maturing before the eyes of all, and it has been assisted, has been accelerated, has been supported, by the victory of the proletariat in Russia. Is all this enough for the complete victory of socialism? Certainly not. One country cannot do more. But thanks to the Soviet government, this one country has nevertheless done so much that even if the Russian Soviet government is crushed by world imperialism tomorrow, as a result of an agreement between German and Anglo-French imperialism, for example—even in this worst possible case, Bolshevik tactics will still have brought enormous benefit to Socialism; and will have assisted the growth of the invincible world revolution.

V. I. Lenin, The Proletarian Revolution and Renegade Kautsky, pp. 71-73.

5. Dependence of Strategy on the Party Program

A. Two Aspects of the Working Class Movement

Political strategy, like tactics, is concerned with the working class movement. But the working class movement itself consists of two elements: the objective, or spontaneous element and the subjective, or conscious element. The objective, or spontaneous element is made up of the group of processes that take place irrespective of the consciousness and regulating will of the proletariat. The economic development of the country, the development of capitalism, the disintegration of the old government, the spontaneous movements of the proletariat and the classes surrounding it, the collision of classes, and so forth—all these are phenomena, the development of which proceeds irrespective of the will of the proletariat. This is the objective aspect of the movement. Strategy is not concerned with these processes, because, it can neither stop them nor modify them; all that it can do is to reckon with them and to base itself on them. This is a field to be dealt with by the theory of Marxism and the program of Marxism.

But the movement has also a subjective, a conscious side. The subjective side of the movement consists in the reflection in the minds of the workers of the spontaneous processes of the movement; it is the conscious and deliberate movement of the proletariat towards a definite goal. This aspect of the movement interests us because, as distinct from the objective aspect of the movement, it is entirely subject to the directing influence of strategy and tactics. While strategy is unable to produce any change in the operation of the objective processes of the movement, here, on the other hand, in the subjective sphere, in relation to the conscious aspect of the movement, the field of application of strategy is broad and varied, because strategy can accelerate or retard the movement, direct it along the shortest path or divert it into a more difficult and painful path, depending on the perfections or shortcomings of strategy itself.

Accelerating or retarding the movement, facilitating or hindering it, such is the field and the limits within which political strategy and tactics can be applied.

B. The Theory and Program of Marxism

Strategy is not concerned with the actual study of the objective processes of the movement. Nevertheless, it must know them and take due account of them if gross and fatal errors are not to be committed in the leadership of the movement. It is the theory of Marxism primarily and also the program of Marxism that are concerned with the study of the objective processes of the movement. Strategy, therefore, must base itself entirely on the data provided by the theory and program of Marxism.

From a study of the objective processes of capitalism in their development and decline, the theory of Marxism arrives at the conclusion that the fall of the bourgeoisie and the seizure of power by the proletariat, and the replacement of capitalism by socialism, are inevitable. Proletarian strategy may be considered truly Marxist only when it makes this fundamental conclusion of the theory of Marxism the basis of its operations.

1. Strategy

A. Strategy in the Various Stages of the Revolution

Strategy is the determination of the direction of the main blow of the proletariat at a given stage of the revolution; the elaboration of a corresponding plan of disposition of the revolutionary forces (the main and secondary reserves); the struggle to carry out this plan during the whole period of the given stage of the revolution.

Our revolution had already passed through two stages and, after the October Revolution, entered upon a third stage. Our strategy was changed accordingly.

First stage, 1903 to February 1917. Aim: to overthrow tsarism and completely liquidate the survivals of medievalism. The main force of the revolution: the proletariat. Immediate reserve: the peasantry. Direction of the main blow: the isolation of the liberal-monarchist bourgeoisie which was striving to win over the peasantry and liquidate the revolution by compromising with tsarism. Plan for the disposition of forces: alliance of the working class with the peasantry. "The proletariat must carry out to the end the democratic revolution, and in this unite to itself the masses of the peasantry in order to crush by force the resistance of the autocracy and to paralyse the instability of the bourgeoisie." (V. I. Lenin, Collected Works, Russian edition, Vol. III, p. 93.)

Second stage, March 1917, to October 1917. Aim: to overthrow imperialism in Russia and to withdraw from the imperialist war. The main force of the revolution: the proletariat. Immediate reserve: the poorest peasantry. Probable reserve: the proletariat of neighboring countries. Favorable circumstances: the protracted war and the crisis of imperialism. Direction of the main blow: isolation of the petty-bourgeois democrats (Mensheviks and Social-Revolutionaries) who were striving to win over the toiling peasantry and put an end to the revolution by compromising with imperialism. Plan for the disposition of the forces: alliance of the proletariat with the poorest peasantry. "The proletariat must accomplish the socialist revolution and in this unite to itself the mass of the semi-proletarian elements of the population in order to crush by force the resistance of the bourgeoisie and to paralyse the instability of the peasantry and petty bourgeoisie." (Ibid.)

Third stage, commenced after the October Revolution. Aim: consolidation of the dictatorship of the proletariat in one country, using it as a stronghold for the overthrow of imperialism in all countries. The revolution goes beyond the confines of one country and the period of world revolution commences. The main forces of the revolution: the dictatorship of the proletariat in one country and the revolutionary movement of the proletariat in all countries. Main reserves: the semi-proletarian and small peasant masses in the advanced countries and the liberation movement in the colonies and dependent countries. Direction of the main blow: the isolation of the petty-bourgeois democrats and the isolation of the parties of the Second International which constitute the main support of the policy of compromise with imperialism. Plan for the disposition of forces: alliance of the proletarian revolution with the liberation movement of the colonies and the dependent countries.

Strategy deals with the main forces of the revolution and their reserves. It changes with the transition of the revolution from one stage to another, but remains essentially unchanged throughout the entire duration of a given stage.

Joseph Stalin, Leninism, Vol. I, pp. 74-75.

2. Tactics—a Doctrine of the Forms of Working Class Struggles

A. Tactics in Connection with the Ebb and Flow of the Revolution

Tactics are the determination of the line of conduct of the proletariat for the comparatively short period of the ebb or flow of the movement, of the rise or decline of the revolution, the struggle to carry out this line by replacing old forms of struggle and of organization by new ones, old slogans by new ones, by combining these forms, etc. While the aim of strategy is to win the war, let us say against tsarism or against the bourgeoisie, to carry the struggle against tsarism or against the bourgeoisie to its end, tactics concern themselves with less important aims, as they strive, not to win the war as a whole, but rather to win a particular engagement, or a particular battle; to carry through successfully a particular campaign or action corresponding to the concrete circumstances of the rise or decline of the revolution. Tactics are a part of strategy, subordinate and subservient to it.

Tactics change according to ebb and flow. While during the first stage of the revolution (1903 to February 1917), the strategic plan remained unchanged, tactics changed several times during that period. From 1903 to 1905 the Party pursued offensive tactics because the tide of the revolution was flowing, the movement rose and tactics had to be based on this fact.

Accordingly, the forms of struggle were revolutionary in compliance with the requirements of the flowing tide of the revolution. Local political strikes, political demonstrations, the general political strike, the boycott of the Duma, insurrection, revolutionary fighting slogans—such were the successive changes which the struggle underwent during that period. These changes in the forms of struggle were accompanied by corresponding changes in the forms of organization. Factory and shop committees, revolutionary peasant committees, strike committees, soviets of workers' deputies, a workers' party operating more or less openly—such were the forms of organization during that period.

In the period from 1907 to 1912 the Party was compelled to resort to tactics of retreat, as we then experienced a decline in the revolutionary movement, the tide of the revolution was at an ebb, and tactics necessarily had to take this fact into consideration. The forms of struggle as well as the forms of organization were correspondingly changed: in place of the boycott of the Duma, there was participation in the Duma; in place of open, direct revolutionary action outside of the Duma there were parliamentary speeches and work in the Duma; in place of general political strikes, there were partial economic strikes, or simply a lull in activities. Of course, the Party had to go underground during that period, while cultural, educational, cooperative, insurance and other organizations permitted by the law took the place of revolutionary mass organizations.

The same must be said of the second and third stages of the revolution during which tactics changed dozens of times whereas the strategic plans remained unchanged.

Tactics deal with the forms of struggle and the forms of organization of the proletariat, with their changes and correlations. Tactics may have to be changed several times in the period of a given stage of the revolution according to the flow and ebb, the rise and fall of the revolution.

Joseph Stalin, Leninism, Vol. I, pp. 75-76.

V. Principal Tasks of the Strategy and Tactics of the Comintern

1. The Fight to Win the Majority of the Working Class and Gain for It the Hegemony Over the Toiling Masses

The successful struggle of the Communist International the dictatorship of the proletariat presupposes the existence in every country of a compact Communist Party, hardened in the struggle, disciplined, centralized, and closely linked up with the masses.

The Party is the vanguard of the working class, and consists of the best, most class-conscious, most active and most courageous members. It incorporates the whole body of experience of the proletarian struggle. Basing itself upon the revolutionary theory of Marxism and representing the general and lasting interests of the whole of the working class, the Party personifies the unity of proletarian principles, of proletarian will and of proletarian revolutionary action. It is a revolutionary organization, bound by iron discipline and strict revolutionary rules of democratic centralism, which can be carried out owing to the class-consciousness of the proletarian vanguard, to its loyalty to the revolution, its ability to maintain inseparable ties with the proletarian masses and to its correct political leadership which is constantly verified and clarified by the experiences of the masses themselves.

* * * * * * * * * * *

D. For Soviet Power!

In the struggle to defend against fascism the bourgeois-democratic liberties and the gains of the toilers, in the struggle to overthrow fascist dictatorship, the revolutionary proletariat prepares its forces, strengthens its fighting contacts with its allies and directs the struggle toward the goal of achieving real democracy of the toilers—Soviet power.

The further consolidation of the Land of the Soviets, the rallying of the world proletariat around it, and the mighty growth of the international authority of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the turn toward revolutionary class struggle which has set in among the Social-Democratic workers and the workers organized in the reformist trade unions, the increasing mass resistance to fascism and the growth of the revolutionary movement in the colonies, the decline of the Second International and the growth of the Communist International, are all accelerating and will con- tinue to accelerate the development of the world Socialist revolution.

* * * * * * * * * * *

B. From the Struggle for Peace to the Struggle for Revolution

* * * * * * * * * * *

At the present historical juncture, when on one-sixth part of the globe the Soviet Union defends Socialism and peace for all humanity, the most vital interests of the workers and toilers of all countries demand that in pursuing the policy of the working class, in waging the struggle for peace, the struggle against imperialist war before and after the outbreak of hostilities, the defense of the Soviet Union must be considered paramount.

If the commencement of a counter-revolutionary war forces the Soviet Union to set the Workers' and Peasants' Red Army in motion for the defense of Socialism, the Communists will call upon all toilers to work, with all their means at their disposal and at any price, for the victory of the Red Army over the armies of the imperialists.

RESOLUTION OF THE INFORMATION BUREAU CONCERNING THE SITUATION IN THE C. P. OF YUGOSLAVIA*

* * * * * * * * * * *

TEXT OF THE RESOLUTION

* * * * * * * * * * *

1. The Information Bureau notes that recently the leadership of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia has pursued an incorrect line on the main questions of home and foreign policy, a line which represents a departure from Marxism-Leninism.

---

* Reprinted from For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, organ of the Information Bureau of the Communist and Workers' Parties, Bucharest, No. 16, July 1, 1948.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

2. The Information Bureau declares that the leadership of the Yugoslav Communist Party is pursuing an unfriendly policy toward the Soviet Union and the C.P.S.U.(B.).

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The Information Bureau denounces this anti-Soviet attitude of the leaders of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia as being incompatible with Marxism-Leninism and only appropriate to nationalists.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

The Yugoslav leaders are pursuing an incorrect policy in the countryside by ignoring the class differentiation in the countryside and by regarding the individual peasantry as a single entity, contrary to the Marxist-Leninist doctrine of classes and class struggle, contrary to the well-known Lenin thesis that small, individual farming gives birth to capitalism and the bourgeoisie continually, daily, hourly, spontaneously and on a mass scale.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

Concerning the leading role of the working class, the leaders of the Yugoslav Communist Party, by affirming that the peasantry is the "most stable foundation of the Yugoslav state" are departing from the Marxist-Leninist path and are taking the path of a populist, kulak party. Lenin taught that the proletariat is the "only class in contemporary society which is revolutionary to the end . . . must be the leader in the struggle of the entire people for a thorough democratic transformation, in the struggle of all working people and the exploited against the oppressors and exploiters."

The Yugoslav leaders are violating this thesis of Marxism-Leninism.

• • • • • • • • • • •

4. The Information Bureau considers that the leadership of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia is revising the Marxist-Leninist teachings about the Party. According to the theory of Marxism-Leninism, the Party is the main, guiding and leading force in the country, which has its own, specific program, and does not dissolve itself among the non-Party masses. The Party is the highest form of organization and the most important weapon of the working class.

• • • • • • • • • • •

6. The Information Bureau considers that the criticism made by the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (B.) and Central Committees of the other Communist Parties of the mistakes of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia, and who in this way rendered fraternal assistance to the Yugoslav Communist Party, provides the Communist Party of Yugoslavia with all the conditions necessary to speedily correct the mistakes committed.

• • • • • • • • • • •

The refusal of the Yugoslav Party to report to the Information Bureau on its actions and to listen to criticism by other Communist Parties means, in practice, a violation of the equality of the Communist Parties and is, in fact, tantamount to a demand for a privileged position for the Communist Party of Yugoslavia in the Information Bureau.

• • • • • • • • • • •

The Information Bureau unanimously concludes that by their anti-Party and anti-Soviet views, incompatible with Marxism-Leninism, by their whole attitude and their refusal to attend the meeting of the Information Bureau, the leaders of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia have placed themselves in opposition to the Communist Parties affiliated to the Information Bureau, have taken the path of seceding from the united socialist front against imperialism, have taken the path of betraying the cause of international solidarity of the working people, and have taken up a position of nationalism.

The Information Bureau condemns this anti-Party policy and attitude of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia.

The Information Bureau considers that, in view of all this, the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia has placed itself and the Yugoslav Party outside the family of the fraternal Communist Parties, outside the united Communist front and consequently outside the ranks of the Information Bureau.

* * *

The Information Bureau considers that the basis of these mistakes made by the leadership of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia lies in the undoubted fact that nationalist elements, which previously existed in a disguised form, managed in the course of the past five or six months to reach a dominant position in the leadership of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia and, that consequently, the leadership of the Yugoslav Communist Party has broken with the international traditions of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia and has taken the road of nationalism.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Information Bureau does not doubt that inside the Communist Party of Yugoslavia there are sufficient healthy elements, loyal to Marxism-Leninism, to the international traditions of the Yugoslav Communist Party and to the united socialist front.

Their task is to compel their present leaders to recognize their mistakes openly and honestly and to rectify them; to break with nationalism, return to internationalism; and in every way to consolidate the united socialist front against imperialism.

Should the present leaders of the Yugoslav Communist Party prove to be incapable of doing this, their job is to replace them and to advance a new internationalist leadership of the Party.

The Information Bureau does not doubt that the Communist Party of Yugoslavia will be able to fulfill this honorable task.

RUTHENBERG PARTY BUILDING DRIVE
BULLETIN No. 1

MARCH 4, 1947

This plan for Party building shall be considered part of our recently adopted County Plan of work. Its success will depend upon the extent to which our County Plan, which is based upon the decisions of our recent National Committee meeting, is carried out. READ AND DISCUSS THIS IN YOUR SECTION AND CLUB AND MAKE YOUR PLANS ACCORDINGLY.

. . . . . .

However, the difficulty of a task (and we are now entering a period when difficulties will steadily increase) can never be the criterion of work for a Communist Party. It is in boldly, realistically facing and solving difficult problems that a Party not only grows numerically, but in its Bolshevik character.

. . . . . .

I. WHY WE MUST

It is not only that we need more members so that we can do more to build the democratic coalition to defeat the all-out offensive of reaction by organizing the counter-offensive of the people led by a unitedly fighting labor. That, of course, is the central task facing our Party, our class, our nation today.

It is that above all—to prevent reaction from disorganizing, dividing and demoralizing labor and the democratic forces in our country—our Party must place itself in a position to effectively play the role of a vanguard.

Reaction is feverishly attempting to separate and isolate our Party from the people of America in order to behead labor and the democratic forces. In order to accomplish this, it is attempting to whip up the most rabid red-baiting hysteria. DEFEND THE PARTY BY BUILDING THE PARTY.

. . . . . .

II. WHY WE CAN

. . . . . .

2) International situation

The democratic trend throughout the world, especially in Central and Eastern Europe, is and will continue to exert a deep influence upon our country, especially amongst the nationality groups.

. . . . . .

III. How We Can

1) Political Mobilization means convincing! The essence of our drive must be the political mobilization of our entire membership, not only to initiate it (as is usual), but throughout the drive. The essence of political mobilization is convincing, answering the questions in the minds of our members, arming them ideologically.

. . . . . .

Struggle Is The Key, But A Key Does Not Unlock By Itself! As was pointed out, the success of our Party Building Drive will be determined by the extent to which we carry out our County Plan, develop and participate in the struggles and broad movements that will weld the democratic coalition.

However, our past is rich in examples of militant mass victorious struggles, during which we were "too busy" to recruit. The Most Important Gain that the Working Class Can Achieve—Is the Building of the Party.

. . . . . .

JOHN LAUTNER EXPELLED BY CP AS A TRAITOR

The National Review Commission of the Communist Party has been conducting an investigation to determine how the FBI agents exposed in the Foley Square trial penetrated and functioned in the ranks of the Party.

In the course of its examination, the Review Commission ascertained that several months ago John Lautner, a member of the New York State Review Commission, was instrumental in preventing the expulsion of the spy, Calomiris, and that he had also recommended a number of untrustworthy individuals for work in the Defense Office during the period of the trial.

Further investigation revealed that Lautner himself is an enemy agent of long standing. A full disclosure will be made at the proper time.

In view of the already established facts, the National Review Commission approves the recommendation of the subcommittee which examined the case of John Lautner and hereby expels him from the Communist Party as a traitor and enemy of the working class.

The Review Commission calls upon the Party leadership and membership to heighten their Communist vigilance and to redouble their efforts to safeguard and strengthen the Party.

ROOTING OUT TRAITORS FROM THE RANKS OF THE COMMUNIST PARTIES

The New York "Daily Worker" reports that a special commission of the Communist Party of the United States has expelled from its ranks John Lowther who has been exposed as a traitor. The commission has called upon the leadership and members of the Party to display increased Communist vigilance. The commission, continues the "Daily Worker", carried out its investigation with the aim of discovering by what means the F.B.I. agents, exposed during the trial of the eleven Party leaders at Foley Square, succeeded in penetrating into the Party and in carrying on their activities there. It established that Lowther was an old enemy agent.

"Unita", organ of the Italian Communist Party, has published a photo of Pellegata Fernando, expelled from the Milan Federation of the Party for treachery.

FOR COMMUNIST VIGILANCE*

By Gilbert Green

. . . . . .

*Report to the Plenum on the Need for Strengthening Communist Vigilance.

. . . . . .

Our whole Party has not yet drawn the full lessons from the experience at the Foley Square trial, from certain incidents since the trial, particularly from the valuable experience of the world Communist movement in the past few years. These prove, beyond a doubt, that the ruling class of this country is assiduously cultivating every known stool-pigeon and agent-provocateur method of the past, and adding a few new ones, in its attempt to infiltrate and disrupt the world Communist movement from within.

. . . . . .

SOURCE OF LACK OF VIGILANCE

What explains this tolerance, this softness, this rotten liberalism and lack of vigilance? It can be explained only in one way—the reflection of opportunism in the thinking and work of the Party and in the first place the leadership.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

THE NEED FOR BOLSHEVIK CRITICISM AND SELF-CRITICISM

For this reason the European parties have tied up the struggle for revolutionary vigilance with the struggle for Bolshevik criticism and self-criticism and for inner-Party democracy. We must understand that criticism and self-criticism is not just another feature of Communist organization; it is the law of development of Communist parties.

Here is how a recent issue of For a Lasting Peace, For a People's Democracy!, deals with this subject in its leading editorial:

Criticism and self-criticism is that revolutionary weapon, that tried method, by means of which the Marxist Parties ruthlessly expel from their ranks all that is alien, all that is bourgeois, which still persists in their ranks.

Criticism and self-criticism is inherent only in the revolutionary Marxist-Leninist Parties. The Communist Parties are distinguished from the reformist, Social-Democratic and Right-wing Socialist Parties in that they never evade painful questions, never hush them up, nor do they slur over them, but always openly, profoundly and as a matter of principle, reveal and criticize their mistakes, drawing fresh strength from criticism and self-criticism, and renewed energy for improving their work and for ensuring their development.

• • • • • • • • • • • •

And Comrade G. Malenkov, writing on the seventieth anniversary of the birth of Comrade Stalin, deals with the Stalinist-Bolshevik tradition of leadership. He writes:

Comrade Stalin teaches that it is necessary to wage a merciless struggle against instances of the suppression and persecution of self-criticism. To persecute self-criticism, says Comrade Stalin, means to kill all independent activity in the Party organization, to undermine the authority of its leadership among the Party masses, to cause the Party to disintegrate, and to establish in the life of the Party organization the anti-Party customs of the bureaucrats—the mortal enemies of the Party.

And further Comrade Malenkov writes:

Comrade Stalin constantly warns of the fact that it is not vanity, but modesty that becomes the Bolshevik, that any leader, irrespective of the post he occupies, is a servant of the people. The unbroken tie between the leaders and the masses, willingness to learn from the masses, to correct the shortcomings which the workers point out—this is the tradition of Bolshevik leadership. (Pravda, December 21, 1949, in Soviet Press Translations.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

* * * * * * * * * * *

3. We must raise the ideological-political Marxist-Leninist level of understanding of our whole Party and especially of our cadres. We must fight stubbornly for our working-class ideology, for the line of the Party. We must eradicate all manifestations of white chauvinism in our ranks, and also of Negro bourgeois nationalism. We must also intensify our struggle for proletarian internationalism, the most important aspect of which is a many-sided and continuous exposure of the lies and slanders directed against the first land of Socialism, the Soviet Union.

THE ACTIVITIES OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE SOVIET UNION (BOLSHEVIKS)*

By Georgi M. Malenkov

[Reprinted from For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, organ of the Information Bureau of the Communist Parties in Belgrade, No. 2, December 1, 1947.]

. . . . . .

* Informative report to the Conference of representatives of a number of Communist Parties held in Poland at the close of September, 1947.

. . . . . .

The C.P.S.U. (B.) devotes much attention to problems of foreign policy and shows special concern for the selection and proper training of cadres capable of putting into effect the Party's line in the sphere of foreign policy..

The Party devotes much attention to equipping its cadres with the knowledge of the laws of international development, with an understanding of the international situation. It teaches them to defend the interests of the Socialist state on the international scene, to distinguish between friend and foe, to detect the insiduous designs and methods of the imperialists and their agents.

. . . . . .

The absence of contact between Communist Parties is a hindrance in coordinating the actions of Communists in various countries in their resistance to the plans of the imperialists, particularly now, when American monopoly capital is organizing an offensive against Communism and democracy, against the U.S.S.R. and the new democracies, developing its expansionist plans with the intention, under the guise of "aid," of enslaving a number of European and other countries, and when Communists are called upon to define their attitude to these plans of American imperialism.

In our opinion it is necessary to put into effect definite measures designed to eliminate the present abnormal situation in this respect.

That is why we consider it necessary to discuss at the present conference both the international situation and the question of improving contact between Communist Parties, of establishing regular connections between them with a view to achieving mutual understanding, exchange of experience and voluntary coordination of activities of the Communist Parties whenever they consider this necessary.

Introduction—Marxist-Leninist Theory

I. The Importance of Marxist-Leninist Theory

A. "Without a revolutionary theory there can be no revolutionary movement . . ."

Lenin, What Is To Be Done?

"Theory is the experience of the labour movement in all countries taken, in its general form. Of course theory becomes immaterial if it is not connected with revolutionary practice, just as practice gropes in the dark if its path is not illumined by revolutionary theory. But theory can become the greatest force in the labor movement if it is built up in indissoluble connection with revolutionary practice, for it, and it alone, can give to the movement confidence, the power of orientation and an understanding of the inner connection between events; for it, and it alone, can help us in our practical work to discern how and in which direction classes are moving not only at the present time, but also how and in which direction they will move in the near future."

Stalin, Foundations of Leninism

"The role of the vanguard can be fulfilled only by a party that is guided by an advanced theory."

—"Trade unionism does not always exclude 'politics' altogether, as some imagine. Trade Unions have always conducted political (but not Social Democratic—i.e. Communist) agitation and struggle."

—"However much we may try to give to the economic struggle itself a political character, we shall never be able to develop the political consciousness of the workers (to the degree of Social-Democratic, i.e. Communist consciousness) by confining ourselves to the economic struggle, for the limits of this task are too narrow."

The State

. . . . . .

III. The State Following the Socialist Revolution

A. The "dictatorship of the proletariat is the state during the transition period between capitalism and socialism."

1) The historic role of the dictatorship of the proletariat is the destruction of capitalism and the organization of socialism.

. . . . . .

2) The dictatorship of the proletariat is a new type of state, a new type of democracy.

—"The working class cannot simply take possession of the ready-made state machine and use it for its own purposes."

Marx, The Civil War in France

—What is required is "the shattering of the former state power and its replacement by a new and really democratic state . . ."

Engels, Introduction to the Civil War in France

—"the dictatorship of the proletariat cannot be 'complete' democracy, a democracy for all, for rich and poor alike; the dictatorship of the proletariat 'must be a state that is democratic in a new way—against the bourgeoisie' (State and Revolution, Lenin) . . . .

"Democracy under the capitalist system is a capitalist democracy, the democracy of an exploiting minority based upon the restriction of the rights of the exploited majority and directed against this majority . . . Under the dictatorship of the proletariat, democracy is proletarian democracy —the democracy of the exploited majority based upon the restriction of the rights of the exploiting minority and directed against this minority."

The Communist Party

. . . . . .

B. Main features of the Communist Party which mark it as a party of a new type, distinct from the Social-Democratic parties:

. . . . . .

2. The Party as an organized detachment of the working class, with its own discipline, and unity of will and action.

a. Principles of membership in the Communist Party.

. . . . . .

d. The source of unity and discipline in the Communist Party

"Iron discipline in the Party is impossible without unity of will and without absolute and complete unity of action on the part of all members of the Party. This does not mean of course that the possibility of a conflict of opinion within the Party is thus excluded. On the contrary, iron discipline does not preclude but presupposes criticism and conflicts of opinion within the Party. Least of all does it mean that this discipline must be 'blind' discipline. On the contrary, iron discipline does not preclude but presupposes conscious and voluntary submission, for only conscious discipline can be truly iron discipline. But after a discussion has been closed, after criticism has run its course and a decision has been made, unity of will and unity of action of all Party members become indispensable conditions without which Party unity and iron discipline in the Party are inconceivable."

Stalin, Fundamentals of Leninism

e. The practice of criticism and self-criticism

"The attitude of a political party towards its own mistakes is one of the most important and surest ways of judging how earnest the party is, and how it in practice fulfills its obligations towards its class and the toiling masses.

Frankly admitting a mistake, ascertaining the reasons for it, analyzing the conditions which led to it, and thoroughly discussing the means of correcting it—that is the earmark of a serious party, that is the way it should perform its duties, that is the way it should educate and train the class, and then the masses."

Strategy and Tactics

* * * * * * * * * *

II. Strategy

A. Dependence of Strategy on the Theory and Program of Marxism

1. "From a study of the objective processes of capitalism in their development and decline, the theory of Marxism arrives at the conclusion that the fall of the bourgeoisie and the seizure of power by the proletariat, and the replacement of capitalism by socialism, are inevitable. Proletarian strategy may be considered truly Marxist only when it makes this fundamental conclusion of the theory of Marxism the basis of its operations."

(Stalin—Strategy and Tactics of Russian Communists)

B. Principle features of strategy—Plan and direction of Party policy during an entire historical period. Direction of main blow and distribution of forces. Remains unchanged during entire period, changes only with new stage of revolution.

—"The most important task of strategy is to determine the main direction to be taken by the movement of the working class, the direction along which the proletariat can most advantageously deliver its main blow against its enemy in order to achieve this aim outlined in the program."

(Stalin)

C. Strategic leadership involves the mobilization of all possible allies for the working class, and of all splits in the ranks of its enemies during the given period.

* * * * * * * * * * *

III. Tactics

A. Tactics subordinate to strategy—deals with forms of struggle and forms of organization of working class, changing with new tasks and new political situation.

—"At each stage of development, at each moment, proletarian tactics must take account of these objectively unavoidable dialectics of human history, utilizing, on the one hand, the periods of political stagnation, or periods when things are moving at a snail's pace along the road of so-called 'peaceful' development, to increase the class consciousness, strength, and fighting capacity of the advanced class; on the other hand, conducting this work in the direction of the 'final aim' of the movement of this class."

(Lenin—Marx-Engels—Marxism)

B. What determines tactics?

1. "In determining its line of tactics, each Communist Party must take into account the concrete internal and external situation, the correlation of class forces, the degree of stability and strength of the bourgeoisie, the degree of preparedness of the proletariat, the position taken by the various intermediary strata in its country, etc. The Party determines its slogans and methods of struggle in accordance with those circumstances, with the view to organizing and mobilizing the masses on the broadest possible scale and on the highest possible level of this struggle."—Program of the C.I.

THE STRUGGLE AGAINST REVISIONISM*

By William Z. Foster

. . . . . .

* Report to the Special Convention of the Communist Political Association, held in New York, July 26-28, 1945, which reconstituted the Communist Party of the United States of America.

. . . . . .

I. OUR PARTY'S REVISIONIST MISTAKE: ITS ORIGIN AND COURSE

. . . . . .

From all of this, it should be clear that Browder is preaching anti-Marxism, in fact "a notorious revision of Marxism," as Duclos said. He is fighting our Party and with it, what he has designated as "the Marxists of Europe." But like all other revisionists, he presents his opportunism under the false flag of a Marxism brought up to date. That he realizes he is making a head-on attack upon the whole body of Marxist-Leninist principles, however, is clear from his often-expressed scorn for the "old books" and "old formulas," by which, of course, he means Marxist-Leninist books and formulas. Browder would have us throw away the Marxist-Leninist classics and adopt instead his Right-wing bourgeois liberalism, which he misnames Marxism.

Before the Duclos article was published, Browder also contemplated sending a public letter to the British Communist Party urging it to orientate itself in the then approaching Parliamentary elections on the perspective of an election alliance between the British democratic forces and the Churchill group of Tories against the reactionaries (sic). How preposterous this sounds now in view of the Labor Party's victory—over Churchill. Browder's plan, apparently, was to develop some sort of a loosely integrated cooperation between such Communist parties as he could influence, with the C.P.A. as a new world center, with himself as its leader, and with his revisionist policies as its program. The Duclos article smashed this whole plan.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The full destructive force of Browder's revisionism would have been felt, however, if we had attempted to extend his policies over into the postwar period. This would have proved disastrous to our mass work and to our Party itself. The corrective Duclos article arrived at a most opportune time for us.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Had the Duclos article been published a few months earlier, its reception in our Party would have been much less unanimous. As things turned out, however, it appeared at just the right time. The objective situation was ripe for it, and so, increasingly, were our Party leaders and members. Hence, the stage was all set for the sudden switch in Party opinion that has perplexed so many people. Our Party has suddenly reverted to its basic Communist principles.

* * * * * * * * * * *

II. The Next Tasks in the Struggle Against Revisionism

* * * * * * * * * * *

While at the conclusion of this convention our formal general Party discussion will end and we will close our ranks and proceed in unity and discipline to the application of the line we have adopted, we must, however, conduct the broadest and deepest campaign of enlightenment we have ever led in our Party. As never before, we must train our Party in the fundamentals of Marxism-Leninism. To this end we must check over the curricula, teaching personnel and textbooks of all our schools. We must re-examine all our recent literature. We must prepare new propaganda and agitation material in harmony with our new line.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Only by applying the sound principles of Leninist democratic-centralism can our Party keep its mistakes to a minimum and develop the clear-thinking unity of action and resolute discipline that are the great strength of Communist parties all over the world.

STALIN: ON HIS SEVENTIETH BIRTHDAY

By Alexander Bittelman

On December 21, 1949, Stalin will be 70 years old; and all over the world, the working class and its progressive allies, whole peoples and nations, will celebrate in confidence and triumph.

It will be a historic moment of overwhelming significance. It will be a historic moment in which hundreds of millions of people throughout the world will demonstrate their belief and confidence in Stalin's cause, in Stalin's leadership. They will express their undying faith in the victory of the camp of peace, democracy and Socialism, headed by the Soviet Union and led by Stalin. They will express their firm determination to bring this victory about.

* * * * * * * * * * *

WHAT STALIN MEANS TO THE WORLD

* * * * * * * * * * *

Informed people are well aware by this time that from its very inception the Soviet Union has waged a consistent fight for world peace. The October Revolution itself took place under the banner of the struggle for peace. At different times, it applied different forms and methods of struggle, but the U.S.S.R. always fought for peace.

* * * * * * * * * * *

WHAT STALIN MEANS TO THE INTERNATIONAL WORKING-CLASS MOVEMENT AND TO THE COLONIAL LIBERATION MOVEMENTS

* * * * * * * * * * *

A theoretical contribution of Stalin which, like the Foundations of Leninism, and his other theoretical works, ranks with the fundamental theoretical and philosophical works of Marx, Engels and Lenin is the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The History is a fountain-head of Marxist-Leninist knowledge—theory, ideology, strategy, tactics, principles of organization. It is a guide to Marxist-Leninist action. It embodies the theoretical and programmatic positions of Marxism-Leninism.

PREAMBLE

The Communist Party of the United States is a political party of the American working class, basing itself upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism. It champions the immediate and fundamental interests of the workers, farmers and all who labor by hand and brain, against capitalist exploitation and oppression. As the advanced party of the working class, it stands in the forefront of this struggle.

The Communist Party upholds the achievements of American democracy and defends the United States Constitution and its Bill of Rights against it reactionary enemies who would destroy democracy and popular liberties. It uncompromisingly fights against imperialism and colonial oppression, against racial, national and religious discrimination, against Jim-Crowism, anti-Semitism and all forms of chauvinism.

The Communist Party struggles for the complete destruction of fascism and for a durable peace. It seeks to safeguard the welfare of the people and the nation, recognizing that the working class, through its trade unions and by its independent political action, is the most consistent fighter for democracy, national freedom and social progress.

The Communist Party holds as a basic principle that there is an identity of interest which serves as a common bond uniting the workers of all lands. It recognizes further that the true national interests of our country and the cause of peace and progress require the solidarity of all freedom-loving peoples and the continued and ever closer cooperation of the United Nations.

The Communist Party recognizes that the final abolition of exploitation and oppression, of economic crises and unemployment, of reaction and war, will be achieved only by the socialist reorganization of society—by the common ownership and operation of the national economy under a government of the people led by the working class.

The Communist Party, therefore, educates the working class, in the course of its day-to-day struggles, for its historic mission, the establishment of Socialism. Socialism, the highest form of democracy, will guarantee the full realization of the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and will turn the achievements of labor, science and culture to the use and enjoyment of all men and women.

In the struggle for democracy, peace and social progress, the Communist Party carries forward the democratic traditions of Jefferson, Paine, Lincoln and Frederick Douglass, and the great working-class traditions of Sylvis, Debs and Ruthenberg. It fights side by side with all who join in this cause.

For the advancement of these principles, the Communist Party of the United States establishes the basic laws of its organization in the following Constitution:

Article I

Name

Section I. The name of the organization shall be Communist Party of the United States of America.

Article II

Purposes

Section I. The purposes of this organization are to promote the best interests and welfare of the working class and the people of the United States, to defend and extend the democracy of our country, to prevent the rise of fascism, and to advance the cause of progress and peace with the ultimate aim of ridding our country of the scourge of economic crises, unemployment, insecurity, poverty and war, through the realization of the historic aim of the working class—the establishment of Socialism by the free choice of the majority of the American people.

Article III

Membership

Section I. Any resident of the United States, 18 years of age or over, regardless of race, color, national origin, sex or religious belief, who subscribes to the principles and purposes of the Communist Party, shall be eligible for membership.

Section 2. An applicant for membership shall be endorsed by at least two members of the Communist Party. Such application is subject to discussion and decision by the Club to which it is presented.

Section 3. A Party member is one who accepts the aims, principles and program of the Party as determined by its Constitution and Conventions, who belongs to a Club and attends its meetings, who is active in behalf of the Party program, who reads and circulates the Party press and literature and who pays dues regularly.

Section 4. Party members three months in arrears in payment of dues cease to be members in good standing and shall be so informed. Members who are six months in arrears shall be dropped from Party membership after a personal effort has been made to bring such members into good standing. They may, however, apply for readmission within six months, and upon approval of the Club Executive Committee, be permitted to pay up back dues and maintain standing as old members.

Article IV

Rights and Duties of Members

Section 3. Party members disagreeing with any decision of a Club, Section, County, State or District Committee have the right to appeal such decision to the next higher body until they reach the National Committee and the National Convention. All appeals should be heard by the respective committee within 30 days.

Section 4. In pre-convention discussions, members have the right and duty, within the Party organization, to discuss any and all Party policies and tactics, the right to criticize the work and composition of all leading committees, the right to participate fully in the discussion in the Party press or any other designated publications.

Appeals to the National Convention shall be heard by a Committee established for such purposes by the Convention.

Section 9. Members are obligated to fight with all their strength, against any and every effort, whether it comes from abroad or from within our country, to destroy the rights of labor and the people, or to impose upon the United States the arbitrary will of any group or party or clique or conspiracy, thereby violating the unqualified right of the majority of the people to direct the destinies of our country.

Section 10. All members shall strive to acquire an understanding of the fundamentals of Marxism, to explain the policies of the Party and the principles of Socialism, and to apply Communist consciousness, understanding, responsibility and initiative in their work and activity.

Section 11. It shall be the obligation of all Party members to struggle against all forms of national oppression, national chauvinism, discrimination and segregation, against all ideological influences and practices of barbarous "racial" theories, such as white chauvinism and anti-Semit-

Section 13. All members eligible shall register and vote in the elections for public offices.

Article V

COMMUNIST PARTY HERE GREETS STALIN

A telegram greeting Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin on the occasion of his 70th birthday was sent yesterday by the national committee of the Communist Party of the United States. The telegram, signed by William Z Foster, chairman, and Eugene Dennis, general secretary, is as follows:

Joseph Stalin
Moscow, U.S.S.R.
Dear Comrade Stalin,

On your 70th birthday the National Committee of the Communist Party, USA, voicing the sentiments of the advanced workers and progressive-minded Americans, sends you heartiest congratulations and warmest greetings. Like the Communists and other true partisans of peace, democracy and progress in all lands, we hail your more than 50 years of sterling leadership in the interest of the international working class and humanity.

. . . . . .

Under a Hitler-like anti-Soviet and anti-Communist smokescreen, the American imperialists launched their predatory and aggressive Truman Doctrine, Marshall Plan, and North Atlantic Pact.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Undaunted by the threats of the war instigators, the USSR steadfastly pursues its Stalinist peace policy and promotes cooperation with all who strive for peace. And the mighty world camp of peace, democracy and socialism headed by the Soviet Union, daily becomes more powerful and is destined to triumph.

In our country, too, the organized peace forces, among the workers, the Negro people, men and women of science and culture, are growing and will continue to grow in unison with the peace forces of the world. By waging a most active, determined and united struggle for peace, the people can frustrate the designs of the imperialist warmakers and the criminal intrigues of their Titoite agents and reactionary social democratic lackeys.

* * * * * * * * * * *

With full confidence in the American working class and people, the Communist Party of the USA exerts every effort to assure that by their united action they will check and help defeat the fascist-minded monopolists and warmongers.

FIFTEENTH NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY, U.S.A.

This special, enlarged issue is devoted to reports, speeches, and greetings of the 15th National Convention of the Communist Party, U.S.A., held in New York City on December 28-31, 1950. The Resolution was published in the January 1951 issue. The main report, Peace Can Be Won!, by Comrade Gus Hall, and the report, The Negro People in the Struggle for Peace and Freedom, by Comrade Benjamin J. Davis, have been published separately in pamphlet form.

Gear the Party for Its Great Tasks
By Henry Winston

Our Party now prepares to give more effective leadership to the struggle of the masses in the immediate period ahead.

A Sound Concentration Policy

What is the real basis for our concentration policy?

The Resolution before us states:

"The Party National Convention calls upon the whole Party to establish guarantees that a real policy of industrial concentration will be carried forward, and that major attention is given to the workers in the stronghold of trustified capital, which happens also to be the stronghold of the reactionary labor officialdom. For by winning the workers in the industries, we will be influencing the thinking and actions of the entire labor movement.

Essence of Our Concentration Policy

More, we recognized that the fight for Socialism, which proceeds through the struggle for democracy, could advance only if we had a strong Communist Party anchored in the shops, and playing a leading role in the struggles of the working class.

The Main Direction of the Party's Trade-Union Work
By John Williamson

• • • • • • • • • • •

The Decisive Character of Our Work

• • • • • • • • • • •

Therefore, the main direction of our trade-union work, must be among the members of the reformist-led unions.

• • • • • • • • • • •

Co-ordination of Progressive Unions

• • • • • • • • • • •

At the same time, we must recognize that the cause of the working class as a whole cannot advance unless a firm alliance is established with the Negro people, and unless the working class assumes its full responsibility in support of the struggle of the oppressed Negro nation for freedom.

• • • • • • • • • • •

III. The Role of the Party

• • • • • • • • • • •

Time does not permit an overall estimate of the role of our Party through its 31 years of existence. Such a study would give us much valuable material from which to draw lessons. At certain periods of our Party's history we made especially great contributions in influencing the course of development of the workers movement, in our initiation and support for many mass movements, struggles and organizational activities, which have transformed the size and the influence of the organized working class. All of this was necessary for our Party to do—but by itself such activity did not develop Socialist consciousness among the masses.

• • • • • • • • • • •

IV. The Work of the Trade-Union Department

• • • • • • • • • • •

The present situation demands from all Party trade unionists, especially in positions of leadership, closer ties with the Party, better understanding of policies, and a more vigorous fight for Party policies among the masses.

* * * * * * * * * * *

We know that despite all the tempests and storms that may still beset us, the working class will move forward, and that our Party, headed by its helmsmen Foster and Dennis, will lead the working class safely to the port of Socialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Sharpen the Fight Against Browderism, Titoism, Trotskyism

By John Gates

* * * * * * * * * * *

History proves that the continued struggle of the renegades from Marxism against the Communist Party inevitably and logically leads to struggle against the Soviet Union and to becoming outright agents of the imperialist bourgeoisie. This is the story of Browder.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Strengthen Party Vigilance

Comrades, our Party is ideologically sound and united. We have long ago defeated Browderism, Titoism and Trotskyism. But we cannot afford to be complacent. This Convention has called attention to the new dangerous tendencies of liquidationism. We need to be alert to the danger of factionalism.

The Effect of the War Economy on the South

By Jim Jackson

* * * * * * * * * * *

Thanks to changes in the correlation of social forces on a world scale, in favor of democracy and Socialism and to the detriment of world imperialism, a number of the national liberation struggles have swept forward to brilliant successes. These changes are revealed in the triumph of the Chinese revolution, resulting in liberation of a half billion human beings; in the heroic people of Korea administering an anguishing military rebuff to the would-be Hitlerite adventurers of American imperialism and in the setting aflame of the hopes, aspirations and determined struggles of all the unfree peoples of the earth.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The South is the seat of the oppressed Negro nation in the United States (with all the revolutionary portent that it holds for the forces of peace and advancement in our country), as well as the area of the most unrelieved political reaction, chauvinism and social backwardness. It is essential that we analyze and estimate the probable consequences upon the South of the new stage—the M-Day stage—in our government's drive toward new wars for world conquest, and the effect this can have on the fight for peace.

THE YOUTH IN THE FIGHT FOR PEACE, AGAINST MILITARIZATON

By Carl Ross

This Convention reflects real progress in our youth work and better understanding of our Party policy in this field. The period since the last Convention has been marked by many noteworthy events in developing our fight to win the youth, fully confirming the correctness of the general line of our Party in youth work.

The 1948 Convention of our Party gave important emphasis to the need of establishing a non-Party working-class youth organization dedicated to the training of the youth in the spirit of Socialism. The Labor Youth League, and its truly historic first National Convention held a few weeks ago, marks the realization in life of this policy, and closes the gap of almost a decade during which time a youth organization of this type has been absent.

The recent founding Convention of the Labor Youth League, culminating its work of a year and a half, has made a deep impression on our whole Party. In this short time the League has proven itself to be a worthy heir of all the best traditions of the Young Communist League, its 25-year record of struggle and its training of many of the outstanding leaders of our Party today. But we are still slow to grasp the full meaning of the establishment of this independent working-class youth organization.

The Struggle Against Militarization

There can be no fully effective fight for peace without waging a struggle against the militarization of the youth.

Youth Issues Demand Attention

It follows that these are some of the most immediate issues around which our Party must develop an energetic struggle.

1. No extension of the draft to 18-year olds, veterans and married men. No lengthening of the draft service term. No universal military service and training.

The Labor Youth League

Experience has borne out fully the correctness of establishing L.Y.L. as an independent non-Party mass youth organization. The best answer to those comrades who two years ago thought Party youth clubs filled the need for youth work are the thousands of non-Party members of L.Y.L. who are today participating in its activities and learning in a Marxist spirit.

Some Ideological Tasks in the Struggle for Peace

By Betty Gannett

The Party's ideological and theoretical work is determined by the central political task of the day—the struggle for peace—the mobilization of the working class, the Negro people, and other democratic and peace-loving forces into a powerful front to defeat imperialist reaction and its drive to war.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Wars, Just and Unjust

Let me here dwell briefly on three important ideological questions related to the struggle for peace.

Of prime importance is the need to render more effective our correct explanations as to the unjust, expansionist character of the war against the Korean people, and the world war U.S. imperialism is plotting.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Need to Popularize Socialist Achievements

Thirdly, since one of the main pillars of U.S. imperialism is its anti-Sovietism, our inadequate popularization of the truth about the Soviet Union and the countries of People's Democracy have seriously impeded the realization of a peace front in the country.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Two tendencies are to be noted in the progressive movement—affecting also certain comrades in our Party—in regard to popularizing the achievements of Socialism and defending the Soviet Union. On the one hand, some retreat before the heavy pressures of bourgeois propaganda among the workers. This is said without minimizing the constant barrage of anti-Sovietism our comrades face in the shops today. On the other hand, some meet this propaganda with mere assertions that the Soviet Union is for peace and not an aggressor, etc., without being able to bolster such statements with facts, with intimate explanations of why a worker's state cannot and does not pursue an imperialist course, with information on how democracy works in the Socialist Soviet Union, with data on the role and function of the trade unions, and with facts on the constantly improving living conditions of the Soviet people.

* * * * * * * * * * *

PEACE CAN BE WON!

REPORT TO THE 15TH CONVENTION, COMMUNIST PARTY, U.S.A.

By Gus Hall

NEW CENTURY PUBLISHERS, NEW YORK

II. THE REALITY OF THE WORLD TODAY

THE GREAT SOCIALIST STATE

The strength and invincibility of the world peace camp are best exemplified by the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union has just celebrated its 33rd birthday. It stands proudly among the nations of the earth. Each day it gives glowing and irrefutable proof that a working class in power, a Socialist state, advances civilization to a new and higher stage.

This most democratic of all powers has completed its first postwar Five-Year Plan. The main objectives of this plan were to rebuild the war-ravaged areas of the country, to restore the prewar levels of industry and agriculture and to surpass those levels. The Soviet people proudly announce that they have achieved these objectives—and more.

. . . . . .

In accord with its basic Stalinist policy of peace, the Soviet Union has put forward practical peace proposals at each turn of events. Thus it was the Soviet Union that advanced the proposal for outlawing the atom bomb through international agreement and inspection, and the proposal for universal reduction in armaments. At every stage of the war in Korea, the U.S.S.R. has put forward new and practical peace proposals. Only recently, Andrei Vishinsky, speaking for the Soviet Union in the United Nations, again proposed a real cease-fire and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korea.

The working classes of Poland, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Albania, defeated all attempts by the imperialist camp to disrupt their progress. These countries are now firmly on the road to Socialism. And today, they are stout pillars in the world camp of peace, democracy and Socialism.

The rise and development of these People's Democracies, their achievements in building the foundations of a Socialist society, fully confirm Lenin's thesis that, while the transition from capitalism to Socialism will give rise to varied forms, the content will everywhere and inevitably be the dictatorship of the proletariat. Among the big obstacles to Wall Street's plans for building its main World War III base in Europe and Western Germany are the now stable German Democratic Republic, and the powerful Communist Parties of France and Italy.

VIII. Political Perspective

. . . . . .

The Goal of Socialism

We know that this positive outlook is only the beginning. In our absorption in the work of the present, we must never for a moment forget our historic and ultimate goal—to put an end to this barbaric capitalist system, and build Socialism in its place.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Our confidence is firmly grounded in the world-liberating science of Marxism-Leninism. We know where we are going. We know why the American working class and people are destined to go our way. We know how to take the next steps toward a happy, democratic, and peace-loving America—toward the boundless horizons of lasting peace in a Socialist, a Communist world.

POLITICAL AFFAIRS

Working-Class and People's Unity for Peace!

* * * * * * * * * * *

II. The Menace of Fascism and the Struggle for Democracy

1. The struggle for peace is inseparable from the struggle for democracy, from the struggle against the growing danger of fascism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

U. S. imperialism is the most reactionary force in the world today, seeking to fascize, not only America, but every capitalist country.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Negro people, in its fight for first-class citizenship throughout the land, forms a tremendous reservoir of strength for the whole democratic movement.

* * * * * * * * * *

III. For A Fighting, United Working Class

1. The key to changing the relationship of forces within the country in favor of peace, democracy and economic security, is to change the situation within the working class and its organized labor movement. Only to the extent that the working class begins to find the path toward class-struggle policies and labor unity can progress be made.

* * * * * * * * * *

4. We must face the fact that the overwhelming bulk of the organized workers in the country are in the A. F. of L., C.I.O. and independent Right-led unions. It is this which must determine the main direction of all of the Party's work, and especially its trade-union and industrial concentration policy.

* * * * * * * * * *

IV. The New Features of the Negro Liberation Movement

* * * * * * * * * *

Because U. S. imperialism is compelled to cloak with demagogic phrases about democracy and equality its drive for world conquest, particularly its military assault against the colonial liberation movement in Asia, the Negro question tears the mask off of Wall Street's real face and assumes the greatest international significance.

* * * * * * * * * *

3. The beginning of the merger of the Negro liberation struggle with the world colonial upsurge is expressed in the growing moral and political unity of the colored peoples of the world against the racist, Jim-Crow policies of U. S. imperialism, the fountain head of white chauvinism; in the joint action of the Chinese people with the Negro people against the execution of Willie McGee; and in the sharpened assault of U. S. imperialism against the colored nations of China and Korea and the oppressed Negro people in the U.S.A.

VII. The Party

10. Another weakness in the work of the Party is the over-dependence on top levels of leadership, the lack of independent initiative at the lower levels of the organization. This weakness, the tendency of lower organizations to drift between central campaigns and their slowness in orienting independently on concrete problems and issues in a given local situation, must be recognized in the first place as a weakness of leadership, which has the responsibility for correcting this state of affairs.

One of the major causes for this situation is the continued existence of bureaucratic methods of work in the leadership, and the failure to educate the whole Party in the practice of criticism and self-criticism as the inner law of Party development. Thus the whole Party does not often enough participate in evaluating major developments and struggles; does not sufficiently learn from mistakes committed.

This in turn leads to many "independent" estimates which are not resolved into one single Party estimate. This tends to weaken Party discipline and the carrying out of Party decisions.

The 15th National Convention of the Communist Party, U.S.A., demonstrates the firm political unity of our Party. It calls upon the whole membership to guard the monolithic character and unity of our Party, based on democratic centralism. We must strive for the highest discipline arising out of conscious understanding of the Party's theory and political line. Tendencies toward factionalism are totally impermissible and must be sharply dealt with because they weaken the Party and make it possible for the enemy more easily to penetrate its ranks.

11. The establishment of the Labor Youth League has done much to restore to the youth scene a fighting youth leadership organizing and uniting the youth against war and fascism and educating them in the spirit of Socialism. We must give every aid and support to this organization and must overcome the still-present neglect in practically all sections of our Party of this increasingly important section of the population. Any continuation of this neglect in these circumstances of acute war and fascist danger can only have disastrous consequences and cannot be tolerated. The Party must help build the broadest front of youth unity against the imperialist threat of a lifetime of militarism and insecurity.

THE NEGRO PEOPLE IN THE STRUGGLE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM

BENJAMIN J. DAVIS

Report to the 15th Convention, Communist Party

* * * * * * * * * * *

NOTE TO THE READER

This pamphlet contains the full text of the report of Benjamin J. Davis, former Councilman of the City of New York and member of the Communist Party's National Committee, to the Party's 15th National Convention, held on December 28-31, 1950, in New York City.

Mr. Davis, an outstanding leader of the Negro liberation struggle in the United States and a militant fighter for peace, is one of the eleven Communist leaders convicted in the notorious Foley Square "thought control" trial, and is now free on bail while his conviction is under appeal before the U.S. Supreme Court.

I. The Struggle for Peace and Its Relation to the Negro Liberation Movement

The indivisibility of the struggle for peace and the struggle for freedom—which takes its most basic form in our country in the battle for Negro liberation—was always of major importance.

II. The New Features of the Negro Liberation Movement

. . . . . .

The most important new features of the Negro liberation movement are: First, the international significance of this question, originally noted by Comrade Foster at the March plenum this year, and reflected in the present crisis in U.S. foreign policy. Second, the intensification of the pro-fascist oppression of the Negro people nationally, and in the Black Belt in particular, in consequence of U.S. monopoly's drive toward world domination, war and fascism.

. . . . . .

V. Remarks on the Party

. . . . . .

Comrades, it is shocking that, in spite of the gains made in the fight against white chauvinism, primitive acts of white chauvinism can still reveal themselves even at the level of County and State Communist Party conventions. We must quickly get up off that level, for time does not wait.

Drastic discipline has to be imposed in such cases. For some of these crude cases, comrades, are astounding.

. . . . . .

This requires in the first place the fight for the line of our Party on the Negro question as a national question, including the right of self-determination for the Negro majority in the Black Belt.

. . . . . .

Our Party's line on the Negro question is a Leninist-Stalinist principle and method of work.

. . . . . .

Tendencies to treat the Negro people as mere victims of oppression, without seeing their unique positive and revolutionary role in the struggle against capitalist reaction are a patronizing form of white chauvinism.

WHAT IS COMMUNISM?

. . . . . .

By EARL BROWDER

General Secretary, Communist Party of the U. S. A.

. . . . . .

CHAPTER IX

. . . . . .

We must unite in defense of the Soviet Union, that bulwark of peace and socialism.

The time has come for the militant Socialists to take a clear stand on the question of the Soviet Union. A situation can develop tomorrow where the Nazis and the Japanese imperialists will simultaneously attack the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. If the Socialists adopt a position of neutrality, they will be helping the warmakers as well as giving indirect aid to the reactionaries in America, who will support this imperialist war against the Soviet Union with munitions and money, behind the smoke-screen of the slogan: Keep America Out of the War. A defeat for the Soviet Union would not merely be the defeat of the Russian workers and peasants. It would be the defeat of the workers in all countries, including the United States. It would mean the reign of capitalist reaction and barbarism for generations. That is why every anti-fascist, every Socialist, must defend the Soviet Union. Its fight is their fight. Its defense is their defense. Its victory speeds up the victory of socialism in all countries.

May Day is the day when the workers of the world demonstrate their international solidarity. On this day they close ranks and press forward to new struggles.

DEFENSE OF THE SOVIET UNION

*Let us unite with the toilers of the whole world to keep America out of war by keeping war out of the world, to save humanity from the horrors of a new world slaughter. FOSTER AND FORD ARE CHEERED BY HUGE CROWD—GREETINGS SENT JOSEPH STALIN—KRUMBEIN PRESIDES—CACCHIONE, CROSBIE, BEGUN SPEAK

All the world loves a winner.

More than 20,000 people, gathered at Madison Square Garden Saturday night prayed that. They cheered, sang and yelled themselves hoarse as all Americans do when they see any underdog fight up a rocky road to the top.

The winner was the Soviet Union—the occasion the tribute paid by its American friends on the 20th anniversary of the victory of Socialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

3,000 New Members

Great red and white signs, with letters three feet high stretched across the crowded galleries. Perfectly fitting the occasion was the one reading: "For Unity and Collaboration Between the People of the U. S. A. and the Soviet Union."

Thousands, turned away at 8 o'clock from the packed hall, braved the rain outside and cheered the speakers and unseen spectacle of which they were a part. The initiation and pledge, read by Charles Krumbein to 3,000 new members of the Communist Party, rolled out over the loud speakers in one of the most impressive ceremonies of the entire evening.

The recruits, standing proudly at attention as Krumbein read the pledge of loyalty to the Soviet Union, for a constant struggle to defeat fascism, a merciless struggle against Trotzkyism and for victory of the People's Front and Socialism.

APRIL 27, 1949

THE MARXIST POSITION TOWARD WAR

I. Imperialism and War

. . . . . .

II. Marxists Hold that there are Two Kinds of War—Just and Unjust Wars

A. In our attitude toward war, we differ in principle from pacifists and petty bourgeois humanitarians. We support just wars and oppose unjust wars.

. . . . . .

1—We support just wars—wars waged in defense against imperialist aggressions; wars to liberate people from enslavement; wars of colonial and dependent countries for independence. Such just wars are fundamentally in the interests of the working class and nation.

2—We oppose unjust wars; all wars for conquest and exploitation. We rally the working class and the people to fight unjust wars as destructive of the interests of the working class and the nation.

. . . . . .

IV. World War II was Just War

. . . . . .

1—The post-war world was split by the U.S. and Britain into two camps—the camp of imperialism and fascism under the leadership of American imperialism and the camp of democracy, national freedom and peace, headed by the USSR.

ECONOMIC SUCCESSES IN THE PEOPLE'S DEMOCRACIES

• • • • • • • • • • •

A comparison of the economic successes achieved by the People's Democracies in a very short period of their history with the extremely difficult position of the working people in the capitalist countries constitutes a terrible indictment of American imperialism and of the whole decaying capitalist system. It is a call rallying the working people the world over for the struggle for peace, against the imperialist criminals, for the fight for Socialism.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

Burning Questions of Our Movement

By V. I. Lenin

Copyright, 1929, by

International Publishers Co., Inc.

Editor's Foreword

What Is To Be Done? is one of Lenin's outstanding revolutionary writings. It has long been a classic in its field. The first generation of Russian Bolsheviks, which includes many of the present Soviet leaders, have been brought up on this brilliant exposition of the policies and tactics of the revolutionary Socialist movement. Its uniqueness in Russian Marxist literature is due to the way it treats the role of the Party in the revolutionary struggle—a subject to which slight attention was paid up to that time. The subtitle, "Burning Questions of Our Movement," which Lenin gave to this brochure, indicates how deeply he felt the need of calling attention to the problem of organisation.

What were these "burning questions" which Lenin, soon after his return from Siberian exile, posed and to which he gave answers, first in articles in the Iskra ("The Urgent Tasks of Our Movement," December, 1900; "Where To Begin," May, 1901)* and finally developed in What Is To Be Done?, published in March, 1902†.

Ideologically, Marxism had won a decisive victory over Populism which exercised hegemony among advanced Russian society and revolutionary intelligentsia during the seventies and eighties. In his early writings Lenin himself carried on sharp polemics against Populist and other utopian perversions of Socialism, thereby greatly contributing to the Marxist literary campaign designed to check their influence on the nascent revolutionary workers' movement.

The Marxist movement at that time suffered, however, from two basic weaknesses. The first was the tendency prevalent in a section of the movement and characterised as Economism, which maintained that the economic struggles of the workers for the improvement of their immediate working and living conditions should be the chief preoccupation of the labor movement. The struggle against tsarism, the Economists proposed to leave to the liberal bourgeoisie to whom they ascribed a monopoly in that field. Lenin and other revolutionary Socialists could not but consider such a policy as a travesty on Marxism, as a complete break with the nature and aims of the revolutionary labor movement, the very essence of which, they held, was the struggle for power. Lenin goes hammer and tongs after all those who attempt to separate the struggle against the tsarist government from that against the capitalists, and brands the pure and simple trade unionism of the Economists as thoroughly reactionary and inimical to the interests of the workers.

The second weakness which Lenin vigorously attacks in this study is the question of organisation. He raises this problem to the political importance it deserves and makes an impassioned appeal to scrap the existing form of organisation and build a theoretically sound party, revolutionary in purpose and national in scope. Although formally organised into a party a few years before (1898), the Marxist movement consisted of little more than small circles, each carrying on a more or less independent existence and engaging in sporadic and planless activities. This loose aggregation of revolutionists, carrying on their work in primitive, handicraft fashion, and depending on the spontaneity of the masses, could not, according to Lénin, become the organiser and leader of the revolutionary struggles which were rapidly developing and which were involving larger and larger masses of workers. Only a centralised party, working according to a carefully prepared plan, with each member assigned a specific task for which he is to be held accountable, could successfully lead the Russian workingclass in the struggle against capitalist exploitation and tsarist rule.

"If we have a strongly organised party, a single strike may grow into a political demonstration, into a political victory over the government," Lenin wrote sometime before he began to work on What Is To Be Done? Obviously, the party as he conceived it, had to consist of members "who shall devote to the revolution not only their spare evenings, but the whole of their lives."

Written thirty years ago, What Is To Be Done? still retains its freshness because of the revolutionary enthusiasm which permeates its pages and the great lessons it has today for the workers in capitalist countries who would build their revolutionary parties after the pattern fashioned by Lenin during the formative period of the Bolshevik Party.

THE PRIMITIVENESS OF THE ECONOMISTS AND THE ORGANISATION OF REVOLUTIONISTS

* * * * * * * * * * *

C. ORGANISATION OF WORKERS, AND ORGANISATION OF REVOLUTIONISTS

* * * * * * * * * * *

The workers' organisations must in the first place be trade organisations; secondly, they must be as wide as possible; and thirdly, they must be as public as conditions will allow (here, of course, I have only autocratic Russia in mind). On the other hand, the organisations of revolutionists must be comprised first and foremost of people whose profession is that of revolutionists (that is why I speak of organisations of revolutionists, meaning revolutionary Social-Democrats). As this is the common feature of the members of such an organisation, all distinctions as between workers and intellectuals, and certainly distinctions of trade and profession, must be dropped. Such an organisation must of necessity be not too extensive and as secret as possible. Let us examine this three-fold distinction.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The workers' organisations for carrying on the economic struggle should be trade-union organisations; every Social-Democratic worker should, as far as possible, support and actively work inside these organisations. That is true. But it would be far from being to our interest to demand that only Social-Democrats be eligible for membership in the trade unions. The only effect of this, if it were attempted, would be to restrict our influence over the masses. Let every worker who understands the necessity for organisation, in order to carry on the struggle against the employers and the government, join the trade unions. The very objects of the trade unions would be unattainable unless they united all who have attained at least this elementary level of understanding, and unless they were extremely wide organisations. The wider these organisations are, the wider our influence over them will be. They will then be influenced not only by the "spontaneous" development of the economic struggle, but also by the direct and conscious action of the Socialists on their comrades in the unions. But a wide organisation cannot be a strictly secret organisation (since the latter demands far greater training than is required for the economic struggle). How is the contradiction between the necessity for a large membership and the necessity for strictly secret methods to be reconciled? How are we to make the trade unions as public as possible? Generally speaking, there are perhaps only two ways to this end: Either the trade unions become legalised (which in some countries precedes the legalisation of the Socialist and political unions), or the organisation is kept a secret one, but so "free" and "loose" that the need for secret methods become almost negligible as far as the mass of the members are concerned.

* * * * * * * * * *

Trade-union organisations may not only be of tremendous value in developing and consolidating the economic struggle, but may also become a very useful auxiliary to the political, agitational and revolutionary organisations.

* * * * * * * * * *

I could go on analysing the rules, but I think that what has been said will suffice. A small, compact core, consisting of reliable, experienced and hardened workers, with responsible agents in the principal districts and connected by all the rules of strict secrecy with the organisations of revolutionists, can, with the wide support of the masses and without an elaborate set of rules, perform all the functions of a trade-union organisation, and perform them, moreover, in the manner Social-Democrats desire. Only in this way can we secure the consolidation and development of a Social-Democratic trade-union movement, in spite of the gendarmes.

* * * * * * * * * *

"A dozen wise men can be more easily caught than a hundred fools!" This wonderful truth (which the hundred fools will applaud) appears obvious only because in the very midst of the argument you have skipped from one question to another. You began by talking, and continued to talk, of catching a "committee," of catching an "organisation," and now you skip to the question of getting hold of the "roots" of the movement in the "depths." The fact is, of course, that our movement cannot be caught precisely because it has hundreds and hundreds of thousands of roots deep down among the masses, but that is not the point we are discussing. As far as "roots in the depths" are concerned, we cannot be "caught" even now, in spite of all our primitiveness; but, we all complain, and cannot but complain, of the ease with which the organisations can be caught, with the result that it is impossible to maintain continuity in the movement. If you agree to discuss the question of catching the organisations, and to stick to that question, then I assert that it is far more difficult to catch ten wise men than it is to catch a hundred fools.

The centralisation of the more secret functions in an organisation of revolutionists will not diminish, but rather increase the extent and the quality of the activity of a large number of other organisations intended for wide membership and which, therefore, can be as loose and as public as possible, for example, trade unions, workers' circles for self-education, and the reading of illegal literature, and Socialist, and also democratic, circles for all other sections of the population, etc., etc. We must have as large a number as possible of such organisations having the widest possible variety of functions, but it is absurd and dangerous to confuse these with organisations of revolutionists, to erase the line of demarcation between them, to dim still more the already incredibly hazy appreciation by the masses that to "serve" the mass movement we must have people who will devote themselves exclusively to Social-Democratic activities, and that such people must train themselves patiently and steadfastly to be professional revolutionists.

Aye, this consciousness has become incredibly dim. The most grievous sin we have committed in regard to organisation is that by our primitiveness we have lowered the prestige of revolutionists in Russia. A man who is weak and vacillating on theoretical questions, who has a narrow outlook, who makes excuses for his own slackness on the ground that the masses are awakening spontaneously, who resembles a trade-union secretary more than a people's tribune, who is unable to conceive a broad and bold plan, who is incapable of inspiring even his enemies with respect for himself, and who is inexperienced and clumsy in his own professional art—the art of combating the political police—such a man is not a revolutionist but a hopeless amateur!

AUGUST 2-6, 1948

SPECIAL CONVENTION ISSUE

SEPTEMBER, 1948

FOR A FIGHTING PARTY ROOTED AMONG THE INDUSTRIAL WORKERS!*

By HENRY WINSTON

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE NEED OF A POLICY OF INDUSTRIAL CONCENTRATION

* * * * * * * * * * *

The central task before the Party is the fight for shifting the main base of our Party to the working class. This cannot be done unless we turn the face of the entire Party to the workers in the factories. There is already a new awareness in our entire Party of this urgent task. Every single state convention, and scores of comrades in the pre-Convention discussion, have given major attention to this question. We must transform this new awareness into deeds.

---

* The report to the Convention on the organizational and ideological tasks of the C.P.U.S.A.

How To Apply the Concentration Policy

What is the essence of a concentration policy?

First of all, it requires a fundamental understanding of the role of the workers in the basic industries in relation to the working class and the life of the country as a whole. It is precisely these workers employed in the huge plants by the tens of thousands who, as Lenin pointed out, become educated to understand the need for unity, collective action and solidarity by the very process of large-scale production itself. One cannot conceive of successfully building the Progressive Party, of organizing an effective fight against the Draft, or in defense of civil liberties, a successful fight against war and fascism, unless this section of the working class is fully mobilized. And, of course, one cannot speak of winning the American workers for Socialism without winning the majority of this section of the working class. It is necessary to permeate the entire Party with this consciousness.

Secondly, such a policy requires the selection of the points of concentration where a base must be secured, if we are to set in motion the entire labor movement. This means knowing which districts must be given major national attention, which industries are key and what plants are decisive.

. . . . . .

While we must strengthen the Party in all basic industries, we must particularly select for major concentration such industries as steel, auto, mining, maritime, electrical and railroad.

. . . . . .

We must frankly say that the failure to secure adequate results in our concentration work in the last three years is due, in the main, to an underestimation in practice of the vanguard role of the Party. In practice we concerned ourselves much more with specific policy and tactical questions of the unions, of relationship to top bodies, rather than to questions of building a base below to insure correct policies and tactics. What was incorrect? The separation of the building of the Party from the solution of questions of policy! What must not be forgotten is that it is not enough to have a correct policy in the industries, but in addition the organized strength of the Party must be thrown into the key points of concentration. From now on a drastic change must be made. Questions of policy and tactical line must always be related to the forces required to carry out the policy. This will demand a systematic and constant political check-up of our strength in the concentration areas; first, by the political bodies of the Party; and, secondly, through greater coordination of all departments and, most important, a fusion of the work of trade-union and organizational personnel.

* * * * * * * * * *

What Kind of Party Are We Building?

* * * * * * * * * *

There is a great stirring among the youth, who are the first to be hit by Wall Street's drive toward war and fascism. Reaction is leaving no stone unturned to win the youth for its reactionary program. There are numerous instances indicating that reactionary forces have been able to misdirect the youth (as, for instance, in some unions, in inspiring hoodlum acts, etc.), because of the absence of decisive leadership in the fight for the youth. Hence, our Party must not only considerably intensify its activity among the youth, particularly among the young workers in industry and among the youth in the Negro communities, but we must place as a central task the recruiting of substantial numbers of young Americans into our ranks in the coming months.

* * * * * * * * * *

For a Consistent Cadre Policy

* * * * * * * * * *

We do not shrink from the hammer blows of reaction. Under them we will steel our Party in Communist discipline, loyalty, and unity, develop its Marxist-Leninist understanding, and temper our cadres and leadership. Sharing the hardships and struggles of America's working people, we will root our Party ever deeper in the American working-class soil from which it sprang.

As the vanguard Party of the American working class we take our place in the front line of battle, conscious of our responsibility to all Americans who struggle for peace, democracy, economic security, and social progress. We hold aloft the banner of our conviction that the American working people have the capacity, means, and allies to curb and defeat the fascists and warmongers, and, eventually, to advance toward the Socialist reorganization of society, which will forever end the dangers of fascism, crises, and war—the misery of exploitation and oppression. We face the oncoming struggles with confidence in our people, our class, and our Party.

For a United-Front Policy Among the Jewish People—Sharpen the Struggle Against Bourgeois Nationalism*

By John Williamson

. . . . . .

All the leading comrades in Jewish work, including those that have participated in our meetings, have expressed full support of the Party line of exposure and struggle against American imperialism and its policies of world domination, war and fascist reaction; of our line for organizing a broad united-front of the American people for peace, against fascism, for curbing the trusts, and for achieving American-Soviet friendship.

. . . . . .

The Struggle Against Bourgeois Nationalism

. . . . . .

While developing this educational campaign, we must make it clear that agreement on the Soviet Union's Socialist solution of the Jewish question is not a prerequisite for any group of Jewish workers or other taking joint action with us on the burning issues confronting the Jewish people here in the United States. In fact, because we live in capitalist America, we must emphasize the fight for peace and against fascist reaction, as it relates to the Jewish masses in the U.S.A. and to Israel as a state. Regardless of differences on other questions, we should develop a broad protest campaign against the restoration of the Nazis to posts of government in Germany and demand real denazification in Germany; we must especially develop in our country the broadest struggle against anti-Semitism in all its manifestations.

Sectarianism: Main Barrier to Jewish Working Masses

Traditionally, Social-Democracy has been and is a main instrument of the imperialist bourgeoisie utilized among the Jewish workers and trade unionists to confuse, divide and mislead. Today, the Dubinsky-Forward Social-Democratic group are the most vicious anti-Soviet and pro-imperialist forces among the Jewish workers. There is a growing collaboration between these Social-Democratic labor leaders and the various bourgeois-nationalist organizations, such as the Zionists.

* A Report, slightly abridged, delivered on May 3, 1950, in behalf of the National Committee, at a conference of leading comrades engaged in activity among the Jewish people.

The defeat and isolation of the reactionary Jewish Social-Democrats among the workers and in the trade unions is an indispensable task in making it possible for the Jewish workers to lead the Jewish people in struggle. While effective propaganda and agitation are a necessary part of this task, the decisive thing is to develop joint struggles of Jewish workers, irrespective of what trade unions they belong to, on the burning issues of the day.

6. The Victory of the Revolution in One County as an Aid and Instrument for Accelerating the Victory of the Proletariat in All Countries

* * * * * * * * * * *

Most probably, the world revolution will develop along the line of a series of new countries dropping out of the system of the imperialist countries as a result of revolution, while the proletarians of these countries will be supported by the proletariat of the imperialist states. We see that the first country to break away, the first country to win, is already supported by the workers and toiling masses of other countries. Without this support it could not maintain itself. Beyond a doubt, this support will grow and become stronger and stronger. But it is likewise beyond a doubt that the very development of the world revolution, the very process of the breaking away of a number of new countries from imperialism, will be more rapid and more thorough, the more thoroughly socialism fortifies itself in the first victorious country, the faster this country is transformed into the basis for the further unfolding of the world revolution, into the lever for the further disintegration of imperialism.

If the postulate that the final victory of socialism in the first country to emancipate itself is impossible without the combined efforts of the proletarians of several countries is true, then it is just as true that the world revolution will develop the more rapidly and thoroughly, the more effective the assistance rendered by the first socialist country to the workers and toiling masses of all other countries will be.

By what should this assistance be expressed?

It should be expressed, first, by the victorious country achieving "the utmost possible in one country for the development, support and stirring up of the revolution in all countries." (Proletarian Revolution and Renegade Kautsky, Chap. VII, "What Is Internationalism?")

Second, it should be expressed by the "victorious proletariat" of one country, "after it has expropriated the capitalists and organized its socialist production at home, rising . . . against the rest of the capitalist world, attracting to itself the oppressed classes of other countries, raising insurrection in them against the capitalists, acting in case of need even with military force against the exploiting classes and their states." ("The United States of Europe Slogan," Collected Works, Vol. XVIII.)

The characteristic feature of the assistance given by the victorious country is that it not only hastens the victory of the proletarians of other countries, but likewise guarantees, by facilitating this victory, the final victory of socialism in the first victorious country.

The most probable thing is that, side by side with the centers of imperialism in separate capitalist countries and in the systems of these countries throughout the world, centers of socialism will be created, in the course of the world revolution, in separate soviet countries and systems of these centers throughout the world, and the struggle between these two systems will constitute the history of the development of the revolution:

For—says Lenin—the free amalgamation of nations in socialism is impossible without a more or less prolonged and stubborn struggle by the socialist republics against the backward states. (Ibid.)

The world significance of the October Revolution lies not only in its constituting a start made by one country in the work of breaking through the system of imperialism and the creation of the first land of socialism in the ocean of imperialist countries, but likewise in its constituting the first stage in the world revolution and a mighty basis for its further development.

Therefore, those who, forgetting the international character of the October Revolution, declare the victory of socialism in one country to be purely national and only a national phenomenon, are wrong. And those too who, although bearing in mind the international character of the October Revolution, are inclined to regard this revolution as something passive, merely destined to accept help from without, are equally wrong. As a matter of fact not only does the October Revolution need support from the revolutionary movement of other countries, but revolution in those countries needs the support of the October Revolution in order to accelerate and advance the cause of overthrowing world imperialism.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF THE PROLETARIAT

* * * * * * * * * * *

Copyright, 1936

INTERNATIONAL PUBLISHERS CO., INC.

* * * * * * * * * * *

2. Three Main Aspects of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

A. Stalin on the Main Tasks of the Proletarian Revolution and the Three Aspects of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat

* * * * * * * * * * *

There still remained (says Lenin) two tasks of enormous difficulty, the solution of which could, under no circumstances, be the same triumphal procession that our revolution was. . . .(Ibid.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

The second enormous difficulty was . . . the international question. If we were able to cope so easily with Kerensky's bands, if we so easily established our power, if the decree on the socialization of the land, and on workers' control, was secured without the slightest difficulty—if we obtained all this so easily it was only because for a brief space of time a fortunate combination of circumstances protected us from international imperialism. International imperialism, with all the might of its capital and its highly organized military technique, which represents a real force, a real fortress of international capital, could under no circumstances, under no possible conditions, live side by side with the Soviet republic, both because of its objective situation and because of the economic interests of the capitalist class which was incorporated in it, could not do this because of commercial ties and of international financial relationships.

A conflict is inevitable. This is the greatest difficulty of the Russian revolution, its greatest historical problem: the necessity to solve international problems, the necessity to call forth the world revolution. (Ibid., p. 317.)

Such is the inner character and the basic idea of the proletarian revolution.

Can such a radical transformation of the old bourgeois system of society be achieved without a violent revolution, without the dictatorship of the proletariat?

Obviously not. To think that such a revolution can be carried out peacefully within the framework of bourgeois democracy, which is adapted to the domination of the bourgeoisie, means one of two things. It means either madness, and the loss of normal human understanding, or else an open and gross repudiation of the proletarian revolution. . .

* * * * * * * * * * *

Pointing to one of the most important aims of the dictatorship, namely, the suppression of the exploiters, Lenin states:

The scientific concept, dictatorship, means nothing more nor less than power that directly rests on violence, that is not limited by any laws or restricted by any absolute rules. . . . Dictatorship means—note this once and for all, Messrs. Cadets *—unlimited power, resting on violence and not on law. During civil war, victorious power can only be dictatorship. (Collected Works, Russian edition, Vol. XXV, pp. 436 and 444.)

But, of course, the dictatorship of the proletariat does not merely mean violence, although there is no dictatorship without violence.

Dictatorship (says Lenin) does not mean violence alone, although it is impossible without violence. It likewise signifies a higher organization of labor than that which previously existed. (Collected Works, Russian edition, Vol. XXIV, p. 305.)

The dictatorship of the proletariat . . . is not merely the use of violence against the exploiters, and is not even mainly the use of violence. The economic basis of this revolutionary violence, the guarantee of its vitality and success, is that the proletariat represents and introduces a higher type of social organization of labor compared with capitalism. That is the essential point. This is the source of the strength of Communism and the guarantee of its inevitable complete victory. (Ibid., p. 335.)

* The Constitutional Democrats.—Ed.

Its quintessence (i.e., of the dictatorship—J. S.) lies in the organization and discipline of the advanced detachment of the toilers, of its vanguard, its sole leader, the proletariat. Its aim is to establish socialism, to put an end to the division of society into classes, to make all members of society toilers, to remove the soil for the exploitation of man by man.

IMPERIALISM

SESSION I—THE MONOPOLY STAGE OF CAPITALISM

I. Imperialism as defined by Lenin is characterized by (a) concentration of industry and banking (b) dominance of finance capital (c) vast export of capital (d) participation in economic division of the world and (e) territorial division of world. (See Lenin's Imperialism, Chapter 7)

* * * * * * * * * *

IV. Factors Behind American Imperialist Expansion Today:

A. Tremendous expansion of American industry during World War II—piling up of huge surplus capital, forces U. S. toward drive to control world markets and dispose of surplus production and idle capital.

B. Fear of economic crises leads to huge military expenditures to bolster economy, with resulting foreign policy.

C. Weakness of anti-imperialist united front in U. S. and corruption of top circles of labor leaders (AFL and CIO) who support imperialist drive.

D. In addition to economic drive, U.S. imperialist expansion aims at arresting rising Socialist strength and suppressing Soviet Union and democratic, working-class movements throughout world. Inability to achieve this by "atom-bomb diplomacy" and other means, adds to imperialist desperation and increased pressure for World War III.

E. Weakened capitalist competitors (Great Britain, France) gives U. S. opportunity to "take over" markets and economically and politically dominate all other capitalist countries.

III. The struggle for socialism in the present period:

(Quotes from Wm. Z. Foster, in Party brief for New York trial)

A. New factors to be evaluated in present period:

1. Changed relationship of forces on world scale and role of Soviet Union.

2. United front struggle against fascism.

3. Development of the united and people's front governments.

* * * * * * * * * * *

SESSION 9—STRATEGY AND TACTICS

* * * * * * * * * * *

III. Tactics of Seventh World Congress, Communist International (1935)

A. Deepening of general crisis of capitalism and growth of fascism on one hand, and beginnings of broad anti-fascist movements on the other hand in certain countries such as France, resulted in development of new tactical orientation:

1. To direct main blows and concentrate all forces for struggle against the main enemy of humanity, fascism.

2. Tasks of working-class assume new character—forms of united front and people's front develop.

a. To develop united front—unity of working-class—labor unity.

b. To develop people's front—unity of broad coalition of all opponents of fascism and reaction.

3. To develop on an international scale, world-wide peace movement against menace of fascist aggression and war, with U.S.S.R. in leadership.

B. Examples of tactical line in operation:

—Election of people's front governments in France and Spain in 1936.

—Collective security policy advocated by Soviet Union during 1930's.

—World War II actually fought out on basis of fundamental anti-fascist unity line of 7th World Congress.

—After WW II election of national unity coalition governments in Europe.

—Development of coalition people's governments in Eastern Europe into New Democracies traveling "new route to Socialism."

—Formation of United Nations, World Federation of Trade Unions, other international peace moves in the period following end of World War II.

IV. Strategy and Tactics in Present Period:

A. Strategic objective remains the same—abolition of capitalism and achievement of socialism.

B. Tactical line of united front and people's coalition developed still further in this period.

New factors in situation:

—world split into two camps—imperialist and democratic.

—capitalists, with backing of Wall Street undertaking reactionary offensive against all working-class movements.

—danger of war from American imperialist expansion drive.

YOUR LEGAL RIGHTS

Violations of civil rights by police, prosecutors and legislative committees are on the increase. Racial and political minorities, non-citizens and trade unionists are the main victims. The CIVIL RIGHTS CONGRESS exists to protect you against such attacks. Call us when you have civil rights troubles, for bail, for legal assistance.

ARREST

1. If a policeman arrests you, go along, but insist on knowing what the arrest is for. Make a note of his name or number.

2. GIVE NO STATEMENT, WRITTEN OR ORAL, TO ANYONE—POLICEMAN, DISTRICT ATTORNEY, OR INVESTIGATOR.

3. When you get to the police station, find out the charge against you. Call your family, your lawyer, or CIVIL RIGHTS CONGRESS for bail. The police are required to let you telephone, or to send an officer for an attorney at your request.

IN COURT

1. You have the right to be brought before a judge at the earliest possible time. If arrested at night, this means the next morning.

2. If you have not yet seen an attorney, you have a right to a delay of the court hearing in order to get an attorney.

3. If the judge refuses to grant a delay, or you cannot reach an attorney, plead "Not Guilty" and demand a jury trial.

SUBPOENAS

When you receive a subpoena, no matter what time it orders you to appear, you have a right to consult a lawyer or CIVIL RIGHTS CONGRESS before appearing. It is best to do so.

AT HOME

Don't let any officer or investigator into your home unless he has a search warrant. They have been known to "plant" things to be used against you.

DEPORTATION

If a DEPORTATION WARRANT IS SERVED ON YOU, say nothing, no matter what arguments or promises are used. GET A LAWYER AND BAIL.

IF THE F.B.I. COMES

Don't let F.B.I. men in your door, nor talk with them. They usually travel in pairs, are polite, and "just want to talk with you." Their real purpose is to make a stool-pigeon of you against your family, friends, neighbors, or union brothers. DON'T TALK WITH THEM.

THE SEVENTH WORLD CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

(Full Report)

* * * * * * * * * * *

TO COMRADE STALIN, LEADER, TEACHER, AND FRIEND OF THE PROLETARIAT AND OPPRESSED OF THE WHOLE WORLD

In the name of millions of fighters of the world proletarian revolution, in the name of the toilers of all lands, we address ourselves to you. Comrade Stalin, our leader, faithful continuer of the work of Marx, Engels and Lenin, to you who, together with Lenin, forged out a party of a new type, the Party of the Bolsheviks, the Party which led to the triumph of the great October proletarian Revolution, to the victory of socialism in the U.S.S.R. We address ourselves to you, beloved leader of the whole international proletariat and of all the oppressed, with warmest greetings.

More than ten years have passed since the day when we lost Lenin, this giant of revolutionary thought and action, the unforgettable leader of the world revolution. A gigantic task fell to you, Comrade Stalin—to take your place at the helm of the struggle for the liberation of the whole of toiling humanity.

Under your leadership Socialism has triumphed in the U.S.S.R., creating an impregnable basis for the cause of the world proletarian revolution. At the tomb of Lenin, you took an oath to consolidate and extend the alliance of the toilers of the whole world—the Communist International—and the Communists of all countries, in an heroic struggle under your leadership, are fulfilling this oath.

Now, when the capitalist world is entering a new cycle of revolutions and wars, the proletariat, in contradistinction to its situation in the first cycle of revolutions and wars, possesses the surest guarantee of definite victory—the powerful Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, the country of victorious Socialism and the Communist International, the monolithic world party of Communism.

Under your leadership, the U.S.S.R. has become an impregnable stronghold of the Socialist Revolution, a stronghold of the fight against fascism and reaction, against war. Let the bourgeois gentlemen attempt to-day to ask the people of the world if they want peace or war, fascism or socialism. The peoples of the world do not want war, do not want fascism. They are turning more and more towards the U.S.S.R., fixing on you, Comrade Stalin, the leader of the toilers in all countries, a gaze full of hope and love.

The victory of socialism in the U.S.S.R. has strengthened the authority of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the eyes of millions of toilers, has given a tremendous force to the programme, the strategy and the tactics of the Communist International. The victory of Socialism in the U.S.S.R. opens up a new phase in the world proletarian revolution.

Our heroic fighters in Germany, in China, in Japan, in Spain, in Poland, in Italy and in other countries, are leading the masses to the struggle, with your name, Comrade Stalin, in their hearts.

The victory of Socialism in the U.S.S.R. is the great victory of Communism over reformism, or the Communist International over the collapsing Second International.

You have taught us and are teaching us that a policy based on principles is the only correct policy. Thanks to its unswerving application of Bolshevist policy the Communist International has achieved wonderful unity and firmness in its ranks. Comrade Stalin, in your struggle against the counter-revolutionary Trotskyites-Zinovievites, in the struggle against the Right and "Left" opportunists, you have defended the Marxist-Leninist doctrine, and have developed this doctrine under the conditions of the new phase of the world revolution which will live in history as the epoch of Stalin.

You have taught and are teaching us Communists the Bolshevik art of uniting unshakable fidelity to principles with closest contact with the masses, irreconcilable revolutionary spirit, and the necessary flexibility and ability to manœuvre.

Following your teachings, the Communist Parties will consolidate their connections on all sides with the masses, they will rouse and lead the millions of toilers, will organise a wide united proletarian front, will weld together the people's front against fascism and war, the front of imperialist struggle in the colonial and semi-colonial countries.

The 7th World Congress of the Communist International, in the name of 65 Communist Parties, assures you, Comrade Stalin, that the Communists will always and everywhere be faithful to the end to the great and invincible ban- ner of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin. Under this banner Communism will triumph throughout the world.

—VII. World Congress of the Communist International.

(Tremendous Applause. The delegates raise cheers for Comrade Stalin. Thereupon the Session was closed.)

THE CONCLUSION OF THE SEVENTH WORLD CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL

(Leading Article in "Pravda," August 21, 1935.)

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Congress took place under the sign of proletarian unity in the struggle against fascism and against the menace of imperialist war. It laid the basis for such a far reaching mobilisation of the forces of all toilers for the struggle against capitalism as has never existed in the history of the working-class struggle. The Congress decided upon a turn in the tactics of the Communist International, and was a Congress of genuine Bolshevik self-criticism and of strengthening of the leadership of the Communist International and its sections. Finally, the Congress demonstrated the triumph of unity between the proletariat of the land of victorious socialism, the Soviet Union, and the proletariat of the capitalist world which is fighting for its liberation.

The enthusiastic welcome with which the Congress greeted the report of Comrade Manuilsky upon the triumphs of socialist construction in the Soviet Union, which have been accomplished under the leadership of Comrade Stalin, leader of our peoples, expressed love and sympathy which animates the workers of the world towards the Soviet land, the fatherland of the International proletariat.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The sections of the Comintern have grown and become stronger. Since the Sixth World Congress of the Comintern, the membership of the Communist World Party has increased from 1,676,000 to 3,148,000, of which, despite repression and bloody terror, the numbers in the capitalist countries have grown from 445,300 to 758,500. The number of parties affiliated to the Comintern has grown, since the last Congress, from 65 to 76. The total membership of the Communist Parties and the Young Communist Leagues (including the C.P.S.U. and the Y.C.L.S.U.) was 3,835,000 at the Sixth Congress, and is 6,800,000 at the Seventh.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Seventh Congress of the Comintern has performed a mighty task. Its decisions will serve as guiding star in the forthcoming struggles of the working class who, under the leadership of the Communist International, will sweep fascism and capitalism off the face of the earth.

THE BOLSHEVIZATION OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES IN THE STRUGGLE AGAINST THE IMPERIALIST WAR

* * * * * * * * * * *

By GENE DENNIS

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Communist Party alone of all American political parties and labor organizations was the first to analyze the imperialist character of the war. We were the first to proclaim that the war is a predatory and unjust war between rival imperialist powers for a new redivision of the earth, for world domination—that it is a war which the working class and toiling people should not and cannot support.

* * * * * * * * * *

In line with this we have exposed and are organizing the working people to resist firmly the policies of the economic royalists and the government which are promoting America's entry into the war on the side of the Anglo-French imperialists, under conditions and at a time most favorable to the American bourgeoisie, and which include as a central objective the organization of a new anti-Soviet war front and the transformation of the imperialist war into a united imperialist military crusade against the U.S.S.R.

* * * * * * * * * * *

In accordance with this fundamentally changed situation, our Party effected a tactical reorientation in order that the working class, including its Communist vanguard, could solve the new tasks placed before it. Here the central question was and is that of uniting the working class and its allies, the toiling farmers and exploited city middle class, under proletarian leadership, against the imperialist war, reaction and capitalist exploitation. That is why our Party brought forward the need of, and is waging today a consistent struggle for, forging working class unity and a broad people's front movement in a new way. For today, the united proletarian front can only be achieved successfully if working class unity is built primarily from below, on a class struggle basis, and is consistently directed against the imperialist war and capitalist reaction, against the bourgeoisie and against the agents of and capitulators to imperialism within the labor movement. This requires in the first place, as emphasized by our Party, a sharper and more resolute struggle against the leaders, ideology and influence of Social-Democratism within the ranks of labor.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Moreover, our Party, on the whole, is meeting the sharpening attacks on its rights and legality, firmly and courageously, with the entire Party from top to bottom united around its national leadership and the Communist International more solidly and staunchly than ever before.

* * * * * * * * * * *

III

What is needed to ensure the further and most rapid Bolshevization of our Party? This is to master completely the principles of Marxism-Leninism which have exercised and played the guiding role in the development and growing political maturity of our Party. These are the principles which characterize the history and work of the glorious Bolshevik Party of Lenin and Stalin and are set forth by Comrade Stalin in the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. These are the principles outlined by Stalin in *Pravda in 1925 in an article dealing with Bolshevization. In this article, Stalin emphasized the following "basic conditions without which the Bolshevization of the Communist Parties is impossible in general":

* Quoted by Georgi Dimitroff in The Communist International, No. 1, 1940, p. 18.

* * * * * * * * * *

"7. The Party must be able in its work to combine an irreconcilable revolutionary spirit (not to be confused with revolutionary adventurism!) with the maximum flexibility and maneuvering ability (not to be confused with opportunism!), without which it is impossible for the Party to master all forms of struggle and organization, to link up the day-to-day interests of the proletariat with the fundamental interests of the proletarian revolution, and to combine the legal struggle with the illegal struggle."

This signifies that every Party organization should strive to link up more effectively its everyday mass work in defense of the immediate economic and political demands of the workers and toilers with the broadest propaganda and mass education for our socialist aims and principles. This requires that the entire Party, in carrying out its policies and tactics, should subbornly combat all Right and "Left" opportunist tendencies and mistakes, and should learn how to apply in all spheres of its mass activity the adherence to principles and the tactical skill in maneuvering, such as our comrades have displayed in connection with the recent developments in the broad youth movement. This further necessitates a more flexible approach and sustained attention to the problems of readjusting the organizational forms and methods of work of the Party to the changing situation, to utilizing and exploring every medium and opportunity in the localities, states, and nationally for helping advance the movement for a mass anti-war, farmer-labor party; to developing new forms and avenues for helping organize the progressive movement within the A. F. of L.

* * * * * * * * * *

"11. The Party must establish iron proletarian discipline, based on ideological unanimity, clarity as to the aims of the movement, coordination of practical actions and an attitude of clear understanding on the part of the general membership towards the aims of the Party."

We already have a high degree of political unity and firm discipline in our Party. In fact, our Party is more solidly knit and united than ever before. But as recent experience has shown, such as in the days immediately following the signing of the Soviet-German Non-Aggression Pact, this unity, to a considerable degree, while based upon Party loyalty is not always combined with sufficient political understanding of the fundamental principles of Marxism-Leninism and of the tactical line of the Party. Therefore an essential prerequisite for the further development of the monolithic unity of our Party is to strengthen the working class discipline and unity of action of our Party on the basis of strengthening our Party's ideological and political work and Marxist-Leninist educational activities.

WORKING CLASS AND THE WAR

By William Z. Foster

The reactionary leaders of the AFL, CIO and independent unions have committed the labor movement and the working class not only to support the Korean war, but also to the perspective of an inevitable third world war. They have identified themselves completely with the war program of American imperialism, and are trying to do the same thing for the workers in general. The labor bureaucrats have become the labor war-war of the government and the monopolists, and they are dutifully carrying out all the tasks allotted to them by the warlike imperialists.

THE PRESENT COURSE of the leadership, if uncorrected by the workers, would sentence the trade union movement of this country to the fate of the dying world capitalist system. It would drag the trade unions down to eventual ruin, in the welter of war and fascism that American imperialism is heading toward.

But if the Left forces do their duty, the labor movement will never suffer such a tragic collapse, as that of Germany, for example. Before this could happen, the masses of the workers, under the leadership of the Communists and other progressive forces, will break the power of the reactionary officialdom and reorient the movement onto a healthy basis of cooperation with the world forces of peace, democracy and socialism.

* * * * * * * * * * *

THE MASSES OF THE WORKERS, organized and unorganized, have a very different outlook upon the war situation than do their treacherous trade union leaders. Of course, great numbers of them, caught in the web of imperialist propaganda, believe the double big-lie that the Soviet government is in a warlike offensive and that the Truman government is fighting to preserve world peace. If they did not suffer from these illusions, it would be impossible for the labor warmongers, the Greens, Murrays, Wolls, Careys, Reuthers, Dubinskys and the like, to mislead them as dangerously as they are now doing.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Therefore, it is the historic duty of the Communist Party, the Left trade union forces and the progressive elements generally, to give badly needed leadership to the betrayed working class. And this effort, if carried out intelligently, energetically and with full faith in the fighting spirit of the working class, will be bound to result successfully.

WE CAN SAVE OURSELVES
AN EDITORIAL

THE COMMENTS MADE by Stalin on the war danger are of special importance to the American people. He makes the point that the unwillingness of the people to be plunged into another world war has placed many obstacles in the path of those seeking war. The peace movement has frightened the men who plan war.

* * * * * * * * * * *

LET US CHECK OVER the points Stalin makes to see if he is right or wrong.

He says that the Soviet Union could not be building up the huge war machine which London and Washington claim is the cause of the war danger, and AT THE SAME TIME BE BUILDING HUGE PEACE-TIME CONSTRUCTION, and STEADILY LOWERING ITS PRICES ON CONSUMER GOODS. Isn't that a fact which we can test for ourselves?

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is up to all patriotic Americans, no matter what their creed, to rouse their neighbors, communities, trade unions, churches, etc., to urge the government to call off the war in Korea; to negotiate a settlement in the Far East and in Europe; to grant China her legal seat in the UN, and to ditch the outrageous UN resolution for spreading the war against Peoples China.

The people cannot wait for peace now. They must enforce it through their unity and aroused alertness.

THE PEOPLE DECIDE THEIR DESTINY

If the Truman Administration thought they could cow Eugene Dennis, General Secretary of the Communist Party, by confining him to 10 months in prison, they made a big mistake. His first speech after his release proved that. Below are excerpts from his speech and that of Gus Hall who welcomed him back at a New York meeting.

By Eugene Dennis

Comrades:

. . . . . .

For Peace, Democracy, Socialism

I also have the impression that millions of Americans have come to recognize and respect the strength brought to the world camp of peace by the new Asia, especially by liberated China.

Moreover, in spite of the lies and the slanders that poison our avenues of monopoly-controlled mass communication—the Second World Peace Congress did not escape the notice of wide sections of our people. In fact, the greater strength, unity and militance of the peace partisans now organized in the World Peace Council have been not only an inspiration to the peace forces in our country, but also have enhanced manifold the possibilities of winning the fight for world peace.

Now the welfare of our people and the national interests of the United States make it imperative that we do all in our power to help our fellow Americans catch up with their allies and friends in other sections of the world peace camp. . . .

. . . . . .

During the past ten months Wall Street aggressions and Hitlerite policies have sharply increased the dangers of war and fascism. But I come back to you supremely confident—as you are—in the ultimate victory of the people, of our class and our cause—the cause of peace, democracy and socialism.

IT IS INDESTRUCTIBLE

THE SOVIET UNION is 34 years old today.

On Nov. 7, 1917, the Russian workers and peasants, led by the immortal Lenin and the Bolshevik Party, dumped the bankers and landlords and Czarist generals. They decided to run the country's industries for the people instead of for private profit.

The first word on the banner of the Russian Revolution was peace—peace, bread and land.

. . . . . .

Today the Soviet Union is indestructible.

The work of Lenin and Stalin is immortal. The Socialist state has become the leader of a new force in modern history—the great camp of peace. This new alliance of hundreds of millions of people in China and the People's Democracies, together with the vast millions in the colonial and capitalist countries, can prevent war. This is the new achievement of the Soviet Union, the glorious vision that the people can make a reality.

COMBAT THE WAR INCITEMENTS AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION*

. . . . . .

By Alexander Bittelman

Never since the Great October Socialist Revolution thirty-three years ago, the revolution which opened up a new epoch in the history of mankind, have the imperialist slanders and war-incitements against the Soviet Union

---

* Since this article was written, Comrade Bittelman, member of the Editorial Board of Political Affairs, and one of the national leaders of the Communist Party, was arrested, along with other leaders of the Party and other fighters for the cause of labor and peace—including Claudia Jones, Betty Gannett, and George Siskind—by the order of Attorney General McGrath, in the drive against the peace forces, the labor movement, the Negro people and the Communist Party, under the McCarran Act. At the time this issue went to press they were still held at Ellis Island.—Editor.

been carried on with such recklessness and violence. This is especially so in the United States.

* * * * * * * * * * *

The Soviet Union created by the October Revolution later saved humanity from fascist slavery in World War II and has thus made possible the victory of national liberation and of Socialism in large parts of Europe and Asia. It now stands guard over the peace of the world and is leading the fight to prevent World War III which is being organized by the imperialist and fascist camp headed by American imperialism. It stands for the peaceful co-existence and competition of the Socialist and capitalist systems. It represents the greatest hope of mankind in the struggle to save the world from the madness of atomic war.

* * * * * * * * * * *

From the foregoing it is clear that the fight for peace—against a new world war and the growing fascist danger—demands a consistent and militant struggle against Wall Street's slanders and war-incitements against the Soviet Union.

* * * * * * * * * * *

To support and defend the peace policy of the Soviet Union is to make the masses of the American people realize that the very existence of this powerful Socialist land is a source of strength to the American working class and its allies in the fight against monopoly capitalist exploitation. It is to make the American workers and all working people understand that the triumph of Socialism in the Soviet Union has created an inexhaustible treasure of experience for the revolutionary struggle to abolish exploitation, to abolish capitalism, to build a just social system, to establish true democracy. It is to remind the American masses that the Soviet Union, our great ally in World War II, was decisive in winning the victory and that this was so because the Soviet Union is a Socialist state and is led by the party of Lenin and Stalin. It is necessary, finally, to demonstrate daily the major truth of our time that the path of peace, democracy, economic security and general well-being for the American people is the path of friendship and collaboration with the Soviet Union. The other path, the one followed by Wall Street and its agents, is the path of war, crises and national disaster. To prove these truths to the American people, to the workers, first of all, means to defend the best national interests of the American people. This only proves once more that the popularizing and defense of the leading role of the Soviet Union in the fight for peace is an organic part of the defense of the national interests of the American people.

A Generation of Soviet Youth

By Edward Frisch

Knowing and appreciating the experiences and accomplishments of the Soviet youth give our Party the key to understanding the leading role which Soviet youth in general, and the Communist Youth League (Komsomol) in particular, is playing among the young people of the world in the struggle for peace and democracy.

Revolutionary Role of the Youth

Young people have ever been a vital factor in the revolutionary movement in all countries. In answer to the question as to why there were so many young people in the Party, Lenin once declared:

Is it not natural for young people to predominate in our party, the party of revolution? We are the party of the future and the future belongs to the youth. We are a party of innovators and innovators are always followed most eagerly by the youth. We are a party of self-sacrificing struggle against the rotten old system, and the youth are always the first in self-sacrificing struggles.

Lenin Stressed the Role of the Youth for the Party

In a 1905 letter, Lenin wrote:

The youth will decide the issue of the whole struggle, the student youth, and still more the working-class youth. ... Do not fear their lack of training, do not tremble at their inexperience and lack of development. If you are unable to organize and stimulate them to action, they will turn to the Mensheviks and the Gapons, and this inexperience of theirs will cause five times more damage. . . . Only you must unfailingly organize, organize and organize hundreds of circles. . . . Either you create new, young, fresh, energetic, militant organizations everywhere for revolutionary Social-Democratic work of all sorts and kinds, and among all strata, or you will perish, enveloped in the glory of "committee" bureaucrats. (My emphasis.—E.F.)

Lenin's admonition to the Party organization that it develop youth work under all conditions, and with a bold and variegated mass approach, gave the line for the Party's attitude toward youth work throughout its whole existence.

* * * * * * * * * *

Soviet Youth Face A Secure Future

The difference in the prospect of young workers under Socialism and that of young workers under capitalism, as in the United States, makes clear the real meaning of Socialism for young people. The great fear and threat of unemployment to young workers in this country does not exist for Soviet youth. At the present time, young workers in the United States face a perspective of depression and unemployment, or imperialist war; these are the two threats that hang over the young workers of the United States. When unemployment hits, it is the young workers, and particularly the Negro youth and young women, who are hit hardest.

Soviet youth, on the other hand, are guaranteed the right to work by the Stalin Constitution.

* * * * * * * * * *

The Soviet youth, as the whole Soviet people, know that war can only interfere with, and set back, their steady progress along the historic road of gradual transition from Socialism to Communism. They are the builders of Communism, the youth of Lenin and Stalin. They are the youth of the land which heads the world's peace camp. It is this which brings them the love and admiration of the democratic youth the world over and recognition of their leading role in the world youth's struggle for peace and democracy.

Solidarity with the land of Socialism, and appreciation of its leading role in the struggle for peace, democracy and Socialism, thus becomes the touchstone of true internationalism among the young people of all countries; for it is this international bond between the youth who have already established Socialism, those youth who are building it now, and those youth, as in our own country, who still have the task of bringing Socialism about, that is the guarantee of a Socialist world in the future. Without this international bond there is a weak link in the chain of resistance against imperialist aggression. It is particularly important here, in the center of world imperialism to bring this understanding to the young people who are studying Marxism-Leninism, to our Party which helps to guide these youth, and to the masses of American youth.

A Tribute by the National Committee, C.P.U.S.A.

William Z. Foster is 70 years of age. The seventieth birthday of the foremost leader and teacher of our Party is an event of major significance for the entire working class, for all America's exploited and oppressed, for the Negro people, for all who strive for peace and democracy, for social progress, for a better world. This seventieth birthday is for our Party an occasion of joyous celebration. For on this day we render homage to our beloved Comrade and leader, William Z. Foster, that great Communist stalwart whose half century of battle-years have been devoted militantly and clear-sightedly to the noble cause of the working class, to the cause of its emancipation.

Truman's "State of National Emergency"

By William Z. Foster

[A communication to Comrade Gus Hall, National Secretary of the Communist Party, U.S.A.; under date of January 20, 1951.—Ed.]

Dear Gus:

. . . . . .

The proclamation of the state of national emergency flows basically out of the increasing difficulties and desperation in which American imperialism finds itself, out of the growing bankruptcy of United States foreign policy. It is, therefore, fundamentally a manifestation of American imperialism's political weakness, not of its strength.

The proclamation of the state of national emergency is, above all, a device for speeding up the drive toward war. It is a highly provocative semi-mobilization of the armed forces of the United States, a further stage in the warlike program of American imperialism, the next planned stage of which would be full mobilization and outright war against the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies.

. . . . . .

We must understand clearly, in fighting for peace and the people's general welfare, that the proclaimed state of national emergency is designed to hamper and make more difficult every phase of this peace struggle.

. . . . . .

The question of the national emergency constitutes another serious test of our Marxist-Leninist ability, both to work out our theoretical analysis of it, and to develop effective policies for peace, in the situation set up by the President's arbitrary proclamation.

Comradely yours,

William Z. Foster

The Stalin Interview—A Blow at the Warmongers

By Gus Hall

. . . . . .

No Long-Term Cure for Capitalism

. . . . . .

At the conclusion of his interview, Stalin states the central, all-dominating question that the peace-loving peoples of the world must deeply ponder over:

Peace will be preserved and consolidate if the peoples will take the cause of preserving peace into their own hands and defend it to the end. War may become inevitable if the warmongers succeed in enmeshing the masses of the people in lies, in deceiving them and drawing them into a new world war.

That is why a widespread campaign for the maintenance of peace, as a means of exposing the criminal machinations of the warmongers, is now of primary importance.

We can have full confidence that peace can be preserved; but that confidence is based on the full realization that this is possible today only if the forces for peace continue to grow, if they consolidate their strength and broaden their ranks.

Stalin on the War Danger and the Possibility of Averting It

By I. A. Seleznev

. . . . . .

Note: This article has been translated for Political Affairs from the Soviet philosophical magazine, Voprosi Filosofii (No. 4, 1951). Pressure of space required a considerable condensation of the text.

. . . . . .

Analyzing the postwar international situation, Comrade Stalin declared:

The defeat and liquidation of the principal centers of fascism and world aggression have led to profound changes in the political life of the world's peoples, to a wide upsurge of the democratic movement among the peoples. Taught by the experience of the war, the masses of the people have understood that the fate of the nations must not be entrusted to reactionary governments, which pursue narrow-caste and selfish, anti-people, aims. Because of this, the peoples, unwilling to live any longer in the old way, are taking the fate of their states into their own hands, are establishing democratic regimes and are carrying on an active struggle against the forces of reaction, against the incendiaries of a new war. The peoples of the world do not want a repetition of the afflictions of war. They are fighting in earnest for the enforcement of peace and security.*

* * * * * * * * * *

THE WORLD-WIDE PEACE MOVEMENT

* * * * * * * * * *

In the first stage of the movement of the partisans of peace it was necessary to work out a platform, the struggle for the realization of which could unite all peoples, all sections of the laboring masses, regardless of ethnic origin and nationality, of political views and religious convictions. Such a common platform for the struggle for peace was formulated in the Appeal adopted at the Stockholm meeting of the Permanent Committee, which called for the outlawing of atomic weapons and condemning as a war criminal the government which would first resort to such weapons. To carry this measure into effect, it was decided to organize a world-wide petition campaign. This roused all sections of the population throughout the world. Within a short time the Stockholm appeal was signed by more than 500 million people. The campaign for the collection of signatures to the Stockholm resolution resulted, among other things, in an expanded base for the movement of the partisans of peace.

* Order of the Minister of the Armed Forces of the U.S.S.R., of May 1, 1946, published in Pravda, May 1, 1946.

* * * * * * * * * *

. . . . . .

Conclusion

. . . . . .

One of the most important conditions for the prevention of a new world war and securing the preservation of peace is enhancement of the power of the Soviet Union which heads the mighty front of the fighters for peace, the multiplication of its economic successes and the strengthening of its defensive capacity. In World War II the Soviet people, displaying miracles of heroism, courage and steadfastness in the struggle against fascist Germany and imperialist Japan, smashed with its armed forces the shock forces of international imperialism and aggression, thereby saving mankind from fascist enslavement. In the present conditions, when over mankind is again suspended the danger of a new world war and aggression by the imperialists of the United States, the eyes of all peace-loving people are turned towards the Soviet Union, the bulwark of peace and security for all peoples.

Lenin's Teachings and the Liberation of Humanity

By Alexander Bittelman

. . . . . .

Lenin's teachings are triumphing because they are true. The teachings of Lenin, further developed by Stalin, demonstrate their creativeness and cogency in all the great progressive struggles of our day and epoch. Lenin's teachings inspire the actions of the vanguard fighters for peace and democracy. Peoples fighting for equal rights and national independence find their advanced fighters and leaders guided by the teachings of Lenin, so brilliantly continued and further developed by Stalin. And the magnificent historic fight of our epoch—the fight for Socialism, for Communism—whose grandeur overshadows all of the great previous achievements of mankind, crowning them with the realization of the noblest aspirations and dreams of the human race,—this historic fight, we are proud to say, is guided by the teachings of Lenin and of his great continuer Stalin. It is led by parties of Marxism-Leninism, by Communist and Workers Parties.

COMMUNISTS HERE PROTEST PERSECUTION OF FRENCH CP

The National Committee of the Communist Party Friday sent a letter to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of France, expressing international solidarity in struggle against the present wave of arrests and persecution. Complete text of the letter signed by William Z. Foster, national chairman; Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, member, and Pettis Perry, alternate member of the National Committee, follows:

"The pro-fascist assault upon the Communist Party of France, and the imprisonment of the beloved working-class leader, Jacques Duclos, has aroused the burning indignation of every true lover of peace and democracy throughout the world. Unable to check the growing movement for peace, democracy and national independence, which has rallied the millions, the French servants of U. S. imperialism now resort to methods of violence and terror, mass arrests and trumped-up charges, so reminiscent of Hitler's Reichstag-fire provocation.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"The National Committee of the Communist Party, U. S. A. on behalf of our entire membership, extends to your Central Committee, and through you to the people of France, our fraternal working class solidarity in your courageous fight to advance the cause of democracy, peace and national independence. We ask you to transmit to Comrade Duclos our profound admiration for his indomitable spirit and indefatigable struggle for the security, peace, and freedom of the French people, and for peace and friendship among all peoples and nations.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"We know your struggle is our struggle—a common fight against a common enemy—to defeat the North Atlantic war alliance, to prevent the re-nazification and remilitarization of Western Germany, to fight for a Five-Power Pact of Peace and Friendship as the only path to peace and freedom."

LOVESTONE, STATE'S WITNESS

* * * * * * * * *

It is the duty of Communists to throw every possible obstacle in the way of conviction of their fellow Party members in the courts, to defend these members by all possible means, and absolutely to refuse to give testimony for the state in any form. Testimony of Communists can only be given for the defense of Communists, not for the state, and then it must be based upon uncompromising defense of the Party and its program. And any one who trades his testimony to the State for personal immunity from prosecution, should be unhesitatingly kicked out of the movement.

REPORT OF THE BOARD

On November 22, 1950, the Attorney General of the United States, Petitioner herein, acting under Section 13(a) of The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950, hereinafter called the Act, filed a petition with the Board for an order requiring the Communist Party of the United States of America (CPUSA), Respondent herein, to register with the Attorney General as required by Sections 7(a), (c), and (d) of the Act. The petition alleges that Respondent is a Communist-action organization as defined in the Act and as measured by the standards specified therein, and it sets forth numerous allegations of fact in support of its contention.

A copy of the petition was served by Petitioner upon Respondent on November 24, 1950. Answer under protest was filed by Respondent on February 14, 1951, and on April 3, 1951, an amended answer was filed.[1]

---

[1] In the interim period Respondent attacked the validity of the proceeding by various motions addressed to the Board, which were denied, and also instituted suit in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for a preliminary injunction to stay the proceeding and for a permanent injunction and declaratory judgment (Civil Action 419-51). A three-judge statutory court on February 28, 1951, denied Respondent's motion for a

In the amended answer Respondent admits that it was organized in 1919 and has been in existence continuously since that date. Otherwise, the substance and effect of its answer is to deny that Respondent fits the definition and standards of a Communist-action organization as alleged in the petition.

Hearings for the purpose of taking evidence on the petition commenced on April 23, 1951, before three members of the Board sitting as a Hearing Panel.

On October 20, 1951, one member of the Hearing Panel became unavailable to the Board by virtue of the adjournment of Congress without taking action upon his nomination to the Board. The hearing proceeded before the remaining two members of the Hearing Panel, who were present and participated during the entire hearing. Respondent, on October 23, 1951, moved the Board for an order striking all evidence theretofore received and all proceedings theretofore held because of the failure of the Senate to confirm the one member, and because of alleged bias and prejudice of the Panel against Respondent, which motion was denied following oral argument thereon. Respondent thereupon instituted suit in the United States District Court to enjoin the hearings but was not successful.[1]

Hearings for the purpose of taking evidence on the petition, having commenced on April 23, 1951, terminated on July 1, 1952.

Briefs and proposed findings of fact were filed by each party on July 28, 1952. On August 6, 1952, reply briefs were filed by each of the parties, and on August 14, 1952, oral argument thereon was held before the Hearing Panel.

preliminary injunction (Communist Party of the United States v. McGrath, 96 F. Supp. 47) but on March 13, 1951, issued an order staying answer and hearings before the Board to and including March 27, 1951, pending appeal. An extension of this stay was refused by the United States Supreme Court on March 26, 1951, and Respondent voluntarily discontinued the proceeding.

[1] The United States District Court for the District of Columbia, on February 15, 1952, entered an order granting the Board's motion to dismiss, and dismissing the proceeding before the court. Communist Party of the United States of America v. Peter Campbell Brown, et al (Civil Action 4648-51).

On October 20, 1952, the Hearing Panel issued its Recommended Decision finding Respondent to be a Communist-action organization as defined in the Act and recommending that the Board issue an order requiring Respondent to register as such with the Attorney General of the United States.

On November 21, 1952, Petitioner filed exceptions to the Recommended Decision requesting that the Board adopt the Panel's findings with certain minor changes of text. On November 24, 1952, Respondent filed its exceptions to the Recommended Decision, accompanied by a memorandum in support thereof, and four motions. Following oral argument, the motions were denied in our Memoranda Opinions and Orders of December 23, 1952, and February 24, 1953. Oral argument on the exceptions to the Recommended Decision was had before us on January 7, 1953.

Respondent notes 310 exceptions, most of which contain numerous grounds for attacking a specified portion or finding of the Recommended Decision. Illustrative of the nature of its exceptions is Exception No. 51, which reads as follows:

> "Respondent excepts to the statement as to the end towards which certain policies and activities of the Respondent are directed (p. 26, 11. 29-32), as being unsupported by the evidence, contrary to the evidence, based on irrelevant matters, based on constitutionally protected conduct and expression, and made with an improper reliance on pre-Act matters."

In addition to taking exception to virtually every statement in the Recommended Decision on what amounts to a line by line basis, Respondent in many instances made a general exception to entire captioned sections of the Recommended Decision, illustrative of which is Exception No. 102:

> "On the same grounds [same as exception No. 101, i.e., irrational, unsupported by the evidence, contrary to the evidence, beyond the scope of the petition, and based on an improper reliance on pre-Act matters]

Respondent excepts to the entire section of the Recommended Decision which appears under the sub-heading 'Trade Union Activities' (pp. 50-58)."

In addition to the foregoing, Respondent, by its Exception No. 310, attacks the Recommended Decision as a whole on the grounds that it is arbitrary; capricious; not in accordance with law; contrary to the Constitution, including the First and Fifth Amendments; made without the observance of procedure required by law; unsupported by the evidence or by a preponderance thereof; contrary to the evidence and a preponderance thereof; largely based on incompetent and irrelevant evidence and on testimony not entitled to credence; based on evidence and findings outside the scope of the petition; and largely resulting from improper use of, and reliance on, matters and events which antedate the enactment of the Act;[1] further, that the Panel has not performed its function of weighing, analyzing and describing the evidence and contentions of the parties; that the Panel has obscured, concealed, and misstated what the record actually shows; that it has so intermingled pre-Act and post-Act evidence as to confuse and misstate the record and vitiate its findings and conclusions; and, that the Panel's decision is clearly a product of bias and prejudice.

Respondent also preserves all exceptions which have accrued to it as a result of rulings adverse to it heretofore made by the Hearing Panel or the Board.

Notwithstanding the general, sweeping nature of these exceptions and their lack of substantive specificity, we have carefully examined and considered each of them, as well as the matters set forth in Respondent's memorandum in support thereof.

In making our findings herein, we have reviewed the entire record and we have appraised the Recommended Decision, and the exceptions taken thereto by both parties, in the light thereof. Except to the extent the exceptions of either party are expressly or impliedly incorporated herein, they are hereby expressly overruled as being unsupported by the evidence or otherwise lacking in merit.

[1] The matters raised in the exceptions pertaining to pre-Act evidence and Constitutional issues are dealt with later herein under "Legal Discussion".

In this report, we discuss the evidence under topical headings which in the main conform to the sequence of the criteria of Section 13(e) of the Act which we are required to consider. This arrangement also substantially follows the allegations of the petition.

In making our findings herein, we have considered and weighed all the evidence of record. In weighing Petitioner's evidence, we have considered that certain of its witnesses fall into the category of "informers" and we have scrutinized their testimony accordingly; we have considered and resolved the inconsistencies in the testimony of certain of Petitioner's witnesses; we have considered the testimony of Petitioner's witnesses against the background of their various organizational positions and activities in the CPUSA which afforded the sources of their knowledge; and we have had the benefit of the Panel's observation of their demeanor while testifying. Viewing these considerations in the light of the whole record, we find no basis for disregarding the substance of their testimony.

We have likewise weighed and evaluated Respondent's evidence, taking into account that each of its three witnesses has a vital personal interest in the outcome of this proceeding; that in nature and substance the direct testimony of two of its witnesses amounted, in a large degree, to conclusory denials of the allegations of the petition and the criteria of Section 13(e) of the Act; that important members of Respondent, whom Petitioner's witnesses had identified as being parties to, or present at, conversations which were detrimental to Respondent herein, were not called to rebut such testimony; and, that the Hearing Panel, having observed the demeanor of its witnesses as they testified, had some misgivings about certain of them.

It is noteworthy that the stenographic record herein comprises 14,413 pages and that in addition 507 exhibits, many of which are entire volumes, are part of the record. To set forth and resolve herein all the conflicts between the evidence of the parties would unduly protract this report. Where warranted, however, we treat specifically with conflicts in the evidence and the credibility of the witnesses with regard thereto in the body of this report.

Applying the foregoing considerations, we have made our findings below. Such evidence of record that is inconsistent therewith is not credited.

A short biographical sketch of each witness, containing information pertinent to this proceeding, is contained in Appendix "A", and a list of publications which are in evidence and have major importance in this proceeding is contained in Appendix "B".

For clarity, it is desirable that we make certain findings based on the evidence herein concerning Respondent's publications and its general nature and organizational composition preliminary to setting out the body of the evidence.

Therefore, we find: That Respondent is a disciplined organization numbering many thousands of members, which is controlled internally between conventions by a National Committee; that it has orgaizational units at city, county, state, and district (includes multi-state) levels which include clubs, cells, fractions, branches, and sections, and committees thereof; that, in addition to the foregoing, it maintains other operating committees for specific purposes; that Respondent has been in existence in the United States since 1919; and, that it is not a diplomatic representative or mission of a foreign government accredited as such by the Department of State. (Amended Answer, J.A. 161-186; Ex. 374; J.A. 162, 888-889; 898-899, 1695-1706).

We also find that the following publications, issues of which are in evidence, are or were during their existence official and controlled organs of Respondent:

(a) The Daily Worker;

(b) The Worker; this is currently the Sunday edition of the Daily Worker; however, in the 1920's a paper with this name fulfilled much the same function as the present Daily Worker;

(c) Political Affairs; a monthly magazine;

(d) The Communist; the predecessor to Political Affairs, which served Respondent in the same capacity prior to early 1945. The same title was used for a Party newspaper early in Respondent's existence.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

A. World Communist Movement

The definition of a Communist-action organization in Section 3(3), and the terms of the several criteria in Section 13(e) of the Act make desirable a finding based upon the evidence in this proceeding concerning the world Communist movement, its characteristics and the identification of the leadership of such movement.

Much of the evidence which establishes the allegations of the petition pertaining to the various criteria in Section 13(e) necessarily shows the existence of the world Communist movement, its characteristics and its leader. The evidence sustaining these allegations is fully set forth hereafter in this report. Consequently, we now set forth in summary form only the evidence adduced in this proceeding which substantiates the existence of the world Communist movement, describes its nature and identifies its leadership.

The Respondent in its amended answer (J.A. 161-186) and through the testimony of its witnesses (e.g., J.A. 1242-1243) admits that a world Communist movement exists in the sense that the CPUSA and other Communist parties in countries throughout the world are guided in their activity by a concept of "social science" called Marxism-Leninism,[1] and have as their common goal the establishment of "socialism". Respondent contends, however, that the international relationship among the Communist parties of the world is merely a fraternal one. It denies that there exists a world Communist movement which is substantially dominated or controlled by the Soviet Union and which has as its purpose the establishment of dictatorships of the proletariat in all countries throughout the world. Respondent's witness Gates testified that, in referring to "the world Communist movement" in his writings, he had in mind separate autonomous movements (J.A. 1242-1243). Respondent's expert witness, Dr. Herbert Aptheker, teacher and trustee of the Jefferson School of Social Science, Editor of Masses and Main Stream, and Managing Editor of Political Affairs, offers the explanation that in Marxist-Leninist literature such terms as international solidarity, proletarian internationalism, working class internationalism, etc., are used simply to indicate the fraternal relationship among the working classes of the countries of the world (R. 15630-15634). Respondent's witness Elizabeth Gurley Flynn draws an analogy with the international trade union movement, asserting that this movement exists but that there is no world-wide trade union; and that, similarly, a world Communist movement does exist, but that an international integrated Communist party does not (R. 15940-15950). The witness Flynn admits that Stalin is universally regarded by Communists as the ideological leader of world Communism[1] and as the leader of the senior Communist Party of the world, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union; however, she denies that either Stalin or the Communist Party of the Soviet Union exercises domination or control over Respondent or any other Communist party in the world.

We are unable to accept these contentions of Respondent concerning the existence, nature, purpose, and leadership of the world Communist movement, as they are contrary to the clear preponderance of evidence.

The present world Communist movement was first manifested organizationally by the formation of the Third Communist International in Moscow in 1919. This event is recorded in the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, J.A. 1613-1632) as hereinafter developed.[1]

One year later, July 17-August 7, 1920, the Second Congress of the Communist International adopted and promulgated its Theses and Statutes setting forth its aims and purposes as later detailed herein,[2] which includes the following (J.A. 1318-1319):

> "The Communist International is aware that for the purpose of a speedy achievement of victory the International Association of Workers, which is struggling for the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of Communism, should possess a firm and centralized organization. To all intents and purposes the Communist International should represent a single universal Communist Party, of which the parties operating in every country form individual sections. The organized apparatus of the Communist International is to secure to the toilers of every country the possibility at any given moment of obtaining the maximum of aid from the organized workers of the other countries.
>
> "For this purpose the Communist International confirms the following items of its statutes:
>
> "Sec. 1. The new International Association of Workers is established for the purpose of organizing common activity of the workers of various countries who are striving towards a single aim: the overthrow of capitalism; the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat and of the International Soviet Republic; the complete abolition of classes, and the realization of socialism—the first step of Communist Society." (Underscoring supplied) (Ex. 8, p. 5)

---

[1] See pp. 19-20, infra; see also pp. 78-80, infra, for Respondent's adherence to this work.

[2] See pp. 19-20, infra.

The Communist International was in fact that which these publications proclaim, i.e., a universal Communist Party organized and controlled as to policies and activities by the Soviet Union and consisting of the various Communist parties of the countries throughout the world, which constituted sections of the Communist International. The Communist International embodied an elaborate organizational structure, including an Executive Committee; departments on Organization, Agitation and Propaganda, and Youth; Secretariats or Commissions covering sections of the world, such as the Far Eastern Secretariat, Anglo-American Secretariat, etc., which supervised the Communist parties in these respective areas; and Field Bureaus (Ex. 8; J. A. 1318-1332).

Respondent joined this international Communist organization shortly after it was constituted and admittedly until 1940 participated therein. Characteristic of the Communist International's world-wide activities were the Profintern or Red International of Labor Unions; M.O.P.R., or the International Red Aid to defend Communists (Ex. 50; J.A. 1357); the maintenance of representatives in various countries, first to enforce and insure adherence to its policies, and further to afford guidance and assistance; the instruction and training of individual members of its section Communist parties and the payment of expenses incident thereto; the rendering of financial aid to the various Communist parties throughout the world, either directly in money disbursed to or for them or indirectly through furnishing of free propaganda materials, publications, printing, etc.; the exercise of strict disciplinary control over individual members and entire Communist party sections, resulting in expulsion of a member for failure to follow Soviet Union policies and directives; the settlement of intra-party disputes and the resolution of issues relating to tactics, strategy, procedure, and policy of Communist party sections; the command of paramount allegiance to the Soviet Union as the leader of international Communism and fatherland of the world proletariat; the strict adherence to that body of principles and policies called Marxism-Leninism;[1] all in furtherance of making secure the foundation of the world proletarian revolution, i.e., the Soviet Union, and installing Communist dictatorships under the direction and domination of the Soviet Union in all coutries throughout the world, including the United States, by activity both open and secret and by any means whether legal or illegal.

As a result of the passage of the Voorhis Act in 1940 (54 Stat. 1204) Respondent announced a disaffiliation from the Communist International, but did not alter fundamentally its relationship with the Communist International.[2] The Communist International was formally dissolved as such in 1943, at which time the United States and the Soviet Union were military allies (J.A. 1572-1574). This formal dissolution was accomplished, assertedly, in order to remove the foundation for "fascist" charges that the Soviet Union was meddling in the internal affairs of other nations. In truth and in practice the world Communist movement, under the hegemony of the Soviet Union, has remained as theretofore, despite the "dissolution" of the Communist International.

In 1947, the Communist Information Bureau, herein sometimes called the Cominform, was organized[3] to facilitate the coordination of activities of Communist parties of various countries in the struggle against "imperialism"; its membership consists of a number of Communist parties (J.A. 606-607; Ex. 214-A, Ex. 367, J.A. 1575-1578, 1676-1677).

Zhdanov, then a member of the Politburo of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, in calling for greater and closer international coordination of action by Communist parties at the Communist Party Informative Conference in Poland in September 1947 stated, in part, as follows (J.A. 1578):

> " • • • There can be no doubt that if the situation [the tendency toward the isolation of individual Communist parties] were to continue it would be fraught with most serious consequences to the development of the work of the fraternal parties. The need for mutual consultation and voluntary coordination of action between individual parties has become particularly urgent at the present juncture when continued isolation may lead to a slackening of mutual understanding, and at times, even to serious blunders." (Ex. 214-A, p. 4)

Georgi M. Malenkov, successor to Stalin and presently leader of the Soviet Union, also addressed this conference laying additional emphasis on the necessity for coordination of international Communist activities. Pertinent excerpts from Malenkov's report are set forth herein at pp. 34-35, infra.

In the United States, Respondent refrained from formally joining the Cominform, because " . . . reactionary and pro-Fascist forces now whipping up anti-Communist hysteria and war incitement in our country would undoubtedly seize upon such action . . . as a pretext for new provocations and repressions against the Communists . . . " (Pet. Ex. 368). However, the CPUSA announced firm agreement with and approval of its formation. Notwithstanding this lack of formal affiliation, manifestations of the world Communist movement and Respondent's participation therein continued. Known representatives of the world Communist movement remained in the United States and continued their participation in the affairs of Respondent; leaders of Respondent went abroad at Party expense to international gatherings where they met and consulted with world Communist leaders; the official organ of the Cominform, For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, is used by Respondent's leaders as a source of authoritative direction on matters pertaining to the world Communist movement and Respondent's participation therein; detailed "greetings" containing messages are sent and received by the various Communist parties of the world, including the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and Respondent; Respondent unswervingly adheres to the positions taken by the Soviet Union on international issues; and Respondent continues to advocate, teach and apply Marxism-Leninism.

Adherence to Marxism-Leninism, as its principles and precepts are stated in the Classics, is completely incompatible with Respondent's contention that it and numerous other Communist parties throughout the world apply Marxism-Leninism individually, separately and autonomously. It is clear that international organization, which affords the coordination of activity and discipline as directed by the Soviet Union and which commands the subordination of all national duties and also requires allegiance to the Soviet Union, is the very essence of Marxism-Leninism as understood and practiced by Respondent.[1]

The international integration of the world Communist movement is further illustrated by the perspective in which Respondent regards the incidents affecting, or activities of, Communist parties in other nations. For example, a letter sent by Respondent to the Communist Party of France as reprinted in the Daily Worker of June 9, 1952, regards the arrest of French Communist leader, Jacques Duclos, as an act of men of "Wall Street". The letter states in part:

> "* * * We American Communists are concious of our responsibility to show the people at home that it is the Wall Street men of the trusts who are the real fomentors of the present hysteria arrests and persecutions in your country. We will do everything to convince the American people that it is U.S. imperialism which strives to impose upon the French people the same kind of war-time dictatorship they seek to impose in our own land. We know your struggle is our struggle—a common fight against a common enemy—to defeat the North Atlantic war alliance, to prevent the relnazification (sic) and remilitarization of Western Germany, to fight for a Five-Power Pact of Peace and Friendship as the only path to peace and freedom. * * *'" (Ex. 495; see also, J.A. 1797-1798).

Similarly a "greeting" from Respondent to the Seventh Congress of the Italian Communist Party, published in the Daily Worker of April 4, 1951, stated:

"* * * 'your work in defense of peace and socialism under the magnificent leadership of Palmiro Togliatti, has a particular repercussion in our country.

" 'The great battle of the Italian workers for their independence, peace and social progress calls forth greatest admiration among us. We are confident that in fraternal battle against Wall Street, the cause of Italy's millions, which is our cause too, will triumph.' " (Pet. Ex. 456)

Respondent, at its 15th National Convention held from December 28 to 31, 1950, in New York City, received "greetings" from Communist parties in the Soviet Union People's Democratic Republic of China, France, Italy, Hungary, Poland. Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Romania, German Democratic Republic, Western Germany, Austria, Great Britain, Canada, Mexico, Brazil, Cuba, Spain, Norway, Denmark, The Netherlands, Northern Ireland, Eire, India, Israel, Algeria, Ceylon, Free Territory of Trieste, Belgium, Australia, New Zealand, Indonesia, and the Yugoslav Political Revolutionary Emigrants (Ex. 376; J.A. 1714-1718).

Many such "greetings" expressed regret that it was impossible to send delegates as Respondent had invited but noted in varied detail the problems (from a Communist viewpoint) in the particular country involved as well as those facing Respondent. Those "greetings" likewise are replete with phrases that reveal the characteristics and leadership of the world Communist movement, of which the following are illustrative (J.A. 1714-1718):

"... all persons who oppose the aggressive policy of American imperialism and the rule of fascist terror are uniting in joint resistance ...";

"... the decisions of your Convention, taken in the light of the teachings of Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin, will enable you to advance forward on the road of unity of action ...";

"Your successes are our successes";

"We know your struggle is difficult but together with you, 800 million people, led by the invincible Soviet Union, defend peace and liberty.";

"... your Party will raise still higher the immortal banner of Marxism-Leninism and will honorably fulfil its patriotic and internationalist duty ...";

"... the fight of the millions of common people for peace and democracy, inspired by peace-loving Soviet Union and the great Stalin, will win.";

"Your fight, dear comrades, is our fight, just as the struggle of the German Friends of democracy and peace is your struggle.";

"The invincible peace camp under the leadership of the Soviet Union and the great Stalin, defends the happiness of all peoples. You have a decisive place in the camp of peace.";

"We feel closely bound up with your struggles not only because we pursue the same aims but also because we face the same enemy, American imperialism.";

"... our common struggle against Anglo-American imperialism.";

"Headed by the Mighty Socialist Soviet Union and our friend and teacher, Joseph Stalin, the world camp of peace is going forward to win ...";

"... your decisions will victoriously guide the American people in their determined struggle for the defense of the cause of peace and Socialism so brilliantly led by Comrade Stalin.";

"United by proletarian internationalism under the banner of the great Stalin, we will march victoriously on the road to peace and Socialism.";

"... we are firmly convinced ... that you will fulfil the great task of world significance ...";

"Your invitation confirms that proletarian internationalism, in spite of hate, persecution and terror, is a living reality.";

"Our fight for peace, independence and freedom is directed against the same enemy as you fight.";

"Long live proletarian internationalism!";

"We pledge our maximum contribution to the peace movement headed by the Soviet Union.";

"Long live the solidarity of the working people in the whole world ... for the triumph of the ideas of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin!".

The foregoing statements in this section are fully supported by a preponderence of the evidence, which is set out in detail in our findings in the captioned portions of this report which follow. Based on the evidence adduced in this proceeding we find (1) that there exists a world Communist movement, substantially as described in Section 2 of the Act, which was organized by the Soviet Union, and which has as its primary objective the establishment of Communist dictatorships of the proletariat in all countries throughout the world, including the United States, and (2) that the direction, domination and control of this movement is vested in, and is exercised by, the Soviet Union.

B. Policies and Directives

1. Respondent's Organization and Leadership

The nature of this proceeding is such that we cannot and should not single out one factual situation as determining the issues, but must consider the record as a whole. In so doing, we have taken into consideration the evidence hereinafter summarized concerning the events which have resulted in Respondent's present organizational form, and which establishes certain facts regarding the background and activities of Respondent's present leadership. We find this evidence tends to establish that Respondent is a Communist-action organization.

Respondent was organized in 1919 and has been in existence continuously since that date (J.A. 162). The evidence leaves no doubt that the Respondent is molded organizationally and operationally along the lines found by the Communist Party of the Soviet Union to be most effective in establishing the dictatorship of the proletariat in the Soviet Union. Such an organization and operation is in accordance with the strategy and tactics of Marxism-Leninism. It is also in accordance with the requirements of the Communist International.

Before treating with Respondent's organizational and internal administration, it is of major importance for a clear understanding of our findings and of the background and bases for a number of Respondent's policies and activities, to review the evidence and set forth certain pertinent facts regarding an association or organization known as the Communist International (Comintern). According to Respondent's witness Flynn, this organization was "a federation, as it were, of Communist Parties, who met together, consulted together, and exchanged knowledge and experience in relation to the struggles that they were carrying on in their particular countries"[1] (R. 15777-15778).

[1] This is in substance the same characterization Respondent places on the present organization of Communist Parties known as the Information Bureau of Communist Workers' Parties or the Communist Information Bureau. See pp. 31 to 36 of this report.

The record, however, establishes a different nature and different characteristics of the Communist International.

Upon consideration of the sizeable quantity of both oral and documentary evidence relative to the matter, we find that the Communist International was organized in 1919 by the Soviet Union as the international organization of Communist Parties in all countries—a World Communist Party—with the aim to overthrow "capitalist" states and to create the dictatorship of the proletariat in the Soviet form (Ex. 330, J.A. 1623-1624; Ex. 8, J.A. 1318-1332; Ex. 145, J.A. 1539; J.A. 225, 383-384). Significant evidence establishing the foregoing includes the documents, History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks); Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International, adopted July 17—August 7th, 1920; the Programme of the Communist International, issued at the sixth Congress in Moscow in 1928; and, Respondent's Manual On Organization, issued in the 1930's. These documents are further identified and discussed later in this report.

In the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, it is stated (J.A. 1624):

> "In March 1919, on the initiative of the Bolsheviks, headed by Lenin, the First Congress of the Communist Parties of various countries, held in Moscow, founded the Communist International. Although many of the delegates were prevented by the blockade and imperialist persecution from arriving in Moscow, the most important countries of Europe and America were represented at this First Congress. The work of the congress was guided by Lenin.

> "The congress adopted a manifesto to the proletariat of all countries, calling upon them to wage a determined struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat and for the triumph of Soviets all over the world.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> "Thus was founded an international revolutionary proletariat organization of a new type—the Communist International—the Marxist-Leninist International" (Ex. 330, pp. 231-232).

The Theses and Statutes stated that (J.A. 1332):

> ". . . all the events of world politics are inevitably concentrating around one point, namely, the struggle of the bourgeoise world against the Russian Soviet Republic, which is grouping around itself the Soviet movements of the vanguards of the workers of all countries, and all national liberation movements of the colonial and subject countries, which have been taught by bitter experience that there can be no salvation for them outside of a Union with the revolutionary proletariat, and the triumph of the Soviet power over Imperialism." (Emphasis added) (Ex. 8, p. 67)

Also (J.A. 1318):

> "The Communist International makes its aim to put up an armed struggle for the overthrow of the International bourgeoisie and to create an International Soviet Republic as a transition stage to the complete abolition of the State. The Communist International considers the dictatorship of the proletariat as the only means for the liberation of humanity from the horrors of capitalism." (Ibid, p. 4)

The Constitution and Rules of the Communist International as set forth in the Programme includes (J.A. 1465):

> "The Communist International—the International Workers' Association—is a union of Communist Parties in various countries; it is a world Communist Party. As the leader and organizer of the world revolutionary movement . . . and the upholder of the principles and aims of Communism, the Communist International . . . fights for the establishment of the world dictatorship of the proletariat, for the establishment of a World Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, > for the complete abolition of classes and for the achievement of socialism—the first stage of Communist Society" (Ex. 125, p. 85).

Respondent's Manual On Organization defines the Communist International as follows, which is pertinent for comparison with the foregoing quotations (J.A. 1539):

> "The Communist International is the international organization of Communist Parties in all countries. It is the World Communist Party. The Communist Parties in the various countries affiliated to the Comintern are called Sections of the Communist International" (Ex. 145, p. 42).

The record shows, in addition to the fact that the Communist International was organized and formed by the Soviet Union and had the aforestated aims, that the Soviet Union exercised complete control over the policies and activities of the Communist International. All of the heads of the Comintern that are identified in the record have been leading members of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The meetings of the governing committees and the congresses shown in the record have been held in Moscow. Witnesses who had been representatives of Respondent to the Comintern established that the Communist Party of the Soviet Union was the leading party (section) in the Comintern, and its decisions were binding on the executive committee of the Comintern and such decisions of the Comintern bound all other member parties; furthermore it had five votes on the executive committee to one each for the other larger parties. The government of the Soviet Union financed the Comintern.

The record also establishes through both oral and documentary evidence that as a section or member of the Communist International, Respondent was under the complete domination and control of the Communist International regarding its policies, activities, programs, and other operations. Illustrations and examples of Respondent's acceptance of and adherence to directions and instructions from the Communist International are covered in the parts of this report which follow and include the teaching and advocacy of the overthrow of "imperialist" governments; trade union activities; work among the youth; and the recognition and acceptance of discipline; as well as details concerning Respondents organizational structure and internal administration.

Also significant, and indicative of Respondent's acceptance of, or submission to, control over it by the Communist International, are various other official statements and teachings by Respondent subsequent to the time that it became a part of the Communist International, and Respondent's acceptance and following of instructions of Comintern representatives sent to the United States. The activities in the United States of Comintern and other foreign Communist representatives is covered elsewhere in this report. With respect to the specific actions of Respondent and its teachings as evidencing the acceptance of domination and control by the Comintern, the record shows that early in 1921, Respondent revised its program and constitution "in conformity with the Theses and Statutes of the C. I.", and adopted the "twenty-one points for affiliation to the C. I."[1] (Ex. 123, p. 1, J.A. 1444-1446), and became an "integral part of the Communist International" (J.A. 1445). In 1929, Respondent's Central Committee issued a "Discussion Outline for Lenin Campaign" which in effect explains the role of the Party as that defined by the "Program of the Comintern" and states (J.A. 1422):

> "One who fights the Soviet Union and the Comintern is an agent of capitalism directed against our Party in its campaign to mobilize the workers against imperialist war and for defense of the Soviet Union." (Ex. 108, p. 6)

[1] These "conditions" spelled out rigid requirements of allegiance to the Comintern with provisions for strict discipline as well as details as to the form of the Communist Parties and their activities.

The "Thesis and Resolutions" for the Seventh National Convention of Respondent[1] which were adopted by the Convention in 1930, refer to "communications" from the Comintern in connection with various tasks of the Party (Pet. Ex. 132, p. 32, p. 54; see also J.A. 1485-1486). The resolutions adopted at the 8th convention of Respondent in 1934 include the following (J.A. 1490-1491):

> "The E.C.C.I. is the Executive Committee of the Communist International. It is the general staff of the world revolutionary movement giving unity and leadership to the Communist Parties of the world. The E.C.C.I. meets in plenary session at intervals of between six months and one year. The body acting in highest authority between one plenary session (Plenum) of the E.C.C.I. and the other, is the Presidium of the Communist International. The Communist Party of the U.S.A. is the American Section of the Communist International (Comintern)" (Ex. 136, p. 18).

Petitioner's witnesses Budenz, Crouch, Gitlow, Honig, Johnson, Kornfeder, Lautner, Meyer, and Nowell each testified concerning various aspects and manifestations of the control exercised over Respondent by the Communist International while these witnesses were members of Respondent and held various official positions. Gitlow was a top official of Respondent and in 1928-1929 was a member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. He states unequivocally that the Comintern controlled all major policies of Respondent (J.A. 217, 227, 229-230) and cites instances such as convention arrangements and the policy of the party press which were based upon Comintern directives or instructions (J.A. 244-245). Kornfeder knows of no instance during his membership,

[1] The "Thesis and Resolutions" represented the prime authority of Respondent in its programs, policy and practical orientation for the period 1930-1934 which were applied in practice and in Respondent's schools (J.A. 360).

1919-1934, when Respondent deviated from Comintern instructions (J.A. 336) and shows that the qualifications for attending Communist training schools in Moscow were set up by the Comintern, and that members of Respondent recommended to become students at the schools had to be approved by the Comintern (J.A. 301-304). Nowell and Honig both were in Moscow during the 1930's as students and representatives of Respondent and participated in the work of the Communist International, particularly the preparation of directives to Respondent—which directives were carried out (J.A. 369, 379-385, 471-473, 477-480). Meyer, an American citizen, returned to the United States in 1934, having been a member of the British Communist Party, and was not required to fill out an application to join Respondent since he was merely transferring from one section of the Communist International, of Communist movement, to another (J.A. 681). Johnson, a member of Respondent from 1930 to 1940 and at one time on the Central Committee, was taught at Respondent's National Training School, and saw in operation, that under the rules of the Comintern no person could hold or resign from a position of leadership without the approval of the Comintern (J.A. 656). He also states unequivocally that he knows of no single instance during his membership where Respondent ever opposed a decision of the Comintern (J.A. 668).

The foregoing is only a part of the considerable testimony on the activities of the Communist International concerning the Respondent in the United States but serves to illustrate Respondent's role as a member or part of the Communist International.

In view of our finding that the Communist International was founded and controlled by the Soviet Union, and of our further finding that the Communist International dominated and controlled Respondent, and upon the entire record, we find and conclude that the Communist International for over twenty years constituted the organizational instrumentality through which the Soviet Union dominated and controlled the Communist Parties throughout the world, including Respondent.[1]

As later herein covered, Respondent announced its "disaffiliation" from the Communist International in 1940, and the "dissolution" of that organization was announced in Moscow in 1943. It is pertinent before concluding this aspect of our findings concerning the Communist International to note that the Communist International stood "wholly and unreservedly upon the ground of revolutionary Marxism and its further development, Leninism" (Ex. 125, p. 8). Because of the importance of "Marxism-Leninism" in this proceeding, its meaning is determined in detail later in this report.

Concerning Respondent's organizational form and changes therein, we find that early in Respondent's existence, in 1924, the Communist International "decided" that various factions in the United States should amalgamate into a single party, which was done. The evidence hereinafter summarized and the entire record establishes that Respondent is that Party (J.A. 240, 1333, 1474; Ex. 12(a), p. 2; Ex. 126, p. 237).

We further find that in 1929 another factional dispute existed in Respondent which was a reflection of a struggle in the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and in the Communist International between the forces led by Stalin and those led by Bukharin. Although a minority of only about 10 percent in Respondent, led by Foster, supported Stalin, whereas the majority of about 90 percent led by Lovestone and Gitlow sided with Bukharin, the solution of the dispute dictated by Stalin was adopted by the Comintern and accepted by Respondent, representatives of the Comintern being sent to the United States to supervise its effectuation. The result of the "liquidation of the factional situation in the Communist Party" (Ex. 126, p. 245, J.A.

[1] Respondent's witness Gates stated on cross-examination that "The Communist International was an actual organization of the world Communist movement and we were affiliated at one time. We are not affiliated now, and the organization no longer exists" (J.A. 1246-1247).

1481) was the expulsion from Respondent of Lovestone, Gitlow and others and the placing of the leadership of Respondent in the Foster group. Earl Browder was recalled from China by way of Moscow to become General Secretary of the Party. Foster was given a high position. He became a "builder of the Party" (Ex. 126, p. 247, J.A. 1477). This is the William Z. Foster who is presently National Chairman of Respondent (J.A. 266-271; Ex. 114, Ex. 126).

In 1940, Respondent announced its disaffiliation from the Communist International. We find that the primary reason for the disaffiliation was to avoid registration of the Respondent as a foreign agent under the Voorhis Act of October 17, 1940; and that the disaffiliation did not alter in any substantive way the relationship between Respondent and the Communist International or the world Communist movement. Respondent's amended answer admits it was "affiliated" with the Communist International prior to November 1940, and states that it "disaffiliated" from the Communist International in November 1940. The amended answer and the evidence offered by Respondent seek to establish, however, that, "Since 1940, the Communist Party has had no international affiliation of any kind—although it follows with interest the experiences of other Communist Parties, reads their journals, and on appropriate occasions sends or receives fraternal greetings" (amended answer, J.A. 178).

Witness Meyer was present as a member at the State Committee meeting when the delegation to the convention of Respondent which considered the disaffiliation reported back to the Illinois-Indiana District. The substance of the delegation's report was that the disaffiliation was a matter of expediency, that it changed nothing fundamentally or significantly, and that it had to be done to preserve the legality of the Party (J.A. 693). Witness Lautner was a delegate to the convention and also describes the understanding of the convention to be that the disaffiliation was one of expediency which in no way affected the Party's attitude on the question of proletarian internationalism (J.A. 879-880). Witness Crouch attended a convention-time meeting of the Politboro and district organizers where Earl Browder, then general secretary of the Party, said that the actual relations of the Respondent to the Communist International would remain exactly the same in the future as they had in the past, that Respondent would continue to be guided by the Communist International and that because of the political development of Respondent the matter of formality in the relationship was no longer as necessary as it had once been (J.A. 421-423). The district organizers were assigned the duty to go back to the respective districts and explain the reasons for disaffiliation which Crouch, being a district organizer at the time, did (J.A. 423).

Respondent's witness Flynn testified on cross-examination that she was on the National Committee of Respondent when the resolution of disaffiliation was discussed. She says:

> "* * * we were not disaffiliating in anger, or disaffiliating to fight the Communist Internationale. It was, you might say, a friendly divorce" (J.A. 1300).

We find the evidence preponderates to establish that the disaffiliation was for the expediency of avoiding registration as a foreign agent and did not alter Respondent's relationship with the Communist International or the world Communist movement.

We have heretofore set forth our finding that the Communist International was the means or vehicle through which the Government and the Communist Party of the Soviet Union directed and led the Communist Parties of the various countries, including Respondent. In 1943, upon approval by the various member Communist Parties of a proposal by the Presidium of the Executive Committee, the Communist International was dissolved[1] (J.A. 839-840).

[1] Petitioner's witness Dr. Mosely considers that because of the nature of the Communist International, the "proposal" to dissolve it by its Presidium was regarded as a "decision" to dissolve it (J.A. 840).

Respondent, having a few years earlier announced its "disaffiliation" from the Communist International, was not "called upon to participate in the decision" (Pet. Ex. 207, p. 657, J.A. 1573-1574). It did, however, hail and support the dissolution (Exs. 205, 206, 207; J.A. 558-561, 1572-1574). Stalin, who at the time was the chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the USSR and a leading member of the Politboro of the Central Committee of the CPSU, stated the dissolution was "proper and opportune" in that it facilitated the organization of a general onslaught against the common enemy, "Hitlerism" (Ex. 204). In supporting and hailing the dissolution of the Communist International, Respondent took the same line as that expressed by Stalin, i.e., that the dissolution "is a well aimed blow . . . at Hitler . . ." (Ex. 206, J.A. 1573), and pointed out in the Daily Worker that the "particular organizational form for international proletarian unity . . . became a hinderance to the further strengthening of the national workers' parties" but that the dissolution "must not be mistaken as a sign of weakness or of helpless collapse" (Ex. 205, J.A. 1572). In view of the foregoing, and upon consideration of the subsequent manifestations of the operations of the world Communist movement and of Respondent's conduct and activities as elsewhere herein covered, and upon the entire record, we find and conclude that the dissolution of the Communist International was merely the termination of the use of that "particular organizational form", and a change in the means and the particular vehicle for promoting and advancing the world Communist movement.

We find that during the year following the announced dissolution of the Communist International, Respondent's organizational form and some of its tactics underwent a change. It became known as the "Communist Political Association" from May 1944 until June 1945[1] when it was [1] Foster opposed the change on the ground it was not in line with the revolutionary position of Marxism-Leninism. His opposition was contained in a letter to the National Committee, which letter was suppressed from the membership at the time and not made known until shortly before the change back to the CPUSA (J.A. 1138-1139, 1302-1303, Ex. 208, pp. 660-661).

reconstituted as the Communist Party (J.A. 1144-1152). During this period, there was a de-emphasis on the use of some of the Marxism-Leninism principles and the central teaching was around the current documents of the Party, which put forward the so-called "Teheran line" that advocated, at least for the time being, a peaceful co-existence of the United States and the Soviet Union (J.A. 691-692). We note that in becoming the CPA there was no substantial change. Respondent's membership and leadership were the same (J.A. 1130-1132; Ex. 433), and upon reverting to the CPUSA in 1945, similarly, its membership was the same and, with one substantial exception, so was the leadership (J.A. 1152). Because of his lack of adherence to the proper tactical line, Earl Browder was characterized as a "revisionist" and "deviationist", and was deposed as a leader whereupon the full Marxist-Leninist revolutionary ideology and action was again re-emphasized (J.A. 976-977, 1144-1152).

Respondent's present organizational form commenced with its return in 1945 to the name Communist Party upon simultaneous dissolution of the Communist Political Association (J.A. 1152-1153). A primary purpose of again changing was to re-emphasize the Marxist-Leninist Classics, particularly the writings of Stalin, the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) and Dimitroff's Report to the Seventh Congress which deals with the true nature of how to conduct the united front while forwarding the Communist revolutionary aims (J.A. 1145-1146).

We find that in addition to this re-emphasis on Marxism-Leninism, which it was established by the evidence in this proceeding are the basic laws for a world Communist revolution, the facts directly surrounding the reconstitution are indicative of foreign domination and control of Respondent.

[1] In January 1950, Petitioner's witness Lautner, then on Respondent's Central Control Commission, and Jack Kling, then National Treasurer, discussed Browder's recent pamphlet wherein he stated that during the fifteen years of his leadership in Respondent, all major policies put into effect had the previous knowledge, consent and active support of the decisive international Communist leadership. Kling called it stool pigeon work on the part of Browder (R. 11272).

A few weeks after returning from Moscow to France, Jacques Duclos, a leader of the French Communist Party, member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International until the announced dissolution of that organization, and a spokesman for the world Communist movement, issued a statement through the French Communist Party Journal, entitled "On the Dissolution of the Communist Party of the United States" (Ex. 208; J.A. 562-563; see also: J.A. 705-706, 784-787, 1144-1152; Ex. 372, J.A. 1692-1694). Duclos' statement appeared in the April 1945 issue of the French publication. The substance and effect of the Duclos statement is that it was a mistake to dissolve the Communist Party of the United States—"in truth, nothing justifies the dissolution of the American Communist Party, in our opinion" (Ex. 208, p. 671); that a "powerful Communist Party" in the United States is necessary "in the struggle taking place between the progressive forces of the earth and fascist barbarism" (Ex. 208, p. 672; J.A. 1575). Upon the record, we find that the Duclos statement represented authoritative criticism made by a spokesman for the world Communist movement (J.A. 565, see also: J.A. 566-567).

In the month (May 1945) following the publication of the Duclos statement in the French Communist Party organ, Manuilsky, a leading Soviet Union Communist, and a former official of the Communist International, who at the time was in the United States as Ukranian representative to the United Nations Conference on Organization in San Francisco, let it be known to Respondent that it should observe the guidance and counsel of the French comrades (J.A. 1135-1143, 1182-1185, 1294). In June, the National Board of the Communist Political Association met and called a meeting of the National Committee for later in the month, which in turn called a national convention for July. It was at this convention that the CPUSA was reconstituted in its present form as a militant Marxist-Leninist party (J.A. 1143-1154).

As in the case of forming the Communist Political Association the year before, the same persons who had been officials of the CPA and the Party before that, led in reforming the Communist Party and, with the exception of Browder and a few others with minor rank, remained the leaders of the reconstituted party. As earlier herein found, Browder was expelled as a "revisionist" for departing from the orthodoxy of Marxism (see J.A. 1150; Ex. 208, p. 660, J.A. 1574-1575; Ex. 372, J.A. 1692-1694). Foster, upon taking over as a national chairman pointed out the necessity for re-emphasizing the revolutionary line of Marxism-Leninism (Ex. 372, J.A. 1692-1694).

The record establishes that subsequent to the reconstitution of Respondent, an additional event of significance has taken place in the world Communist movement—the formation of an organization known as the Information Bureau of Communist and Workers' Parties or the Communist Information Bureau, sometimes referred to in the record as the "Cominform". The significance lies in Respondent's attitude toward this organization, the sameness of views and policies of Respondent and the organization, and Respondent's use and treatment of statements appearing in For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, the official organ of the Cominform.

The exact nature and characteristics of the Communist Information Bureau are not precisely defined on the record. The record shows that the organization is composed of a number of Communist Parties of various countries (Exs. 214-A and 367; J.A. 1575-1578, 1676-1677) and was established as a result of a decision taken at a conference held in Poland toward the end of September 1947 (J.A. 580-581). The record contains copies of two reports given at this founding conference, one by A. Zhdanov, then a member of the Politburo of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and the principal Soviet representative at the founding conference (Ex. 214-A, J.A. 1575-1578). The other report was given by Georgi M. Malenkov, then a member of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and secretary of the CPSU.[1] (J.A. 937-

[1] Subsequent to the closing of the hearings for the purpose of taking evidence in this proceeding, and upon the announced death of Joseph Stalin, Malenkov has become the announced leader of the Soviet Union. See additional reference to Malenkov at p. 92-98 of this report.

938; Ex. 367, J.A. 1676-1677). Based on these reports and the testimony of witnesses, we find that the purpose of the Communist Information Bureau is to mobilize forces in opposition to United States "imperialism".[1]

Shortly after the establishment of the Cominform, Respondent announced publicly that "the present political situation in the United States is such that the Communist Party should not affiliate" with the new Information Bureau, but stated the establishment of the Bureau "is of great significance" and makes more effective the "resistance to the program of imperialist expansion". Respondent's announcement further states that Respondent "will continue to promote the international solidarity of all anti-fascists and anti-imperialists" (Ex. 368).

Respondent's witnesses Gates and Flynn, members of the National Committee, in summarizing Respondent's position stated that all they know about the Information Bureau is what they read in the "capitalist" press and the journal of the Bureau; that the Information Bureau never issued directives to Respondent; and, that Respondent's use of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy is to see what is going on within various Communist Parties throughout the world with whom Respondent shares common interests. The record shows an attitude of arrogance and evasiveness on the part of witness Gates concerning the Communist Information Bureau which causes us to discount much of his testimony on the matter. Even after considerable questioning on cross-examination he was unwilling or unable to explain what was meant by "official documents" of the Cominform for which Respondent waited, before taking a position regarding the organization, and was unwilling or unable to explain why and how, in that connection, Respondent's announcement that it would not join the Cominform was made seven days before publication of the first issue of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, dated November 10, 1947, which he had said might have been the official documents. Upon being asked whether issues of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy weren't received over here "before they were published? Before November 10, when the first issue came out?", the record shows the following at (J.A. 1249):

> A: [by Gates] "Well, I don't believe in the supernatural, but if you do that may have been possible.
>
> "Mr. Brown: That is unnecessary.
> "The witness: I can only answer a stupid question in such a way."

Later, Gates was questioned regarding whether the Communist Party in the United States or the Daily Worker or Political Affairs ever deviated from the expressed views and policies of the Cominform, and answered to the effect that the Party and Daily Worker never deviate from what they consider the best interests of the American people and "if we have not expressed any disagreement with any views that have been put forward in For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, that is because we believe those views have not been in contradiction to the interests of the American people" (J.A. 1249-1250). He was then asked to give any instances of deviation and replied, "I have answered the question." The question was repeated by a Panel member who asked the witness if he could answer yes or no, to which the reply was, "(It) is a loaded question," and upon being advised the panel did not consider it to be, the witness responded with, "You may not think so, but I think so."; and, "After all, I am the one who is on the witness stand and not you" (J.A. 1250).

The evidence shows that the Zdhanov report, contained in the first issue of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, was studied in Respondent's clubs or cells as "the key to the whole movement" (J.A. 777-778); that it was used in Respondent's schools as a major document stating and explaining the strategic aims of the world Communist movement (J.A. 953-957; 1064-1065). Malenkov's report was also studied and discussed (J.A. 937-938). The record further shows that copies of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy have been made available to functionaries and clubs or cells of Respondent. Petitioner's witness Philbrick, based on nine years' membership and activity in the Party, states that a member of Respondent could not disagree with a directive or a position taken by the Cominform and still remain a member of the Party (J.A. 780-781). Additional facts concerning the Communist Information Bureau are set forth elsewhere in this report.

The two aforementioned reports of Zdhanov and Malenkov (Ex. 214-A, Ex. 367; J.A. 1575-1578, 1676-1677) comprise the most direct evidence of record bearing upon the nature and characteristics of the Communist Information Bureau aside from what is contained in Respondent's announcement that it would not join the organization. Zhadanov's report says the Communist International was dissolved because "the direction[1] of these parties [what he calls "mass labor parties"] from one centre became impossible and inexpedient" (J.A. 1577). But, he continues, "experience has shown that such mutual isolation of the Communist Parties is wrong, harmful and, in point of fact, unnatural" and that "continued isolation may lead to a slackening of mutual understanding, and at times, even to serious blunders" (Ex. 214-A; J.A. 1578).

Malenkov puts it as follows (J.A. 1676-1677):

> "The absence of contact between Communist Parties is a hindrance in coordinating the actions of Communists in various countries in their resistance to the plans of the imperialists, particularly now, when American monopoly capital is organizing an offensive against Communism and democracy against the U.S.S.R. and the new democracies, developing its expansionist plans with the intention, under the guise of 'aid', of enslaving a number of European and other countries, and when Communists are called upon to define their attitude to these plans of American imperialism.

"In our opinion it is necessary to put into effect definite measures designed to eliminate the present abnormal situation in this respect.

"That is why we consider it necessary to discuss at the present conference both the international situation and the question of improving contact between Communist Parties, of establishing regular connections between them a view to achieving mutual understanding, exchange of experience and voluntary coordination of activities of the Communist Parties whenever they consider this necessary" (Ex. 367, p. 145).

Respondent's statement characterized the Cominform as "a medium through which these parties can consult, and, if they deem it desirable, coordinate activity" (Ex. 368, p. 2).

In 1943, upon approval by the member Communist Parties of a proposal by the Presidium of the Executive Committee, the Communist International was dissolved to stop what they called false charges that the International dictated directives from Moscow.[1] As later herein developed, a fundamental principle of the world Communist movement is to do the best possible for the cause under given circumstances—to charge when conditions warrant and to retreat when conditions require so as to marshal forces and await the sharpening of the opportunities. In view of these facts, of the foregoing facts concerning the Cominform, and on the entire record, we find and conclude that the Communist Information Bureau represents what the Communists consider the best possible substitute at the present time for the Communist International and that Respondent's support of the Information Bureau, its use of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, and its non-deviation from the line of the Bureau, are done for the purpose and with the aim of advancing the objectives of the world Communist movement.

Summarized, the foregoing establishes that shortly after its formation in 1919, Respondent became a part of the "World-Communist Party", dominated and controlled by the Soviet Union; that in 1924, Respondent was "amalgamated" pursuant to instructions of the Soviet Union; that in 1929, a factional dispute in Respondent was settled by the Soviet Union and new leadership of Respondent was installed according to directives from the Soviet Union; that in 1940, Respondent publicly announced "disaffiliation" from the Communist International (organizational form of the World Communist Party) and that the real reason being to avoid registration as a foreign agent and its "disaffiliation" was merely pro-forma and represented no change; that from May 1944 to June 1945, Respondent's name was changed to Communist Political Association and Respondent followed the tactical maneuver of advocating the possibility of peaceful co-existence between the United States and the Soviet Union; that in June 1945, Respondent changed its name back to the Communist Party under circumstances in which the Soviet Union played an active part; and that since June 1945 there have been no major or substantial organizational changes in Respondent.

In addition to the fact that the variations in the organizational structure of Respondent have been based upon specific directives and instructions from the Soviet Union, these variations are a manifestation of Respondent's following the over-all Marxism-Leninism policy of doing what is opportune at any stage of the revolution, as later herein developed.

In determining whether or not Respondent is dominated and controlled by a foreign government, we have taken into consideration certain facts established on the record concerning the careers and activities in their official capacities of a number of Respondent's present leaders, including its national chairman, William Z. Foster. We have previously herein set forth the fact that Foster became a leader of

Respondent as a result of the solution in 1929 of the factional dispute in Respondent upon action by Joseph Stalin, and the Communist International. In this connection, it is pertinent to consider the following statement by Stalin in 1929 as contained in certain speeches he made on the American Communist Party (J.A. 1542):

> "The struggle for the winning of the millions of the working masses to the side of Communism must be intensified. The fight must be intensified for the forging of real revolutionary Party cadres and for the selection of real revolutionary leaders of the Party, of individuals capable of entering the fight and bringing the proletariat with them, individuals who will not run before the . . . storm and will not fall into panic, but will sail into the face of the storm" (Ex. 145, p. 111).

It is reasonable to conclude that the selection of Foster as a leader of Respondent following the speech of Stalin, indentifies Foster as the type of leader to whom Stalin referred.

We further find that for a number of years prior to 1940, Foster was an official of the Communist International; that Foster and Jack Stachel, among others, represented the Respondent at the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International in Moscow in 1935; that Foster is a recognized spokesman for the world Communist movement; that Foster is recognized among Communists as an authority on and follower of Marxism-Leninism; that Foster in 1944 did not push his objections to the formation of the Respondent as the Communist Political Association but rather refrained from deviating, for the stated reason that he would have been expelled if he had. In view of the foregoing, and upon the whole record, we conclude that William Z. Foster has been controlled in his activities as a top leader of Respondent by leaders of the Soviet Union and, during its existence, by the Communist International; and we find that this furnishes some evidence that Respondent as an organization has been and is controlled by the Soviet Union.

We further find that a substantial number of Respondent's present leaders including Foster, Stachel, Bittelman, Green, Winter, and Williamson have been to the Soviet Union on numerous occasions on Party business and have been indoctrinated and trained in the Soviet Union on Russian strategy and policies. These leaders have taught in Party schools, written for the Party press, and spoken at Party meetings, on various phases of Marxism-Leninism, including the leading position of the Soviet Union, the concept of proletarian internationalism, and the necessity of revolutionary overthrow of imperialist nations, particularly the United States. We find that Foster and these other leaders of Respondent have accepted the views and policies of the Soviet Union and have carried such views and policies into Respondent, making them the views and policies of Respondent. We find that this fact furnishes additional evidence that Respondent is dominated and controlled by the Soviet Union.

In making the foregoing findings, we have taken into consideration the facts as to the recognition by Respondent's leaders of a disciplinary power in the Soviet Union, and the allegiance of such leaders to the Soviet Union, as elsewhere in this report set forth.

The variations in the organizational structure of Respondent can very well be said to conform to the over-all policy of Marxism-Leninism of doing what is expedient under the given circumstances at any stage of the revolution, as set forth in Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, pp. 21-22; J.A. 1647-1659), one of Respondent's compilations of basic Marxist-Leninist material. It is pertinent at this point to determine the meaning of "Marxism-Leninism" as understood and followed by Respondent.

2. Marxism-Leninism

The Respondent's constitution (1948) (Ex. 374; J.A. 1695-1706) (readopted in 1950, J.A. 171) states in the first sentence of its Preamble: "The Communist Party of the United States is a political party of the American working class, basing itself upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism." Respondent's amended answer (pp. 10, 20-21, J.A. 171, 179-180, 182-183) also admits that Marxism-Leninism is basic to the CPUSA. Marxism-Leninism is nowhere in the record specifically defined. It should be noted that we recognize that the theory of Marxism-Leninism, as such, is not an issue in this proceeding. Nor is it our purpose to consider the merits of Capitalism vis-a-vis Communism. However, in view of the fact that Marxism-Leninism is declared to be basic to Respondent and because of the numerous references to it in the course of these proceedings, and in order to cast as much light as possible upon the issues involved, we have deemed it important to determine its actual meaning from the evidence of record. In this section, we present our findings of what it is, and how it is understood, used and followed by Respondent. We have limited ourselves here, in the main, to the meaning of Marxism-Leninism. The extent of Respondent's acceptance of it and adherence to it is more specifically treated in other portions of this report, wherein it is shown that adherence to Respondent's conception of Marxism-Leninism is evidentiary of submission to the domination and control of the Soviet Union.

In our determination we have had to reach certain conclusions concerning some of the terminology employed both in the writings and in the testimony of the witnesses. Where a difference in the meaning of any term appeared, we have given it the meaning warranted by a preponderance of the evidence.

The sources of Marxism-Leninism and also its corpus are to be found in the writings of Marx, Lenin and Stalin and their collaborators, which writings are generally referred to as the "Classics".[1] In order to understand the content of these Classics, we deem it desirable to present something of the background in which they are produced and also to indicate what we consider to be the chief contributions of each of the above individuals to the Classics and to Marxism-Leninism.

In the middle of the nineteenth century, Karl Marx, a German scholar, and Frederick Engels, an Englishman, developed what became known as Marxism. This was a form of Socialism. The basic tenet of Socialism is the ownership by the state of all means of production and distribution. According to Marx, all society consisted of antagonistic classes, the principal one being the bourgeois or capitalist class, which, as a result of owning privately the means of production, exploited the propertyless working class. Marx announced particular interest in the propertyless factory workers whose numbers had increased as a result of industrialization. These factory workers he designated as the proletariat. Marx was influenced by the dynamic theories of the German philosopher Hegel, and applied Hegel's theories to the materialistic concepts of the Greek philosophers and developed a system which he called dialectical materialism. This is a theory of reality assuming continuous transformation of matter and dynamic inter-connection of things and concepts and implies social transformation through socialism toward a classless society. Marx came to the conclusion that the only true value was the labor of the industrial working class. It was his thesis that capitalism had to expand in order to continue to exist and, as it spread, the proletariat class would correspondingly increase in numbers. According to his conception of history, capitalism contained the seeds of its own destruction and consequently it was inevitable that the classless state of society which he designated as Communism would ultimately come about. In order to expedite this, he theorized, it was necessary that the proletarian class, which would be greater in numbers than the bourgeoisie, be organized and be given leadership by a political party of all the workers of the world. The objective of this party would be to bring capitalism to an end and substitute for it a dictatorship of the proletariat in a socialist state. Eventually, according to his theory, the dictatorship of the proletariat would not be necessary because the state would wither away as soon as its citizens had become conditioned to living in a one-class society. Two of his most basic considerations were the class struggle and the world-wide character of the revolution. Much of this appears from the Communist Manifesto (Ex. 31, J.A. 1339-1342), published by Marx and Engels in 1848.

Lenin, a Russian revolutionist, adapted Marxism to Russian revolutionary purposes.[1] He proceeded to implement it in a way that gave it a practical turn. He utilized slogans. Consequently, he gave capitalism a new name: "imperialism". The quintessence of imperialism is monopoly-capitalism which "is the eve of the proletariat social revolution". He recognized that for the success of the proletariat revolution two things were most important: rigidity of organization and flexibility of policy. Organizationally, one of his first postulates was the necessity of creating a homogeneous group of disciplined professional revolutionists, among whom no factionalism or dissent would be tolerated, as a nucleus for the party of the proletariat. It should be noted that the Communist Party was formed in 1898 in Russia.[2] Lenin's group therein, the Bolsheviks, obtained control of that party in Russia because it was an intransigent body which permitted no deviation or compromise.

Stalin later advanced the Marxist-Leninist ideas to a practicality which developed somewhat differently from Marxist theoretical schemes. He says (History of the CPSU(B)) (Ex. 330, pp. 355, J.A. 1629):

> "The Marxist-Leninist theory is the science of the development of society, the science of the working-class movement, the science of the proletarian revolution, the science of the building of the Communist society. And as a science it does not and cannot stand still, but develops and perfects itself. Clearly, in its development it is bound to become enriched by new experience and new knowledge, and some of its propositions and conclusions are bound to change in the course of time, are bound to be replaced by new conclusions and propositions corresponding to the new historical conditions."

What this means becomes clearer from what he previously stated (J.A. 1628-1629):

"The power of the Marxist-Leninist theory lies in the fact that it enables the Party to find the right orientation in any situation, to understand the inner connection of current events, to foresee their course and to perceive not only how and in what direction they are developing in the present, but how and in what direction they are bound to develop in the future."

There is also clarification in what he says subsequently (J.A. 1630) when he tells how Lenin altered Marxism because of his experience in the Russian revolutions of 1905 and 1917. The tactical aspects of the theory thus attains a flexibility which would appear to make it mean what the current leaders of the CPSU want it to mean. So regarded, the theory supplies an easy explanation for all phenomena and furnishes a justification for any line of conduct which these leaders have adopted.

Marx, Lenin and Stalin represent the supreme authorities of what became known as Marxism-Leninism as these writings constitute its body. All postulated the revolution on a world-wide basis. Lenin, and after him Stalin, proclaimed that it was not necessary to wait until the proletariat throughout the entire world was ready for a revolution, but that the attack against the capitalist world rightfully began by breaking its chain at the weakest link, which proved to be Russia. The Communists in Russia having succeeded, they then sought help from the proletariat throughout the world to support their victory. They also proceeded to try to foment revolution in any part of the world where it had a chance of being successful. The best example of applied Marxism-Leninism is the Communist International. That this organization is based on Marxism-Leninism appears from the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, pp. 231-232; J.A. 1628-1632). (See also pp. 19-20 and 25, under Organization and Leadership, supra). Using the Communist International as an instrument, the Soviet Union, as the leader of an integrated organization with subsidiary groups throughout the world, issued directives to the Communist parties in the several countries. What these directives were and how they applied to Respondent will appear in a discussion of the Classics and of the testimony of witnesses which follows, as well as in various other sections of this report.

Against this background, it is pertinent to inquire why the Classics were written. An examination of their content discloses that they were intended to create, promulgate and advance the world revolution of the proletariat. At an intermediate stage, they concentrated in large measure on Russia. At no time, however, was the main objective forgotten and when the revolution was successful in Russia, the emphasis was again brought back to the revolution on an international scale.

It should be noted that in the summaries, paraphrases, and quotations from the Classics which follow, we have conscientiously striven, and, we believe, successfully so, for complete accuracy and have endeavored to hold closely to the essence of the material being analyzed. Where excerpts have been quoted, we have selected those which we consider representative of the whole tenor of the writing from which they are taken.

How basic the international and revolutionary factors of Marxism-Leninism are appears at its inception in The Communist Manifesto (Ex. 31); "The history of society is the history of class struggles." (p. 9) "The bourgeoisie has played a most revolutionary role in history." (p. 11) ". . . and are now to be superseded by the proletariat through similar means." (p. 15) The proletarians have become organized into a class and consequently into a political party (p. 18). Of all the classes opposing the bourgeoisie, the proletariat alone is a really revolutionary class (p. 19). The Communists are a proletarian party whose aim is the conquest of political power by the proletariat (p. 22). The proletariat will become the ruling class and will use its political supremacy to wrest all capital from the bourgeoisie. The measures used to do this will be different in different countries (p. 30). The Communists everywhere must support every revolutionary movement against the existing order of things. Their ends can only be attained by the forcible overthrow of all existing social conditions. Workingmen of all countries are exhorted to unite for the Communist revolution (p. 44) (see J.A. 1339-1342).

This international and revolutionary aspect is further stressed in the writings of Lenin and Stalin. In State and Revolution (Ex. 139), Lenin objects to the "chauvinism" of those "leaders of Socialism" who would water down Marx's doctrine by limiting it to single states (p. 5). Speaking of the Russian Revolution of 1917, he states: "This revolution can be understood in its totality only as a link in the chain of Socialist proletarian revolutions called forth by the imperialist war" (p. 6). "A Marxist is one who extends the acceptance of the class struggle to the acceptance of the dictatorship of the proletariat" (p. 30). In The Dictatorship of the Proletariat (Ex. 423, pp. 47-48; J.A. 1749-1751), one of Lenin's fundamental postulates is quoted by Stalin on the international question: International imperialism cannot live side by side with the Soviet Republic and the greatest difficulty of the Russian Revolution is "the necessity to solve international problems, the necessity to call forth the world revolution" (J.A. 1750). Stalin makes this thought even clearer in Foundations of Leninism. He says (J.A. 1428) that Leninism is not merely a Russian but an international phenomenon; and (J.A. 1429) that the Russian Communists were impelled by the whole situation, domestic and foreign, to transfer the struggle to the international arena. The same thought is even more forcibly expressed in Stalin's definition of Leninism (Problems of Leninism, (Ex. 138, pp. 7-9; see also p. 19) (J.A. 1500-1503)). From this definition it is clear that the whole movement based on Marxism-Leninism is regarded by its founders and chief protagonists as an internationalism which must operate with common theory and strategy and tactics in all countries. It is inescapable that all those working for the ultimate ends of the movement must work in unison and in one cohesive organization on a world-wide basis. This thought is expressed strongly in the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8, p. 67):

> "4. It follows from the fundamental principles laid down above, that the policy of the Communist International on the National and Colonial questions must be chiefly to bring about a union of the proletarian and working masses of all nations and countries for a joint revolutionary struggle leading to the overthrow of capitalism, without which national equality and oppression cannot be abolished.
>
> "5. The political situation of the world at the present time has placed the question of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the foreground, and all the events of world politics are inevitably concentrating around one point, namely, the struggle of the bourgeois world against the Russian Soviet Republic, which is grouping around itself the Soviet movements of the vanguard of the workers of all countries, and all national liberation movements of the colonial and subject countries, which have been taught by bitter experience that there can be no salvation for them outside of a union with the revolutionary proletariat, and the triumph of the Soviet power over Imperialism."

The same thought suffuses the Classics throughout. It is not a tenet that can be accepted here and rejected there.

It is integral in the whole texture of the material of the movement which those Classics represent. Like a fast dye, it colors every portion of that movement and cannot be eradicated because it is of its very essence.

It would burden this report unduly to quote in extenso the references in the Classics to the international and revolutionary nature of Marxism-Leninism and the interrelation of the sections of the Communist parties in all countries which it requires. Attention is directed to a number of places where these references are deemed particularly significant:

Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, pp. 17-19; p. 45, last par. and p. 46; J.A. 1427-1443); History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (B) (Ex. 330, pp. 273-75; J.A. 1618-1632); State and Revolution (Ex. 139, pp. 5, 6); The Theory of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 422, pp. 85-89; J.A. 1746-1748); The Dictatorship of the Proletariat (Ex. 423, pp. 48-49; J.A. 1749-1751).

We conclude from the above that the Classics advocate a revolution of the proletariat on an international basis, through the instrumentality of an international organization.

The primary objective of the world revolution is the termination of capitalism and establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat. Lenin used the word "imperialism" to designate what he calls the parasitism and decay of capitalism at its highest stage of historical development (Imperialism, Ex. 140, p. 14). This imperialism is the arch enemy of the proletariat (J.A. 1520-1521):

> "Not the slightest progress can be made toward the solution of the practical problems of the Communist movement and of the impending social revolution unless the economic roots of this phenomenon are understood and unless its political and sociological significance is appreciated.
> "Imperialism is the eve of the proletarian social revolution. This has been confirmed since 1917 on a world-wide scale."

It should be noted that the Classics emphasize strongly the use of slogans. The word "imperialism" and its adjective-noun form "imperialist" are used therein to form a variety of slogans. Thus, it will be seen from The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Ex. 330, pp. 167-69) that the Bolsheviks advanced the slogan of "converting the imperialist war into a civil war" and the slogan-policy of "the defeat of one's own government in the imperialist war" (J.A. 1618-1619). As a corollary to this approach, wars are designated as "just" and "unjust". The "just" or "anti-imperialist" war is waged assertedly to liberate the oppressed from the yoke of imperialism. The "unjust" war is supposedly to conquer and enslave others. Wars of the first kind, the Bolsheviks supported. Of wars of the second kind, the Bolsheviks said, a resolute struggle must be waged against them to the point of revolution and the overthrow of one's own imperialist government (J.A. 1619). From these pages it will be seen that, according to Lenin, while capitalism is decaying and moribund, "imperialism" would not rot on the stalk; it could not be overthrown without a revolution.

We conclude from this that the Classics designate as the enemy, against which the international revolution must be directed, that form of capitalism which they term "imperialism"; and that they declare that any war waged against such imperialism is a just war and any war waged in its behalf is an unjust war.

Equally basic with the international and revolutionary character of the movement is the tenet of the dictatorship of the proletariat. In view of the divergence of testimony of witnesses for Petitioner and those of Respondent concerning the meaning and application of this tenet, we have taken particular pains to ascertain its real character. It is best understood from the volume Dictatorship of the Proletariat (Ex. 423, J.A. 1749-1751), which is one of a series of "Readings in Leninism", consisting of articles and excerpts dealing with basic points of Leninist theory. Lenin's postulates on this question (pp. 47-54 of Ex. 423) make clear how important this phase of the revolution is deemed. Having once seized power through revolution, he states it becomes necessary that this power be held by a "dictatorship of the proletariat". A definition of what this is intended to be appears on page 49:

> "The dictatorship of the proletariat is not the end of the class struggle but its continuation in new forms. The dictatorship of the proletariat . . . which has achieved victory and has seized political power, against the bourgeoisie who have been defeated but not annihilated, who have not disappeared, who have not ceased their resistance, who have increased their resistance."

Lenin makes clear that this dictatorship is not to be confused in any way with "popular" and "non-class" government. He goes on to say:

> "The class that has seized political power has done so, conscious of the fact that it has seized power alone. This is implicit in the concept of the dictatorship of the proletariat: This concept has meaning only when one class knows that it alone takes political power into its own hands, and does not deceive either itself or others by talk about popular, elected government, sanctified by the whole people."

Having seized power, the proletariat may find it necessary to enter into certain alliances to maintain that power. These alliances, however, are only temporary for the purpose of consolidating the revolutionary victory. It is emphasized again on page 52 that violence is essential, although not exclusive. The following passages are enlightening (J.A. 1750):

> "But of course, the dictatorship of the proletariat does not merely mean violence, although there is no dictatorship without violence.
>
> "Dictatorship (says Lenin) does not mean violence alone, although it is impossible without violence. It likewise signifies a higher organization of labor than that which previously existed. (Collected Works, Russian edition, Vol. XXIV, p. 305)"

It involves the concept of "exercise of violence, unrestricted by law" (p. 54). Also significant is the position to be held by the Communist Party in the dictatorship of the proletariat. It is stated (p. 100): "The stronger the Communist Party created by us in each country the sooner will the 'Soviet idea' triumph." The Communist Party has declared itself to be necessary to the working class not only before the seizure of power and not only during the seizure of power, but before the power has passed into the hands of the working class. It is further stated (p. 101) that the Party must keep in control until the classless society is finally attained.

From Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, pp. 34-38, J.A. 1500-1510) it will be seen what meaning Lenin and Stalin give to the dictatorship of the proletariat. At the core of the dictatorship is the Party which gives directions. These directions are carried out by the mass organizations of the proletariat and are fulfilled by the general population. The minority seizes power and controls because the exploited workers have not yet developed their human faculties. There is another step which may become necessary. If the bourgeoisie resist or there is intervention in its behalf then the active body is the proletariat as a class. The Party takes power, the Party governs the country, and it is the core of this power; but it takes power in the name and purportedly on behalf of the class.

In Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, p. 53), the origin of the dictatorship of the proletariat is thus stated (J.A. 1431-1432):

> "Briefly: the dictatorship of the proletariat is the rule—unrestricted by law and based on force—of the proletariat over the bourgeoisie, a rule enjoying the sympathy and support of the labouring and exploited masses. (The State and Revolution.)

"From this follow two main conclusions:

"First conclusion: The dictatorship of the proletariat cannot be 'complete' democracy, democracy for all, for the rich as well as for the poor; the dictatorship of the proletariat 'must be a state that is democratic in a new way—for * the proletarians and the propertyless in general—and dictatorial in a new way—against * the bourgeoisie . . .' (Lenin, Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 34.)" * My italics.—J.S. (Ex. 121, p. 53).

"Second conclusion: The dictatorship of the proletariat cannot arise as the result of the peaceful development of bourgeois society and of bourgeois democracy; it can arise only as the result of the smashing of the bourgeois state machine, the bourgeois army, the bourgeois bureaucratic machine, the bourgeois police." (Ex. 121, p. 54).

We conclude that "dictatorship of the proletariat" as used in the Classics connotes a seizure of power by or in the name of the proletariat through violence, if necessary, and the absolute and despotic rule by a minority in the name of the proletariat.

In addition to the requirements for a rigid Party organization with a hard core of dedicated workers, noted above, the over-all policies and rules for effectuating the ends and objectives of the Party are to be found in the Classics. These are effected through an organizational principle known as "Democratic Centralism" and by general directions for strategy and tactics.

The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, p. 198, J.A. 1623) states that in July and August 1917, prior to the successful October Revolution, the CPSU adopted "new Party rules" providing that "all Party organizations shall be built on the principle of democratic centralism", which provided, inter alia, that all directing bodies of the Party shall be elected; that they give periodic reports to Party organizations; that there be strict Party discipline and the subordination of the minority to the majority; and that all decisions of higher bodies shall be absolutely binding on lower bodies and on all Party members.

Strategy and Tactics of The Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, p. 62) states (J.A. 1658):

> "The Party is the vanguard of the working class, and consists of the best, most class-conscious, most active and most courageous members. It incorporates the whole body of experience of the proletarian struggle. Basing itself upon the revolutionary theory of Marxism and representing the general and lasting interests of the whole of the worl ng class, the Party personifies the unity of proletarian principles, of proletarian will and of proletarian revolutionary action. It is a revolutionary organization, bound by iron discipline and strict revolutionary rules of democratic centralism, which can be carried out owing to the class-consciousness of the proletarian vanguard, to its loyalty to the revolution, its ability to maintain inseparable ties with the proletarian masses and to its correct political leadership which is constantly verified and clarified by the experiences of the masses themselves."

"Democratic Centralism" is stated by the witnesses for Respondent to represent the highest form of democracy in that it provides that all decisions and policies of the Party are determined by the membership and that authority flowed up from this membership through intermediate local and regional committees to the central committee. A decision once made, however, would be binding on all members. Witnesses for Petitioner testified that "Democratic Centralism" was theoretically a two-way process by which authority flo ed upward from Party cells through intermediate local or regional committees to the top and discipline flowed downward from the same channels. However, they stated that in practice the double process has been reduced to a single process in which discipline flows downward with limited right of discussion in the lower echelons on matters of local tactics.[1]

This policy is strongly expressed in the Programme of the Communist International (Ex. 125, p. 84, J.A. 1464):

> "This international Communist discipline must find expression in the subordination of the partial and local interests of the movements to its general and lasting interests and in the strict fulfillment, by all members, of the decisions passed by the leading bodies of the Communist International."

The idea behind democratic centralism is best expressed by Stalin in Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, pp. 119-121, J.A. 1442): What is required for success is an iron party under iron discipline. A Communist Party will only be able to perform its duty if its Party center is a powerful and authoritative organ. No factions are permitted—there must be absolute unity of will and that must emanate from the Party's center. All groups or factions which disagree must be immediately expelled.

We conclude from the whole record that "Democratic Centralism", as it is used in the Classics, is an organizational principle which contemplates a rigid discipline emanating from the top of the movement, binding on the parent and all subsidiary organizations and on all members of such organizations. Failure to adhere to such discipline is punishable by expulsion from the movement.

---

[1] As witness Kornfeder states it, (J.A. 306) he was taught that the Party's basic form of organization is a super-centralized political party with a high degree of discipline. He describes it as a military type of political organization with an established chain of command, permitting lower units considerable leeway in discussing local tactical problems. He states that he was taught that the general staff or the general headquarters of the organization was the Communist International, in Moscow. At the time of which he speaks, he says that the Communist parties of all countries were affiliated with the Communist International. Witness Philbrick stated (J.A. 780-781) when asked whether a member of his group could refuse to accept the decision of the Cominform and still continue membership in the Communist Party of the United States, that such member could not continue as a member of the Party. Witness Lautner (J.A. 973-974) says that it was a breach of democratic centralism for any Communist Party anywhere, including the CPUSA, to refuse to follow the dictates of the Soviet Union.

With the organizational structure thus indicated, the Classics then provide strategic and tactical directions for arriving at the objectives of Marxism-Leninism.

One of the characteristics of Marxism-Leninism is that in addition to its doctrine it also provides directives for the attainment of the objectives contemplated by such doctrine. Marxism-Leninism is declared to be a guide to action. (History of the CPSU (Bolshevik)) (Ex. 330, p. 306, J.A. 1630). While the ends to be reached are fixed, the manner and methods of reaching them, it will be seen, are exceedingly flexible. What these are appear most concisely in Strategy and Tactics of The Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, J.A. 1647-1655). In summary, it states the following: The strategy and tactics were elaborated in the period of proletarian revolution when the question of the overthrow of the bourgeoisie became a question of immediate practice. Lenin brought into the light of day the ideas of Marx and Engels on tactics and strategy and developed them further into a "system of rules and principles for the leadership of the class struggle of the proletariat." (J.A. 1648). Communists of every country must adapt themselves to the peculiar features of the economics, politics, culture and national composition of the country in which they are operating (J.A. 1649). As long as national and state differences exist among peoples and countries, the unity of international tactics of the Communist working-class movement requires, not the elimination of variety, but an adaptation of the fundamental principles of Communism (Soviet power and the dictatorship of the proletariat) to the national and state differences. The vanguard of the working class having been won over, the next step is to seek the transition or approach to the proletarian revolution (J.A. 1650). The revolutionary class must be able to master all forms of social activity and must be ready to pass from one form to another with the utmost expedition (J.A. 1650). The tactics of the Bolsheviks were correct because they were the only international tactics and did everything possible in one country for the development, support and stirring up of the revolution in all countries (J.A. 1651). Bolshevism has helped in a practical way to develop the proletarian revolution in Europe and America (J.A. 1651-1652). The world proletarian revolution has been assisted, accelerated and supported by the victory of the proletariat in Russia (J.A. 1652). The objective elements of the working class movement are the economic development of the country, the development of capitalism, the disintegration of the old government, the spontaneous movements of the proletariat. The collision of classes proceeds irrespective of the will of the proletariat. But the subjective element, the reflection in the minds of the proletariat of these processes, is the subject of the directing influences of strategy and tactics (J.A. 1652-1653). The theory of Marxism postulates that the fall of the bourgeoisie, the seizure of power by the proletariat and the replacement of capitalism by socialism are inevitable (J.A. 1653). Strategy is the determination of the direction of the main blow of the proletariat at a given stage of the revolution (J.A. 1654) and it changes with the transition of the revolution from one stage to another and remains unchanged throughout the duration of a given stage (J.A. 1655). Tactics are the determination of the line of conduct of the proletariat during the ebb and flow of the movement, changing the forms of struggle and its slogans (J.A. 1656). Thus, in the Russian revolution changes were made as the struggle progressed; strikes, boycotts, slogans were used and varied along with the forms of organization, a worker's party operated more or less openly, as the immediate situation required. In the earlier phases the Party was compelled to resort to tactics of retreat. When the revolution ebbed, operations were less open and the Party went underground; and cultural work and the organizations "permitted by law" took the place of revolutionary mass organizations. The same was true during later stages of the revolution (J.A. 1656-1657). Tactics are the operations suited to the concrete situation of the struggle at any given moment (J.A. 1657). The successful struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat presupposes the existence in every country of a compact Communist Party, hardened in the struggle, disciplined, centralized and closely linked up with the masses. The Party is a revolutionary organization, with these fundamental strategic aims: It must extend its influence over the majority of the members of its own class, including working women and youth. It must secure predominant influence in the broad mass proletarian organizations, e.g., trade unions, factory councils, cooperatives, sport and cultural organizations. It is particularly important to win over the trade unions (J.A. 1456). Leadership of wide sections of the toiling masses should be acquired by the proletariat and the membership of the middle classes of the peasantry must be secured (J.A. 1456). It must carry on propaganda against all forms of "chauvinism" and against "imperialist" maltreatment of enslaved peoples and races (e.g., Negroes, "yellow labor" and anti-semitism) (J.A. 1457). In determining its line of tactics, each National Communist Party must take into account the concrete internal and external situation, the correlation of class forces, the degree of stability and strength of the bourgeoisie and fit slogans and methods of struggle to the circumstances of the particular country. Demands and slogans must be lent to the revolutionary aim of capturing power and overthrowing bourgeois capitalist society. The Party is to utilize the daily needs and struggles of the working class as a starting point from which to lead the working class to the revolutionary struggle for power (J.A. 1458-1459). When the ruling class is disorganized, propaganda in favor of increasingly transitional slogans and mass action should be used. Strikes and armed demonstrations should be used, as well as intensified revolutionary work in the army and the navy (J.A. 1459). When conditions are right, it is dangerous to fail to start rebellion. When the revolutionary tide is at ebb, partial slogans and demands should be made which correspond with the everyday needs of the workers. United front tactics should then be used (J.A. 1460). In this period of marking time, demands and slogans should be made in such spheres as labor, local politics and world politics, e.g., the attitude toward the USSR, the struggle against "imperialism" and the war danger, and systematic preparation for the fight against imperial war (J.A. 1461-1462). Also systematic work must be carried on among the proletarian and peasant youth; and, in imperialist countries, Communist Parties must impair the war effort against colonies (J.A. 1462). The further consolidation of the Land of the Soviets, the mighty growth of the international authority of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the growth of the Communist International are all accelerating the development of the world Socialist revolution (J.A. 1658). The capitalist world is entering a period of sharp clashes. The united front of the working class must be established. The victory of the revolution has to be prepared for by a strong proletarian revolutionary party (Ex. 343, 81-82; J.A. 1658). When the country in which they live engages in an imperialist war in order to utilize the economic and political crisis, it is the duty of Communists to turn the war into a civil war for the overthrow of capitalism (J.A. 1463). Should an imperialist war break out, the interest of the workers of all countries demands that the defense of the Soviet Union be considered paramount (J.A. 1463, 1659).

From this resume, it becomes apparent that the rules for making the doctrine effective have within them instructions for short range and long range action and that they are intended for more than local application. In addition, there has been provided an elasticity which makes them applicable under an endless variety of circumstances. Considerable significance, therefore, may attach to their use by allied groups under given circumstances at a given time. Therefore, the manner and extent of their application by the CPUSA is a factor to be considered in determining whether the United States Party is a part of a world-wide movement and whether it is dominated and controlled by the Soviet Union.

Another factor of Marxism-Leninism which pervades the Classics with the same insistence as its international revolutionary character is the dominant position of the Soviet Union, that is to say, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, in the world Communist movement. At an earlier date, i.e., after the successful revolution in Russia, Stalin points out (Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, p. 64, J.A. 1510)) that for an ultimate victory of socialism in the world, the protection of that Russian victory by workers of all countries is necessary. In Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121 at p. 19) he quotes Lenin (J.A. 1429-1430):

> "'History has now confronted us [i.e., the Russian Marxist-J.S.] with an immediate task which is the most revolutionary of all the immediate tasks that confront the proletariat of any country. The fulfillment of this task, the destruction of the most powerful bulwark, not only of European, but also of Asiatic reaction, would make the Russian proletariat the vanguard of the international revolutionary proletariat'.
>
> "In other words, the centre of the revolutionary movement was bound to shift to Russia.
>
> "As we know, the course of the revolution in Russia has more than vindicated Lenin's prediction.
>
> "Is it surprising, after all this, that a country which has accomplished such a revolution and possesses such a proletariat should have been the birthplace of the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution?

"Is it surprising that Lenin, the leader of this proletariat, became the creator of this theory and tactics and the leader of the international proletariat?"

* * * * *

In The Theory of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 422, p. 87, J.A. 1747) Stalin states it is necessary to support Russia in order to make it "the basis of the further unfolding of the world revolution, into the lever for the further disintegration of imperialism." He emphasizes this (J.A. 1747) by asserting that "the victorious proletariat of Russia" should "after it has expropriated the capitalists and organized its socialist production at home," rise against the capitalist world, attract to itself the oppressed classes of other countries, raise insurrection in them against the capitalists, and even use military force against the exploiting classes and their states.

Dimitroff in The United Front (Ex. 149, at pp. 279 and 280; J.A. 1545-1548) restates the importance of the USSR to the international proletariat. And in the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8, p. 67, J.A. 1332) it will be seen that the Russian Soviet Republic is "grouping around itself the Soviet movements of the vanguard of the workers in all countries."

What is being advocated is an extension of Lenin's hard core principle to a wider area: Whereas in the Soviet Union the Party is that core, in the world scheme the USSR becomes the center. As such, it must be protected, and from it will emanate leadership which will direct and hold together the party in other countries. This thought is thus expressed in Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, p. 81, J.A. 1658):

"In the struggle to defend against fascism the bourgeois-democratic liberties and the gains of the toilers, in the struggle to overthrow fascist dictatorship, the revolutionary proletariat prepares its forces, strengthens its fighting contacts with its allies and directs the struggle toward the goal of achieving real democracy of the toilers—Soviet power.

"The further consolidation of the Land of the Soviets, the rallying of the world proletariat around it, and the mighty growth of the international authority of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the turn toward revolutionary class struggle which has set in among the Social-Democratic workers and the workers organized in the reformist trade unions, the increasing mass resistance to fascism and the growth of the revolutionary movement in the colonies, the decline of the Second International and the growth of the Communist International, are all accelerating and will continue to accelerate the development of the world Socialist revolution."

At pages 95 and 96 (J.A. 1659) it is declared that if an imperialist war breaks out, the defense of the Soviet Union must be considered paramount.

It will be seen from the above that allegiance to the Soviet Union assumes considerable proportions in the Classics of Marxism-Leninism. First, after the 1917 Revolution, it must be protected from outside intervention. Thereafter, its role as a leader of a successful world revolution is stressed. At all times, loyalty and assistance are due it in any conflict which may arise between it and any "imperialist" power.

We conclude from the Classics that the Soviet Union has a specific place in Marxism-Leninism; it represents the first victory of the proletariat; therefore, it is the center of the world proletariat and it is entitled to the allegiance of the proletariat everywhere. The authority of its Communist Party is international. The corollary of this is that a Communist Party which adheres to Marxism-Leninism is, of necessity, under the domination and control of the Soviet Union.

It is also evident from the Classics that as the Soviet Union is to be considered the leader of the world proletariat in the class war, so the United States takes on a special importance as the mightiest of the "imperialist" powers, the arch enemy of the proletariat. Lenin, in Imperialism (Ex. 140, p. 125, J.A. 1521) states: "In the United States economic development in the last decades has been even more rapid than in Germany, and for this very reason the parasitic character of modern American capitalism has stood out with particular prominence." Stalin points out (Foundations of Leninism, Ex. 121, last par., p. 55 and 1st two pars., p. 56, J.A. 1432-1433) that conditions in the United States had changed since the days of Marx and that this country could no longer be considered one in which there could be a "peaceful evolution of bourgeois democracy into a proletarian democracy." The United States has become definitely "imperialistic" and "the law of violent proletarian revolution" becomes applicable to it (J.A. 1433-1434). This quotation from Lenin in this connection (J.A. 1433) reveals how strongly the Soviet Union felt that action was required in this country:

> "Today, said Lenin, 'in 1917, in the epoch of the first great imperialist war, this qualification made by Marx is no longer valid. Both England and America, the greatest and the last representatives—in the whole world—of Anglo-Saxon 'liberty', in the sense that militarism and bureaucracy were absent, have slid down entirely into the all-European, filthy, bloody morass of military-bureaucratic institutions to which everything is subordinated and which trample everything underfoot. Today, both in England and in America, the 'preliminary condition for every real people's revolution' is the smashing, the destruction of the 'ready-made state machine' (brought in those countries, between 1914 and 1917, to general 'European imperialist perfection.'" (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 37)

A Resolution On The American Question (Ex. 43) issued by the Communist International in 1929, begins with the statement that (J.A. 1352): "The United States of America has developed into the mightiest imperialist power . . . The task of the Workers (Communist) Party is to form a broad united front and to intensify the struggle against American imperialism." (See also R. 2290, 2338-2339). Specific attention is directed to this aspect of the approach to be used in applying Marxism-Leninism to the United States. In Dimitroff's The United Front (Ex. 149, pp. 41-43, J.A. 1546) an anti-fascist party is suggested. We find, at page 43, some revealing language. "Our comrades in the United States acted rightly in taking the initiative for the creation of such a party. . . . We should develop the most widespread movement for the creation of such a party, and take the lead in it." The "we" who are planning parties in the United States have "comrades" there who have already started work in that direction. The Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8, p. 28, J.A. 1326) has this to say:

> "The class struggle in almost every country of Europe and America is entering the phase of civil war. Under such conditions the Communists can have no confidence in bourgeois laws. They should create everywhere a parallel illegal apparatus which at the decisive moment should do its duty by the party, and in every way possible assist the revolution. In every country where, in consequence of martial law or of other exceptional laws, the Communists are unable to carry on their work lawfully, a combination of lawful and unlawful work is absolutely necessary."

In Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution it is stated (J.A. 1651-1652):

> "Bolshevism has helped in a practical way to develop the proletarian revolution in Europe and America more powerfully than any party in any other country has ever succeeded in doing."

From these expressions, it must be concluded that the Classics disclose a positive attitude on the subject of the United States which makes it a prime objective for the activities of the Soviet Union and for any of its subsidiaries.

In order fully to understand what Marxism-Leninism is, the significance of certain of its programs and policies must be considered. Certainly in the Classics themselves, these programs and policies are all aimed at one objective: the forwarding of the world revolution. That such a revolution was not an evolutionary one in the normal use of this term appears from Stalin's statement in the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Ex. 330, p. 168; see J.A. 1618-1622) which he presents as one of Lenin's teachings; without a revolution of the working class capitalism cannot be overthrown; even though capitalism is moribund, it must be given the coup de grace (J.A. 1620):

> "Lenin showed that under imperialism the unevenness of development and the contradictions of capitalism have grown particularly acute, that the struggle for markets and fields for the export of capital, the struggle for colonies, for sources of raw material, makes periodical imperialist wars for the redivision of the world inevitable."

There is nothing to indicate that "The elements of a war of liberation from imperialism" is used in any figurative sense. The context in which this appears leads to a contrary conclusion.

Consequently, while some of the policies and programs may have a dual character, one of the elements of each of them is always the furtherance of the war against capitalism and of speeding the ultimate victory of the proletariat over the "imperialists". This we find to be so in work with and in labor unions, with youth and with minorities; it is the real purpose in resorting to secrecy, entering into united fronts, and in resorting to slogans;

it is the moti ating force in training Communists, requiring reports from them and insisting that they do not deviate from the strict Party line.

As appears from Lenin's What Is To Be Done? (Ex. 417, pp. 105, et seq.) the Marxist should not be interested in labor unions, as such, but rather from the use which can be made of such organizations as part of the revolutionary scheme. A union can be used as a front for political, agitational and revolutionary org nizations. As Stalin points out in Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, p. 30, J.A. 1508-1509), they are the all embracing organizations of the working class. "They constitute a school of Communism." "They unite the masses of the workers with the vanguard." In effect, what Lenin and Stalin are saying is: Here are ready-made groups of substantial size, made up of members of the class which according to the labor theory of value are the exploited, and consequently should belong in the revolution; and infiltration of such groups by a hard core of diligent workers for the Party offers a ready field for propaganda and proselytizing. As it is stated in the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8, p. 29, J.A. 1328),

> "Every party desirous of belonging to the Communist International should be bound to carry on systematic and persistent Communist work in labor unions, co-operatives and other labor organizations of the masses."

The same volume discusses the trade union movement (Ex. 8, p. 53, et seq.), and (J.A. 1331) it states: "Consequently, the Communists must strive to create as far as possible complete unity between the trade unions and the Communist Party, and to subordinate the unions to the practical leadership of the Party, as the advance guard of the workers' revolutions." Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, pp. 67-68) states that ne of the principal ta ks of a Communist is the joining of a union to win the leadership in the workers' struggle.

We conclude that the Classics direct Communists to engage in activity in trade unions in order to utilize such unions for the purposes of the Party and to further the world revolution.

The Classics disclose that youth programs are considered to be important. Concerning the Young Communist League, Stalin says in Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, p. 31), "Its task is to help the Party educate the younger generation in the spirit of socialism. It provides young reserves for all the other mass organizations of the proletariat in all branches of administration." Lenin's attitude on the necessity of particular emphasis on youth may be gleaned in part from two quotations in an article in Political Affairs (Ex. 477, pp. 86 and 88, J.A. 1775-1776):

> "Is it not natural for young people to predominate in our party, the party of revolution? We are the party of the future and the future belongs to the youth. We are a party of innovators and innovators are always followed most eagerly by the youth. We are a party of self-sacrificing struggle against the rotten old system, and the youth are always the first in self-sacrificing struggles."
> "The youth will decide the issue of the whole struggle, the student youth, and still more the working-class youth . . . Do not fear their lack of training, do not tremble at their inexperience and lack of development. If you are unable to organize and stimulate them to action, they will turn to the Mensheviks and the Gapons, and this inexperience of theirs will cause five times more damage. . . . Only you must unfailingly organize, organize and organize hundreds of circles. . . . Either you create new, young, fresh, energetic, militant organizations everywhere for revolutionary Social-Democratic work of all sorts and kinds, and among all strata, or you will perish, enveloped in the glory of 'committee' bureaucrats."

Dimitroff offers another reason for enlisting the efforts of youth (The United Front, Ex. 149, p. 150, J.A. 1546-1547):

> "The whole anti-fascist youth is interested in uniting and organizing its forces. Therefore you, comrades, must find such ways, forms and methods of work as will assure the formation, in the capitalist countries, of a new type of mass youth organizations, to which no vital interest of the working youth will be alien, organizations which, without copying the Party, will fight for all the interests of the youth and will bring up the youth in the spirit of the class struggle and proletarian internationalism, in the spirit of Marxism-Leninism."

There is no question that the enrolling and training of youth is deemed to have value in the world revolutionary movement. From the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8, p. 8, J.A. 1322), it appears that the International League of Communist Youth was given a representative with a right to vote on the Executive Committee of the Communist International and the Communist International had the right to a similar representative on the Executive Committee of the League. And in the Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, p. 69), it is stated that "Systematic work must also be carried on among the proletarian and peasant youth . . ." it will be seen from this that a youth program is considered an essential part of the activities of the Party in all countries and is required by the dictates of Marxism-Leninism.

We conclude that the Classics direct Communists to engage in youth programs for the purposes of the Party and to provide reserves for the world revolution.

In Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, p. 89, J.A. 1430), Stalin states that Lenin developed the tactics of Marx and Engels and combined them into a system of rules and guiding principles for the leadership of the class struggle. Among these, as noted above, is the use of slogans and their propaganda value. (Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution, Ex. 343, pp. 66-67); Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, p. 92). "Imperialism" is one of these; and as a corollary thereto, "anti-imperialism" and "just and unjust wars". "Peace" was another of the slogans which eventually came into use. These slogans have been used by the Soviet Union, by the Communist Parties throughout the world, and by the CPUSA. Their common use, contemporaneously and currently by the Soviet Union and the CPUSA, is significant. Their use also is recommended for the purpose of forwarding the world revolution. (Strategy and Tactics, supra).

The same can be said to apply to united front tactics. Throughout the Classics, the value of such tactics is stressed. The extent of such collaboration furnishes a considerable part of the texts of the writings of Lenin and Stalin. Dimitroff's The United Front (Ex. 149; J.A. 1545-1548) devotes itself to that tactical principle. Again, it should be noted that united fronts, at the organizational, political and national levels, are to be used but not in any way that might bolster capitalism. At all times they are to be used to protect the Party in Russia, to increase the number of its adherents and always to promote the world revolution. Their simultaneous adoptions by the Parties in various forms in various countries also cannot be ignored. This stands out particularly at the time of the Soviet Union's changes of alliances before and during World War II.

We conclude that the use of slogans as shibboleths for the purposes of Communist Parties, including Respondent, in order to advance the world revolution, is directed by the Classics.

Secrecy and its uses also finds a place of prominence in the Classics. (See Ex. 343, pp. 22-26; see J.A. 1657; and Ex. 417). Respondent contends that its practice by the CPUSA was not for the purpose of concealing foreign direction, domination and control or of expediting or promoting its objectives, but rather to protect its members from local hysteria or from being harassed and penalized economically for the holding of unpopular views. In What Is To Be Done?, which Respondent urged its members to read as recently as 1951, Lenin shows how Party members can use trade unions as a front, keeping their identity as revolutionists secret. Stalin, in his speeches on the CPUSA (Ex. 109), published by the Central Committee of the CPUSA, in pamphlet form, speaks of the danger of exposing the "conspirative" nature of the Communist Party (J.A. 1425). The manner of use and timing, and the nature and degree of these practices negatives the contention of Respondent's witnesses (see also: J.A. 667-668). Certainly, as used in the Classics, secrecy was not always to be used for legal purposes. (What Is To Be Done?, Ex. 417, p. 7).

We conclude that the secrecy directed by the Classics is, among other things, for the purpose of concealing the conspiratorial nature of Communist Parties and for the advancement of the world revolution.

Operationally, it will be seen that the Classics propose a strong central organization, on an international as well as on a national scale. As Trachtenberg says in the introduction to What Is To Be Done? (Ex. 417): "Only a centralized party, working according to a carefully prepared plan, with each member assigned a specific task for which he is to be held accountable, could successfully lead the Russian working class in the struggle against capitalist exploitation and tsarist rule." Lenin points out that this, it is necessary for the organization to be composed of professional revolutionists, trained men, that no movement can be durable without a stable organization of leaders to maintain its continuity. The training of cadres is thus basic in the movement (p. 116); and in view of the centralized nature of the organization, leaders and cadres once trained, can be depended upon to keep in touch with the center of the movement and keep it informed of all that transpired by reports.

We conclude that the training of leaders and cadres and the reporting by such leaders to the controlling body of the movement is directed by the Classics.

The position taken by the Classics on the questions of Minorities and Colonials is also basic to the whole movement advocated by Marx and Engels, Lenin and Stalin, particularly the latter two. Any contributions in those directions by their collaborators is no more than elaboration and amplification of the words of these four. They are implicit in Lenin's definition of imperialism (See Ex. 121, pp. 76-82; Ex. 138; Ex. 140; Ex. 343, pp. 63-65; J.A. 1434-1435, 1655, 1658). It will be seen from these and other portions of the Classics that the founders of the movement were not concerned with purely local conditions in Russia. In Foundations of Leninism, cited above, it becomes clear (p. 79) that the national problem is part of the general problem of the proletarian revolution to be used for that purpose only to the extent that it is of advantage to such revolution (J.A. 1427-1431). This also appears from Strategy and Tactics (supra, pp. 63-65; J.A. 1651-1652).

We conclude that the Classics contemplate work among Colonials and Minorities to advance the world revolution (see also; J.A. 1462-1463).

One of the requirements of Marxism-Leninism is conformity. Discipline is considered vital. Deviation from doctrine and practice is not permissible except in local problems in the area of minor tactics. That non-deviation is abjured is patent from Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, pp. 119-21, J.A. 1442):

> "The achievement and maintenance of the dictatorship of the proletariat is impossible without a party which is strong by reason of its solidarity and iron discipline. But iron discipline in the party is inconceivable without unity of will, without complete and absolute unity of action on the part of all members of the Party."

As stated by Stalin (J.A. 1442), the existence of factions is incompatible either with the party's unity or its iron discipline. He quotes Lenin:

"In the present epoch of acute civil war," says Lenin, "a Communist Party will be able to perform its duty only if it is organised in the most centralised manner, only if iron discipline bordering on military prevails in it, and if its Party centre is a powerful and authoritative organ, wielding wide powers and enjoying the universal confidence of the members of the Party." (Selected Works, Vol. X, p. 204).

The penalty for nonconformity is expulsion from the Party (p. 121). (See also Strategy and Tactics, Ex. 343, p. 62).

We conclude that the Classics require conformity on the part of all organizations and members in the movement and that no deviation from the party line is permitted on penalty of expulsion therefrom.

From the Classics themselves, Marxism-Leninism constitutes an uncodified system of political philosophy and practice which declares that it is inevitable that a classless state of society will be reached through an intermediate stage in which there will be socialist states controlled by dictatorships of the proletariat under the leadership of the Soviet Union. For the attainment of these dictatorships, a hard core of revolutionary zealots is required who operate under exceedingly flexible rules on an international basis. The vehicle for their operation is a so-called political party, the Communist Party, which is provided with strategic and tactical directives. The first objective is to bring to an end capitalistic (bourgeoisie) society. For this purpose, special attention must be paid to labor unions, youth, Minorities and Colonies. Temporary alliances, known as fronts, may be entered into, but always with the ultimate revolutionary goals in view. Capitalism is termed "imperialism". Slogans should be employed in aid of the Party's objectives. "Anti-imperialism" and "peace" are two of the slogans which may be effective. The leader of the movement which is integrated on an international scale, must be the Soviet Union, which must be protected as the first country in which the dictatorship of the proletariat has been attained. All allegiance is due the Soviet Union as the leader of the vanguard of the proletariat. Force and violence shall be used to reach objectives if persuasion and guile are ineffective. Where lawful methods are effective, these should be used; where not, unlawful methods should be resorted to. Secrecy, where necessary, should also be used. Discipline must be rigid, though a certain amount of latitude is permissible in local tactical matters, under an organizational structure designated as democratic centralism. This is supposed to be a two-way process but orders emanating from the top, which is the Soviet Union, may not be ignored. Operations are to be on a world-wide basis, including in its sphere, inter alia, the United States. Taken on its face, Marxism-Leninism, as it appears in the Classics, is a system under which there is to be a world-wide revolution for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat under the domination and control of the Soviet Union. This revolution is to take place in the various countries as conditions permit. An accepted Marxist-Leninist party is one which is a part of this system.

Subjecting the content of the Classics to further scrutiny in the light of the testimony of the witnesses for both sides, we are better able to reach a determination of the real meaning of Marxism-Leninism. All of the witnesses (except Petitioner's witnesses, Dr. Mosely, Logofet and Carrington) testified to some knowledge of the Classics and of Marxism-Leninism. They studied it, were taught it, or were subject to it in practice. Admittedly, the Classics have been in use by the members of the CPUSA continuously to the date of the hearings in this proceeding.

Respondent's chief witness concerning Marxism-Leninism was Herbert Aptheker, a teacher at the Jefferson School of Social Science, a school with a general Marxism-Leninism orientation (J.A. 1261), whom it offers as an expert and who says Marxism-Leninism principles are fundamental to the CPUSA. (J.A. 1262).

Summarized, his testimony is to the effect that Marxism-Leninism is in its inception and thereafter to be found in the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin Stalin and others (J.A. 1262-1267); that its heart is dialectic materialism; that its aim is the end of capitalization and the attainment of a socialist state which will eventually dissolve into Communism; that it is a science, usable in all countries as such and that in this sense it applies to the United States which is an "imperialist" nation; that it only contemplates revolution in the sense of an evolutionary change to rule by the proletariat, and that a dictatorship of the proletariat means rule by that class when that class represents a majority; that its international aspects are only fraternal and represent a similarity of interests of the working class of all countries; that the Classics are used for illumination and for historical background by Communists; that Marxism-Leninism provides a guide for action only as a science would be a guide for a scientific experiment; that it contains no directives and the CPUSA is not controlled or dominated by the Soviet Union thereby; that the name Marxism-Leninism is not used to denote any hidden meaning for the direction of initiates in the Communist movement (J.A. 1242-1274).

What is not clear from his testimony is the actual content of Marxism-Leninism and the extent of its applicability to the CPUSA. It is not possible to determine therefrom what portion of the Classics have asserted current validity and how much of Marxism-Leninism is acknowledged to be applicable in any particular place. Moreover, the credibility of his testimony as a whole is impaired by the inverted outlook it discloses. An example of this appears (J.A. 1272) from his explanation of Lenin's use of Aesopian language (Imperialism, Ex. 140, p. 7, J.A. 1518-1520) which Lenin said was used to avoid Czarist censorship when the pamphlet was originally written. Aptheker says, as a Marxist-Leninist scholar, that Marxists understood Lenin's use of Aesopian language not in terms of deception: Lenin was not trying to fool anybody; he was trying to illuminate ideas by the use of allegory (J.A. 1272). This is patently not so, as far as the censors were concerned. It did apply to the initiates of his own party.

Again, his insistence that Douglas was right in lying to a court because that court represented what the witness characterized as tyrannical oppressors is indicative of a viewpoint that might permit his conscience to misstate facts if they did not favor his side. His explanation that the American revolution was not in a real sense a revolution because the colonists were oppressed by England casts some doubt on his definitions of revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat. Moreover, these definitions are not in accord with those which appear in the Classics. The evasiveness of Aptheker's testimony, and the distorted viewpoint, indicated above, renders extremely questionable what he says concerning Marxism-Leninism and the Classics and the extent to which they apply to the CPUSA.

Respondent's witness Gates adds little to the meaning to be given to Marxism-Leninism. He says it is a social science (R. 14353, 15032, 15360). He says that the CPUSA is an independent and completely autonomous organization (R. 15044). Concerning the Classics, he states that while Problems of Leninism has been used for teaching in the CPUSA schools, it is taught as historical writing and not as a blueprint or an order for Communists to follow all over the world and that it is not the program of the CPUSA (R. 15250).

Witness Flynn states that the Classics have been and are used in the Party schools as of the date of her testimony (June 26, 1952) but as reference books for history, and for the principles of Marxism-Leninism (R. 15968-15971).

The witnesses for Petitioner,[1] all of whom, as Party members, had some instruction in the meaning of Marxism-Leninism and some of whom were officials, writers or teachers for the Party, agree with Respondent's witnesses only to the extent that one of the component parts of Marxism-Leninism is the philosophic-sociological concept that capitalism must and will inevitably be superseded by a dictatorship of the proletariat which will eventually be succeeded by a stateless class of society known as Communism. This original Marxist doctrine, they state, has superimposed on it the revisions and the supplementations of Lenin, Stalin, Dimitrov, and others which provide it with plans, policies, programs and directives to bring about the end of the present capitalistic era, designated as "imperialism", on a world-wide scale and by any means, including force and violence. The effort to bring about the dictatorship of the proletariat is an integrated effort of the working classes in all countries and the leadership thereof is in the Soviet Union, where it has succeeded.

[1] Whose testimony we accept in this connection.

Witness Lautner states (J.A. 970): "The leader of the world Communist movement is the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Joseph Stalin[1] . . . And the Party he represents". He says adherence to Marxism-Leninism has implicit in it complete subservience on the part of all Communist Party organizations, whether in the United States or elsewhere, and on the part of the individual members in all strategic and most tactical matters, to the rulers of the Soviet Union. The CPUSA adheres to Marxism-Leninism and consequently its Constitution is no more than a by-law (J.A. 979) to Marxism-Leninism and has no validity except insofar as it conforms thereto. Petitioner's witness Budenz, a former Party member and Editor of the Daily Worker testified (J.A. 1152-1153) when asked the meaning of the first sentence of the Party's 1945 Constitution (which sentence is identical with the first sentence of the 1948 constitution):

> "Marxism-Leninism is a well-known and historical term in the Communist documents and discussions. It is that interpretation of so-called scientific socialism based on the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, and which holds as the goal of the Communist Parties of the world the necessity for the violent shattering of the bourgeoise states in order to set up in their place a completely new state machinery, the dictatorship of the proletariat. This shall be achieved under Marxism-Leninism through the Party of the new type, the Bolshevik Party under Bolshevik discipline, which rejects the concept of class peace'' (J.A. 1153).

He goes on to state that the Communists in the United States at that time (1945) regarded the American government as a bourgeois state and that further statements in the Preamble concerning the Communist Party's defense of the United States Constitution were not reconcilable with the sentence above quoted. He goes on to say:

''The statements cannot be reconciled. The dedication of Marxism-Leninism is the dedication historically and categorically to the violent shattering of the bourgeoise state as the necessary step toward progress, and this other language in the light of that, since Marxism-Leninism principles prevail, is merely a window-dressing for legal protective purpose. It is part of the Aesopian language recommended by Lenin''[1] (J.A. 1153-1154).

He states further that the Classics were used in his work up to the time he left the Party (October 1945 (J.A. 1160-1161)). Speaking of his use of Aesopian language, he states:

''I referred to Marxism-Leninism. I referred to Stalin as the leader, teacher and guide, things of that sort, which was Aesopian to the extent that it presented Stalin as the leader, teacher, and guide, but didn't explain that he completely controlled the Communist movement, although I could have done it because Bittelman had stated in Milestones that Stalin was the leader, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union was the leader'' (R. 13304).

---

[1] For a definition of ''Aesopian'', see ''Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism'' (Ex. 140, p. 7, n. 1, J.A. 1518, fn. 1).

He says, concerning Communist activity in the trade union movement: "No Communist is permitted to deviate from the line set down for the Communists of the world . . . " (R. 14330). Petitioner's witness Lautner, former Party member leader and teacher, tells what he was taught concerning the meaning of Marxism-Leninism, and at J.A. 947, states:

> "Marxism-Leninism taught us that monopoly capitalism or imperialism was a world-wide phenomenon, therefore there is need of a world-wide organization, an organization that has ties to successfully cope with this problem and eventually bring about the downfall of monopoly capitalism and imperialism."

Further, that the Program of the Communist International (Ex. 125, J.A. 1446-1472) was used by him in classes in 1947, 1948 and 1949 "because the program of the Communist International lays down the strategic aims of the Communist Parties" (J.A. 954).

Another witness for Petitioner, Meyer, said he taught Marxism-Leninism in Respondent's schools and that it was a body of doctrine which is first a philosophy of history, secondly, a guide to the Communist Party on the basis of that philosophy, in carrying out its historical role which is the overthrow of the capitalist system and its replacement with dictatorship of the proletariat to establish socialism which is to lead to the stage of Communism (J.A. 733). Petitioner's witness Philbrick, states he was taught this, and that the lessons of Marxism-Leninism were to be applied to present day affairs as a guide to action (J.A. 758 et seq.).

The witnesses for the Petitioner aver that the Classics represent a body of living doctrine and directives by which the Communists throughout the world are guided and governed. Witness Meyer testified (J.A. 689-691, 730) that the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, J.A. 1613-1632) was used on a living guide to revolutionary action based on the experience of the Bolsheviks and the writings of Lenin and Stalin. He points to a speech by Trachtenberg made in Washington, D. C., in 1949, which declares that the leaders must know the Classics and be able to apply the basic principles to any current situation at any time (J.A. 748). Witness Matusow says, by way of example of current applicability of the Classics that the Communist Manifesto, (Ex. 31, J.A. 1339-1342), though 100 years old, "is just as relevant today as it was in 1848 when it was written." He goes on to say that this was so of other pieces of Marxist literature, pointing out particularly The Young Generation by Lenin, written in 1905 and used extensively in the Labor Youth League in 1949 (J.A. 1057). The Classics were in use by the CPUSA, to his knowledge, as of December 1950 (J.A. 1048-1049). Witness Evans says the Classics were used in the Marxist-Leninist Institute from April 1949 to June 1950 (J.A. 1104-1107). Witness Budenz testified (J.A. 1166-1167) that Trachtenberg, head of the cultural commission in charge of the direction of Communist cultural activities and in charge of the Party's general publishing field, stated he was not permitted to issue any Marxist literature, especially the Classics, without the authorization of the Marx Institute in Moscow. The Daily Worker used the Classics in its work (J.A. 1160-1161). He states that Dennis recommended: "A thorough return throughout the Party to the Marxist-Leninist Classics, particularly to the writings of Stalin, the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Foundations of Leninism, and Dimitrov's Report to the Seventh Congress, which dealt with the true nature of how to conduct the United Front while forwarding the Communist revolutionary aims" (J.A. 1145-1146). While writing for the Daily Worker (from 1935 to 1945), Budenz did not directly advocate the overthrow of the government by force and violence. This was done by reference to Marxism-Leninism and the Classics (J.A. 1185-1186). Witness Lautner testified that on the basis of the Classics, at the National Training School in 1941, he was taught how Lenin applied Marxism to the epoch of imperialism and established a party of a new type; how Stalin applied this to the party as a force, the leading political party of the working class; that Marxism-Leninism was a guide to action in the party in the United States; that the aim of the party was to gain political and economic power in this country and that this was to be accomplished, on the basis of Marxism-Leninism, by a world-wide organization (J.A. 943-947).

From the Classics themselves, it is clear that force and violence was deemed necessary for the overthrow of the government of the Czars by the Russians. It is also clear that they call for international action by the working class in other countries so that Russia, when freed from the Czars would not be left standing in a hostile bourgeois world alone and friendless. The Classics definitely call for action on an international scale. It is the contention of the Respondent that the call to aid the Soviet Union was only applicable when the Soviet Union was weak and struggling; now that it is strong such international action on her behalf is not necessary. Is this so? It is clear that, in the period of the Communist International, the Classics were admittedly meant to be applied as the basic law of all Communist Parties, in every country where such parties existed. Under this basic law, the Soviet Union was the leader of a world organization of all such Communist Parties, in a world-wide movement to emancipate the working class from capitalist rule, so that directives, programs, and policies by which this was to be accomplished were clearly set forth in such Classics. Deviation therefrom was considered heresy and not to be tolerated.

While Marxism-Leninism is allegedly dynamic, there is no internal evidence in the portion of this amorphous amalgam which has been reduced to writing, and has become known as the Classics, which indicates a change in its character to make it inapplicable to the CPUSA. On the contrary, Petitioner's witnesses have established that the Classics are in current use and are applicable to the Party. Dr. Aptheker admits that no CPUSA member has altered the fundamental precepts of Marxism-Leninism.

We find the testimony of the witnesses for Petitioner, concerning Marxism-Leninism credible and in accord with the meaning thereof to be obtained from a reading of the record as a whole.

We find that the testimony of the witnesses for the Respondent concerning Marxism-Leninism is in and of itself, and in the context of the record as a whole, unrealistic, apologistic rather than explanatory, and not credible, except as to the origins of Marxism-Leninism and, generally speaking, that its objectives are the attainment of a socialist state under a dictatorship of the proletariat and an eventual classless state of society known as Communism.

How Marxism-Leninism is understood used and followed, by Respondent has been established in the discussion of the testimony of the witnesses, above. In addition thereto, consideration has been given to the numerous exhibits which shed light on the above question. From them it further appears that Respondent, its leaders and its members, taught, studied, discussed, used and applied the Classics in the manner intended by the authors of these Classics and to an extent incompatible with any claim that the Classics are not binding upon them in all fundamentals.

One of the most important, if not the most important, of the Classics in the period under examination in this proceeding, is the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, J.A. 1613-1632).[1] A reso-

[1] Witness Meyer's testimony on this point (J.A. 689) is sufficiently significant to warrant quotation here:

> "THE WITNESS: The fundamental textbooks used before the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union appeared—that must have appeared late in 1939, but I can't date it exactly. I can date it by epoch. It appeared during that general 1939 to 1940 epoch but I think it appeared in late 1939 or it might have been early 1940. At any rate before that appeared the major textbooks used, at the core of the whole problem—there were others used but the essential ones always were the Communist Manifesto of Marx and Foundations of Leninism by Stalin. The whole course of Marxism-Leninism was organized around these two. Then, so to speak, radiating from them were special problems: Lenin's State and Revolution, Lenin's Imperialism, Stalin's Problems of Leninism. I should say these were the central ones, except at one point also, I think in the earlier part of this period primarily, there were three rather lution, adopted August 10, 1939, signed by the Communist Parties of France, Great Britain, the United States, Germany and Italy, (Ex. 296), states, inter alia (p. 73):

> "The appearance of the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) is one of the greatest events in the life of the Communist world movement and of the international labor movement, in the struggle of the working people of all countries for emancipation. Written with the immediate participation of Comrade Stalin and authorized by the Central Committee of the C.P.S.U. (B.), the History occupies an extraordinary place among the classic works of Marxism-Leninism. The History is intended to play—and will undoubtedly play—a very important role in the successful mastering of Bolshevism by the Communists of the capitalist countries, in the consolidation of the Sections of the Communist International, and in raising their ideological and political level" (J.A. 1601-1602).

A reading of the exhibit as a whole is enlightening concerning the use of the Classics advocated by Respondent and the position they are given in the propagation of Marxism-Leninism. At page 83 it states:

> "(g) The work of the publishing houses is to be so organized that, besides the contemporary agitational literature, they not only publish the works of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, but also strive to achieve for them the very widest distribution" (J.A. 1608).

widely used textbooks of excerpts from the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin. One was called Strategy and Tactics, another the Theory of the Proletarian Revolution, and another one the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. After the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union appeared it became the Central Textbook."

Not only are the Classics given wide distribution but they are also integral in the teachings and activities of the Respondent.[2]

Consequently, we conclude that the Classics are one of the chief means by which the CPSU directs, dominates, and controls the CPUSA.

From a review of the Classics and of the testimony, we make the following findings concerning Marxism-Leninism as it is understood, used and followed by Respondent:

Marxism-Leninism is a composite of the doctrines, dogmas and guides to action of Marx and Engels, as supplemented and revised by Lenin, Stalin and others, which advocates a world-wide revolutionary movement. The objective of the movement is the destruction of capitalism (which it designates as "imperialism"). It asserts as its ultimate goal a stateless class of society which it designates as Communism. The first step toward this end is the attainment of a socialist state under a dictatorship of the proletariat. "Proletariat" generally is synonymous with "working class". But, "a dictatorship of the proletariat" connotes the rule by a minority in the name of the working class. Such a dictatorship should, theoretically, come about by a nonviolent revolution which would evolve from natural economic change. Actually, Marxism-Leninism requires that such revolution be hastened by action. This action must be taken by a dedicated group of revolutionaries banded together as a so-called political party; the Communist Party. Under the leadership of the Soviet Union, this Party shall bring about, by force and violence if necessary, dictatorship of the proletariat in every country of the world whenever circumstances shall permit. Marxism-Leninism includes within itself the plans and procedures to accomplish this end. Adherence to its principles involves acceptance of its doctrines, tenets and obligations; and membership in the world revolutionary movement mentioned above. Marxism-Leninism contemplates the Communist Party of the United States as part of the world Communist movement. The name Marxism-Leninism is frequently applied in an esoteric sense to conceal from the uninitiated the full implications of such adherence and membership.

[2] Some of the instances of the use of various of the more important Classics in evidence appears from the following exhibits which refer to study outlines, reading lists, school curricula, sales lists of Marxist literature and advertisements. It should be noted that these represent use of the items in years 1948 and 1949 and 1950. Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121) Exs. 339, 346, 351, 369, 370, 416, 419, 420, 424, 425, 427; Problems of Leninism—Stalin (Ex. 138) Exs. 370, 416, 419; State and Revolution—Lenin (Pet. Ex. 139) Exs. 346, 370, 424; Imperialism, The Highest Stage of Capitalism—Lenin (Ex. 140) Exs. 339, 346, 369, 370, 419, 425, 427; Communist Manifesto—Marx and Engels (Ex. 31) Exs. 339, 351, 369, 370, 420, 424; The Theory of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 422) Exs. 419, 425, 427; The United Front, The Struggle Against Fascism and War (Ex. 139) Exs. 346, 420, 424, 427; Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International (Ex. 8) Ex. 7; Mastering Bolshevism—Stalin (Ex. 335) Exs. 370, 416; What Is To Be Done? Ex. 417) Exs. 346, 370, 416, 420, 424.

We proceed to examine the record as to Respondent's basic policies and activities to determine the extent to which they are formulated and carried out pursuant to Marxism-Leninism as hereinbefore defined; the extent to which such policies and activities reflect compliance in their formation and execution with other directives or instructions of the Soviet Union; and, the extent to which such policies and activities have as their purpose the furtherance of the policies of the Soviet Union and the advancement of the objectives of the world Communist movement. We treat first with the voluminous evidence concerning what Respondent and other Communist Parties throughout the world Communist movement constantly term the "struggle against imperialism", and with Respondent's participation in such "struggle".

3. Imperialism

The record establishes and we find that among the major activities of Respondent are teaching, advocacy, and agitation in opposition to what Respondent calls United States imperialism. This includes programs and activities such as "the struggle for peace"; the doctrine of "just and unjust wars"; the theory that the world is divided into two hostile camps, one led by the Soviet Union and the other by the United States; and, the necessity of overthrowing existing "imperialist" governments by force and violence if necessary.

The record further establishes, and therefore we find, that a basic objective of the Soviet Union and of the world Communist movement is to bring about the downfall of the so-called "imperialist" countries including the United States believing that in so doing, several coveted objectives will be achieved; protecting and defending the Soviet Union, establishing the dictatorship of the proletariat in the various countries, centralizing of all power—political, economic, and social—in the Communist Parties.

Upon consideration of the evidence hereinafter summarized and upon the entire record, we further find and conclude that Respondent's teachings, advocacy, and agitation as above stated have as their objective and purpose the advancement of the world-Communist movement; and they are formulated and carried out on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and other directives and instructions from the Soviet Union. We proceed to review the more significant evidence establishing the foregoing findings.

Respondent's witness Dr. Aptheker says there never was a period when the Communists of the United States ceased to characterize the United States Government as imperialist, and that the United States with its social system and ruling class, fits the definition of imperialism as given by Lenin and as adopted by Respondent (J.A. 1273-1274). Typical of Respondent's position in this respect is the following quotation from an article appearing in the January 1951 issue of Political Affairs (J.A. 1721):

> "* * * U. S. imperialism is the most reactionary force in the world today, seeking to fascize, not only America, but every capitalist country" (Ex. 378, p. 9).

Additional illustration is furnished by an article by Betty Gannett published in the February 1951 issue of Political Affairs (Ex. 376, pp. 183-194) which emphasizes that the United States is imperialist and is plotting a new world war (J.A. 1713); that "one of the main pillars of U. S. imperialism is its anti-Sovietism" (J.A. 1713) whereas the Soviet Union is for peace, is not an aggressor, and, being a workers' state, cannot and does not pursue an imperialist course (J.A. 1713-1714). The oral and documentary evidence establishes convincingly that Respondent has consistently characterized the United States as an "imperialist" nation. This fact, standing alone, is not disputed on the record.

We proceed to review the evidence and make our findings concerning why Respondent teaches, advocates, and agitates against what it calls American imperialism. The Communist Manifesto (Ex. 31, p. 9) declares that society as a whole is splitting into two great hostile camps, the bourgeoisie and the proletariat (J.A. 1340). Lenin in Imperialism (Ex. 140, pp. 9, 11, 126) designates capitalism as "imperialism" and predicts a proletarian victorious revolution after the impending imperialist war; the United States is designated as imperialist (J.A. 1520-1522). In State and Revolution (Ex. 139, p. 6), Lenin explains in the preface that the Russian Revolution of 1917 "can be understood in its totality only as a link in the chain of Socialist proletarian revolutions called forth by the imperialist war." Stalin in Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121, p. 15) develops the idea further to show that "imperialism" has made the revolution inevitable and has provided favorable conditions for it (see J.A. 1429, 1433-1434). In Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, p. 9), he indicates that Leninism provides "suitable and obligatory" theory and tactics for the proletarian revolution against "imperialism" (J.A. 1503).

In 1927, the Communist International issued a "Resolution On The American Question" (Ex. 43) which states that "The United States of America, during the last decade, has developed into the mightiest imperialist power" (J.A. 1352); and, that the task of the Communist Party is "to form a broad united front and to intensify the struggle against American imperialism" (J.A. 1352). The Resolution lists the policy of the United States in China and its attitude against the Soviet Union among the questions that "must" be utilized by the Party to rally the broad masses in defense of the Soviet Union and in its struggle against American imperialism (J.A. 1353).

The evidence summarized above is illustrative of a quantity of evidence which establishes that it is fundamental to Marxism-Leninism and to the world Communist movement led by the Soviet Union that all countries other than those of a victorious socialist revolution—which encompasses only the Soviet Union and those brought within its orbit—are characterized as "imperialist", against which the Communist Parties must wage the "struggle against imperialism".

In addition to the voluminous documentary evidence of record, Respondent's continuous adherence to these fundamentals of Marxism-Leninism and of the world Communist movement is established by the testimony of Petitioner's witnesses based upon their experiences as members and officials of Respondent; upon directions they received while in the Party and the instruction they gave as teachers in the party; and upon their study of official Party publications. The more significant oral testimony is summarized as hereinafter set forth.

While Petitioner's witness Gitlow was a high officer of Respondent, until 1929, its aims and purposes were: to defend the Soviet Union as the fatherland of the working class of the world; to carry out the orders and directives of the Communist International; and to work for the undermining of the foundations of the American government in order to make it possible for Respondent to overthrow our form of government and set up in its place a dictatorship patterned after that which operates in the Soviet Union today (J.A. 225-226).

In 1932 (J.A. 351), Petitioner's witness Kornfeder, a former leading official of Respondent, taught in a school at the Party headquarters that the main doctrine of Lenin called for the complete and total overthrow of all existing social institutions, the government, the existing organizations that support the government, the complete elimination of the present state structure and its replacement by a dictatorship led by Respondent (J.A. 351-352).

Petitioner's witness Nowell was taught at the Lenin School in Moscow in 1932, and subsequently he himself taught in Respondent's schools in 1933 and 1934 in the United States, that the Government of the United States was the executive committee of the capitalist class in the United States and was subject to the same Marxism-Leninism laws of growth, development and decay as all capitalist states; that the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat were necessary and equally as inevitable in the United States as in other capitalist countries; that it was the duty of the Communists to work for the overthrow of the Government of the United States and the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, following the form of the Soviet, and under the hegemony of Respondent and the Communist International; and, that it was the necessary duty of Respondent, as a part of world Communism, to work for the overthrow of the other "imperialist" nations (J.A. 383-387; 388-392).

Petitioner's witness Meyer taught in Respondent's schools until near the end of 1945 (J.A. 684). He instructed the members of Respondent that Marxism-Leninism is a guide to Respondent in carrying out its historical role or mission to overthrow the capitalist system and political states founded on the capitalist system, to destroy the economic organization on which that society is founded and its political system, and to replace it with the dictatorship of the proletariat, to establish the kind of socialism that will lead to Communism (J.A. 729).

Petitioner's witness Johnson was taught at Respondent's training school in about 1932 that it was the duty of the Communists to build themselves up to the position where they could challenge the power of the government, and that the Red Army would not hesitate to throw its weight into the scales to tip the balance in favor of the Communist revolutionists in America; also, that the Communists should agitate and work for the demoralization of the armed forces of the United States by convincing them that they must refuse to fight against the Soviet Red Army and go over on the side of the Red Army using their guns against the government of the United States and all forces that remained loyal to it (J.A. 652-653). This was the policy of Respondent throughout Johnson's membership, until 1940, and was elaborated upon by such leaders as Foster, Bedacht, Bittelman, Browder and Stachel, at committee meetings and conventions (J.A. 653). It is significant that Foster is the present national chairman of Respondent and some of these others are still high officials (see pages 36-38 herein).

Petitioner's witness Lautner who was a member of Respondent until 1950, and Petitioner's witness Janowitz who was a member at the time of testifying in this proceeding, corroborate this evidence (J.A. 947-948, 1023).

Petitioner's witness Matusow stated the aims and objectives of Respondent in case of a war between the United States and the Soviet Union were not to support the American "imperialists". The establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the United States would have to be accomplished by violent means because "the ruling class would not give up its power" (J.A. 1055). While in the Party (1947 to 1951), he did not hear or see anything to indicate a change in the aims of Respondent. He refers to a statement of Izzy Brown, Club Education Director of the Friedlander Youth Club in New York in 1948, that it was the policy of Respondent not to support the United States in an "imperialist war" against the Soviet Union (J.A. 1057-1058).

Petitioner's witness Scarletto relates a discussion in the latter part of 1950 by Party members in which it was felt advisable that members go into the service of the United States in the Korean War because they would be in a position to sabotage the United States effort (J.A. 1088-1089). At a meeting about the middle of November 1950 of functionaries of the Mexican Concentration Club, a suggestion was made to raise money through a neutral country for the North Koreans. The chairman of the Club at a meeting in the latter part of 1950, told witness Scarletto that it would be a good idea if he went back into the Navy Air Corps where he would have a good opportunity to sabotage. At a meeting of a Party club about December 1, 1950, the chairman reported American officers had been killed by their Korean orderlies. There were several expressions of satisfaction over this and the report that the war was going against the Americans at the time (J.A. 1089-1090).

Petitioner's witness Evans, a member of Respondent from 1948 to 1952, was taught that in a war between the Soviet Union and the United States all members of Respondent should help defeat the predatory aims of imperialism [1] (J.A. 1114).

In the years between 1945 and 1950, Petitioner's witnesses Cummings (J.A. 852-853), Hidalgo (J.A. 868), Blanc (J.A. 813) Markward (J.A. 747) and Baldwin (J.A. 1015) were taught that the world was divided into two camps: the imperialists and the anti-imperialists (democracies); that Russia was anti-imperialist and democratic; that the wars of the imperialists were unjust wars and the wars of the anti-imperialists were just wars; that in a war between imperialists and anti-imperialists, the members of the CPUSA must aid the anti-imperialists; and that this would hold true in the case of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States.

Documentary evidence of Respondent's expressions confirms the oral testimony that Respondent's policy is to oppose many United States policies and activities as imperialists, and as aggressive against the Soviet Union; also, that Respondent's policy is to support the Soviet Union and defeat the aims of imperialism (See Exs. 144, 148, 155, 158, 343, 427). Political Affairs for March 1951 describes President Truman's activities as "imperialism" on the way to bankruptcy and as a provocative semi-mobilization for an outright war against the Soviet Union (Ex. 479).

[1] The organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union in March 1950 stated that while imperialism exists there also exists the danger of new aggression and that in the presence of imperialism and its predatory plans wars are unavoidable. (Pravda, Ex. 217, J.A. 1580).

A pattern throughout the world Communist movement for teaching, advocating, and agitating for the overthrow of "imperialist" governments exists in the concept or slogan that the world is divided into two hostile camps, one led by the Soviet Union and the other by the United States. As previously herein set forth, Lenin, Stalin, and the Communist International, in interpreting and adapting to the world Communist movement the writings of Marx and Engels, took the original concept that society is divided between the bourgeoisie and proletariat, and developed it into the doctrine or slogan that the world is divided into two hostile camps—the camp of the imperialist states and the camp of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the USSR. In the Programme of The Communist International (Ex. 125) this is explained as follows (J.A. 1447):

> "The difference in class structure and in the class character of the government in the two camps, the fundamental differences in the aims each pursues in internal, foreign, economic and cultural policy, the fundamentally different courses of their development, brings the capitalist world into sharp conflict with the victorious proletariat State. * * * The class struggle, which hitherto was conducted in circumstances when the proletariat was not in possession of State power, is now being conducted on an enormous and really world scale; the working class of the world has now its own State—the one and only fatherland of the international proletariat. * * * " (pp. 24 and 25).

* * * * *

(J.A. 1448):

> "Thus, as a result of the first round of imperialist wars a new, fundamental antagonism has arisen of world historical scope and significance; the antagonism between the U. S. S. R. and the capitalist world." (p. 25).

The record establishes a consistent advancement of this doctrine or slogan by the Soviet Union and by the Communist Information Bureau and it acceptance and use by Respondent. Of late, the slogan of "peace" has been added as hereinafter covered.

The Soviet Union in January. 1949 characterized the post-war foreign policy of the United States and Great Britain as one of aggression and unleashing a new war for world domination, whereas, it stated the Soviet Union struggles for universal peace and international security (Ex. 251). This position of the Soviet Union as reported in Pravda, points out that "The very existence of the Soviet State, with its growing power and its international authority, and likewise the powerful support given to it by the democratic forces in other countries constitute an insurmountable barrier in the way of all plans of any kind for the establishment of world domination by one power or another." (Ex. 251, p. 19, J.A. 1588).

Pravda for March 11, 1950 (Ex. 217) contains a speech by V. M. Molotov which states that "Since the October Revolution in our country, the victory of the national liberation movement in China appears as a new and most powerful blow at the entire system of world imperialism and at all plans of imperialist aggression in our time.", (J.A. 1579) and "Now the Soviet Union has not only come out of international isolation but is also the center of the powerful international democratic camp. * * * In the capitalist countries themselves we now have millions of active friends who are closing ranks more and more in a broad democratic, anti-imperialist movement." (p. 5 of Ex. 217; J.A. 1579). * * * "The democratic camp, which unites the USSR and the countries of the people's democracy, is opposed by the camp of the imperialist powers headed by the ruling circles of the United States of America." (J.A. 1579) (emphasis added).

For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy issue of November 10, 1947, sets forth a speech deliver by A. Zhd-anov [1] at the Informative Conference of the Nine Communist Parties held in Poland at the end of September 1947. A section of this speech is entitled: "The New Post-War Alignment of political Forces and the Formation of Two Camps: the Imperialist and the Anti Democratic Camp, and the Anti-Imperialist and Democratic one" wherein it is stated the principal driving force of the imperialist camp is the United States with whom Great Britain and France are allied; the second camp—anti-imperialist—is based on the USSR and the "new democracies". (Ex. 214-A, J.A. 1576).

For a Lasting Peace, issue of March 10, 1950, contains an article which concludes with the following (J.A. 1732):

> "A comparison of the economic successes achieved by the Peoples' Democracies in a very short period of their history with the extremely difficult position of the working people in the capitalist countries constitutes a terrible indictment of American imperialism and of the whole decaying capitalist system." (Ex. 412, p. 1).

With respect to Respondent, when Petitioner's witness Lautner left the Party at the end of 1949, the Party line was that the United States headed the imperialist forces of the world and that Russia led the anti-imperialist forces and that everything should be done to aid Rusia and to disconcert the United States (J.A. 947-948). Further, in 1949 an instructor in courses on the ABC's of Marxism included the United States in the imperialist camp (J.A. 747) and a similar position was taken by a Party group in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1948, where it was stated that the United States led the "imperialists" and the Soviet Union led the anti-imperialists or People's Democracies (J.A. 777-782).

A "Discussion Outline" on "The Marxist Position To-

---

[1] The Zhdanov Report has recently been widely used and followed by Respondent. It was published in Political Affairs (J.A. 970-972) and discussed and studied throughout the Party while Lautner and Philbrick were members (J.A. 777-778, 970-972). It is variously listed as "required reading" (Ex. 424), "reading material" (Ex. 399), and "reading", in study and teaching materials used by Respondent in 1949.

ward War" issued by Respondent's Educational Department, Michigan State Committee, in April 1949. (Ex. 400) has a section entitled (J.A. 1731-1732):

> "IV. World War II was Just War" which says in part:
>
> "The post-war world was split by the U.S. and Britain into two camps—the camp of imperialism and fascism under the leadership of American imperialism and the camp of democracy, national freedom and peace, headed by the USSR." (p. 4).

Similar teachings by Respondent are evidenced by study and teaching material used in various schools and groupes. (Ex. 425, p. 16; Ex. 424, Session 9, J.A. 1753-1754).

Related to the concept of the world being divided into two hostile camps, is the concept or slogan set forth by Lenin and Stalin that distinguishes between "just wars", which are those carried on by "anti-imperialist" nations, and "unjust wars", i.e., those engaged in solely by "imperialist" nations among themselves or against any "socialist" country, such as the Soviet Union. We find that the concept of "just" and "unjust" wars, requiring the Communist Parties to support the Soviet Union in a war between the Soviet Union and any other country, and in a war between the Soviet Union and their own country to use every means to assist the Soviet Union, is basic to Marxism-Leninism; and that it has been continuously advanced and advocated by the Soviet Union, and has been continuously taught and followed by Respondent. Respondent's policies and activities centering around the doctrine of "just" and "unjust" wars is covered later in this report in connection with the issue as to what country the leaders of Respondent consider they owe allegiance. Accordingly, it is sufficient at this point to state our finding that Respondent's teachings and advocacy of this line represent a continued following of directions as to the line from Marxism-Leninism, the Communist International, and the Soviet Union.

We proceed to review the evidence concerning Respondent's use of the words "peace" and "democracy" in connection with the struggle against "imperialism" and for the advancement of the aims and objectives of the world Communist movement. Earlier in this report we have reviewed the united-front tactic as set forth in Marxism-Leninism as one of the means used for establishing the dictatorship of the proletariat. The united front has taken various approaches throughout the period since 1919. In the interest of reasonable summarization of the record, we limit this report to the use of the united-front tactic from 1935 on.

In 1935, the Communist International, which Respondent represented (J.A. 485-486, 841; Ex. 185), mapped out the "tactical line" for the years ahead which consisted of forming a "united-front" with other organizations in order to achieve national unity in the various countries for the purpose of combatting fascism.[1] (Ex. 137). The record shows that early in the 1930's, Stalin, in a report on behalf of the Central Committee of the CPSU to its Party Congress, pointed out that "the Bourgeoisie would seek a way out of the economic crisis, on the one hand, by crushing the working class through the establishment of fascist dictatorship, i.e., the dictatorship of the most reactionary, most chauvinistic, most imperialistic capitalist elements." (Ex. 330, pp. 300-301, J.A. 1627). The record also shows that the Soviet Union realized a "second imperialist war" represented a serious danger to the USSR. (Ex. 330, pp. 334-5, J.A. 1627-1628). In mid-1935, discussions were started in the Communist International on the matter of the united front—the "anti-Fascist front"—which were supported by the Communist Party of the Soviet Union as evidenced by an article in the August 6, 1935, issue of Pravda; this points out that "Unity—that is the command of the moment". and emphasizes "that this unity be directed against Fascism, against the danger of a new imperialist war, against the offensive of capital", while also emphasizing that the Communist "know that only the dictatorship of the proletariat, only the Soviet Government is the sole salvation of the working class * * *" (Ex. 183, J.A. 1566).

Thus, it is more than a coincidence that the Communist International in 1935 gave the reasons for developing the "new tactical orientation", the economic crisis facing capitalism, the offensive of fascism, and the growth of the threat of a new imperialist war and of an attack on the USSR (Ex. 137, pp. 21-22). In a speech at the close of this meeting of the Comintern, Georgi Dimitrov pointed out that "Ours is a Congress of struggle for the preservation of peace, against the threat of imperialist war."[1] (J.A. 1943) and that (J.A. 1494):

> "Standing firmly on the impregnable position of Marxism-Leninism, which has been confirmed by the entire experience of the international labor movement, and primarily by the victories of the great October Revolution, our Congress, acting in the spirit and guided by the method of living Marxism-Leninism, has reshape the tactical lines of the Communist International to meet the changed world situation." (ibid, p. 11)

The Resolution of the Comintern concerning the new approach or use of the united-front tactic lays down various things which the Communist Parties are to do in carrying out the revised line, and in that connection uses such words as "enjoins" (p. 26), "must" (p. 36), and "imperative" (p. 37). The record shows that Respondent fully and completely complied with this line laid down by the Communist International as evidenced by the following, which is among the more significant evidence of record on this point.

In November 1935 the Central Committee of Respondent adopted a resolution "fully and wholeheartedly" endorsing

[1] The speech of Dimitrov and the Resolutions adopted by the Comintern were printed in pamphlet form in the United States by Workers Library Publishers and have been widely used by Respondent. (J.A. 441-442, 957-959, Ex. 427; Ex. 346 (see J.A. 790)).

the decisions of the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International in which resolution the "chief task" of Respondent at the time is stated to be "to reorientate the work of the Party in accord with the tactical line of the Seventh World Congress" and in which "The Central Committee calls upon the Party organizations and every Party member to prosecute the struggle for the united front with the utmost determination and flexibility in the new way pointed out by the Seventh World Congress." (emphasized in text) (Ex. 185, 1182-1184, J.A. 1570). Like the resolution of the Comintern and the statements of the Soviet Union, Respondent's resolution takes care to point out that the line is an application "in a living way" of "the teachings of Marx, Lenin, Engels and Stalin"; and that it is linked to the prosecution of the Party's "revolutionary aims" and "revolutionary principles and program." (ibid, p. 1185) (See also: Witness Mosely (J.A. 533-536); Lautner (J.A. 988)).

Some of the details of Respondent's compliance with the instructions of the Communist International are furnished by Petitioner's witness Nowell who in the latter part of 1935 was instructed by William Weinstone and other functionaries of the Michigan District of Respondent to proceed to set up certain organizations in accordance with the united front policy and conforming to the new type of reorientation, as set forth in the resolutions of the Comintern. The witness shows that he carried out these instructions by forming fractions in various organizations for the purpose of influencing the policies of the organizations and to guide them along the lines of the Communist Party in setting up the "united front" movement (J.A. 392-397).

In 1936, Respondent's Central Committee issued a statement which was printed in R pondent's magazine, The Communist, issue for May 1936 (Ex. 380-B), calling upon all workers to unite to defeat fascism and on May Day to pledge to defend the Soviet Union. The Communist for May 1940 carries an article by "Gene Dennis" which points out the danger to the Soviet Union from the imperialist war and states that the united front can only be achieved successfully if consistently directed against the imperialist war and capitalist reaction (Ex. 436, pp. 404, 405).

Some aspects of Respondent's line during the period of the second world war shifted back and forth to follow the position of the Soviet Union. The pertinent facts in this respect are covered in our findings under the section of this report on the issue of non-deviation; we have taken them into consideration as part of the pertinent evidence involving Respondent's following of foreign directions concerning the use of the united front tactic. The record shows that after World War II, the use of the united front tactic received a different emphasis in the form of the united front for "peace". The testimony of Petitioner's witness Lautner, which is corroborated by other evidence of record, furnishes a clear understanding of this aspect of the issues and is therefore pertinent for review in some detail. The witness testified in part as follows, which we find to be an accurate statement of the facts:

> "The United Front tactics of the Communist Party were part of the subject matter of Marxism-Leninism, and in class [referring to Party classes in 1948] we tried to convey the idea that the Seventh World Congress decisions pertaining to the United Front tactics and Dimitrov's report in no way eliminated or negated the decisions of the Sixth World Congress but implemented the decisions of the Sixth World Congress in a way to enable the party to develop a wider base on specific issues. Before the Seventh World Congress we had United Fronts that were based on a narrow concept popularly known as United Front from Below, United Fronts on specific issues, but were elements that were ready and willing to work on specific issues with the Communist movement. In the main it was an effort to increase and to advance the influence of the Communist Parties. This poli y, based on the strategy and tactics of the Sixth World Congress, was a failure of the party in Germany to make headway, the defeat suffered by the German Party, based on the strategy and tactics and the program of the Sixth World Congress, the failure in China, the failure to build the Red International Trade Union movement, the failure to gain a way or win a way to working classes, the organized section of the working classes from the influence of social democracy, with the result that reaction gained power in a number of countries. Hitler came to power in Germany. The Seventh World Congress devised a new tactical approach in order to achieve the main strategic objectives by developing a program of United Front from below and from above, and also the program of the people's fronts and coalitions around a specific issue in the struggle against fascism and in the struggle against war, because fascism was the main danger of war at that time.

"So The United Front is not a repudiation of the basis [sic] strategic aims of the Communist movement, but as step that will bring closer the realization of that strategic aim.

* * * *

"After 1945 there came a re-evaluation of the world situation. Now the problem was to find that link in the chain again with which a new coalition could be developed on a united front basis, on a minimum program, on a partial program of the Communist International, with which coalition we could go forward to a new milestone, to a new point and gain new adherents to the Communist movement, and when we reached that milestone there would be a new situation, a new realinement of forces, and we would find that new link with which we could go forward again. This link after the second world war was the struggle for peace. The question of peace was the new link. At the reconstitution convention Foster in his report already indicated the direction in which the Party will travel in this postwar period, and Zhdanov's report later on precisely sets the two world camps and the main issue in the coming period, the issue of peace. That is the new link today around which the Party develops its activities to broaden out and to bring about an alinement of forces on the basis on which it can extend its influence and exert its influence among the broader section of the population of this country." (J.A. 957-960) (underlining added)

The record clearly shows that the Communist Parties throughout the world, including the Respondent in the United States, are now actively and strongly presenting the the line of "peace", particularly the united front in the "struggle for peace". The very name of the official organ of the Communist Information Bureau, which is For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, is indicative thereof. Key material used by Respondent in forming its "peace" line is the Zhdanov report, previously mentioned (see p. 80 and footnote 1), from which a typical quotation is as follows (J.A. 1576):

> "All the forces of the anti-imperialist and anti-fascist camp are united in the effort to secure a just and democratic peace. * * * These countries, and in the first place the new democracies * * * have proved themselves in the post-war period staunch defenders of peace, democracy and their own liberty and independence against all attempts on the part of the United States and Great Britain to turn them back in their course and to bring them again under the imperialist yoke." (Ex. 214-A, p. 2).

The position or line of the Soviet Union in this matter is evidenced by a report delivered by G. M. Malenkov at the meeting of the Moscow Soviet in November 1949 and printed in the November 11, 1949 issue of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy. In this report, Malenkov devoted a substantial portion to the heading "The Soviet Union Stands for Peace and Defends the Cause of Peace" (Ex. 231, p. 1, J.A. 1582). He points out that there is not a single country in which the movement uniting the supporters of peace does not possess a "base" (J.A. 1583) and that the successes of "the camp of peace" drives the "enemies of peace", "by means of violence and new wars", to attempt the creation of an American world empire designed to turn the whole world into a "colony of the American imperialists, of reducing sovereign peoples to a state of slavery" (J.A. 1583).

The December 1951 issue of Political Affairs contains a condensed translation from the Soviet philosophical journal Voprosi Filosofie which is entitled: "Stalin on the War Danger and the Possibility of Averting It". This Soviet statement, which by its publication in Political Affairs and in view of the entire record, makes it reasonable to conclude that it was adopted by Respondent and thus becomes the line of Respondent and is very similar in content to the above-mentioned Zhdanov and Malenkov reports. The statement outlines various forms which "the struggle for peace" has taken, such as fighting for an end to the war in Korea, against rearming West Germany and Japan, and a ban on atomic weapons. It also quotes with approval a declaration by Joseph Stalin in 1946 to the effect that "the peoples" are taking the fate of their states in their own hands and establishing "democratic regimes" and "carrying on an active struggle against the forces of reaction, against the incendiaries of a new war" (Ex. 488, p. 20).

Respondent's following of the line of the united front, and particularly the united front for peace, is evidenced by a quantity of documentary material probative of Respondent's policies and doctrines. Typical recent expressions of this line by Respondent appear in the Daily Worker issues of March 3, 1949 (Ex. 331), June 9, 1950 (Ex. 269), July 13, 1950 (Ex. 270), September 18, 1950 (Ex. 440), February 19, 1951 (Ex. 451), April 1, 1951 (Ex. 455), October 19, 1951 (Ex. 467), November 7, 1951 (Ex. 468), and June 9, 1952 (Ex. 495). The issue of November 7, 1950 contains the following as part of an editorial:

> "Today the Soviet Union is indestructible. The work of Lenin and Stalin is immortal. The Socialist State has become the leader of a new force in modern history—the great camp of peace. This new alliance of hundreds of millions of people in China and the People's Democracies, together with the vast millions in the colonial and capitalist countries, can prevent war. This is the new achievement of the Soviet Union, the glorious vision that the people can make a reality." (Pet. Ex. 468) Recent indications of Respondent's following of this united front for peace line also appear in Political Affairs for November 1950 (Ex. 477), February 1951 (Ex. 376), April 1951 (Ex. 480), December 1951 (Ex. 488), and January 1952 (Ex. 489). The issue of February 1951 (Pet. Ex. 376; J.A. 1714-1718) contains "greetings" from Communist Parties of some thirty countries sent to Respondent on the occasion of its 15th National Convention. These greetings condemn American imperialism and support the struggle for peace. The "greetings" from the Soviet Union says in part "May the international solidarity of the toilers in the struggle for peace, democracy and Socialism gather strength." The People's Democratic Republic of China advised Respondent "As a result of common struggle of the people of the world and awakened people in the United States, American imperialism has met with huge defeats and will continue to meet with even bigger defeats." The French Party pointed out that Respondent's decisions "taken in the light of the teachings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, will enable you to advance forward on the road of unity of action of the working class." The Italian Party stated Respondent's struggle in defense of peace was greeted as its struggle. The German Democratic Republic said Respondent's fight is their fight "just as the struggle of the German friends of democracy and peace is your struggle". The Party of Great Britain expressed its "solidarity" with Respondent in the common struggle against Anglo-American imperialism. The Canadian Party expressed certainty that "Headed by the Mighty Socialist Soviet Union * * * the world camp of peace is going forward to win" and that Respondent "will not be found wanting".

Respondent's teaching materials used in its training schools and for self-study by the members furnish, among other things, still further evidence on the following of the united front for peace line. The "Discussion Outline" on "The Marxist Position Toward War" (Supra, pp. 90-91 of this report) put out in 1949 devotes considerable space to "Peace" and lists works by Lenin and Stalin and the History of the CPSU (B) as reading material. The "Outline For Nine-Day School", issued in 1948 (Ex. 346, J.A. 1663-1664), has as the topic for the third lesson "Imperialism-War-Fascism-Struggle For Peace" and lists Lenin's Imperialism and the United Front Against Fascism as the reading material. Part II of the Study Outline for the Marxist Institute, issued in 1949 (Ex. 427, J.A. 1754-1757) includes the study of the tactics of the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International and teaches that in the present period the strategic objective remains the same but the tactical line of the united front and peoples coalition developed still further, citing Dimitrov's report to the 7th World Congress as required reading and the History of the CPSU (B) as supplemental reading (Session 9, pp. 1-3).

We find based on the foregoing and upon the entire record, that "the struggle for peace" including the tactic of the united front for peace, is presently a main line of Respondent, the Soviet Union, and the Communist Information Bureau, and that this line is based upon the tactics set forth in Marxism-Leninism. It is therefore important to consider what the Communists mean by "peace", as an aid in determining whether the "peace" line is a link or tactic in seeking to advance the objectives of the world Communist movement. The testimony of Petitioner's witness Lautner regarding the united front tactic as heretofore set forth is relevant to this matter. Also, the History of the CPSU (B) teaches (J.A. 1618):

"The Bolsheviks were not mere pacifists who sighed for peace and confined themselves to the propaganda of peace, as the majority of the Left Social-Democrats did. The Bolsheviks advocated an active revolutionary struggle for peace, to the point of overthrowing the rule of the bellicose imperialist bourgeoisie. The Bolsheviks linked up the cause of peace with the cause of the victory of the proletarian revolution, holding that the surest way of ending the war and securing a just peace, a peace without annexations and indemnities, was to overthrow the rule of the imperialist bourgeoisie" (Pet. Ex. 330, p. 167).

The History further teaches that to achieve "peace" the Communist Parties should convert imperialist war into civil war and defeat one's own government in an imperialist war (J.A. 1618-1619).

The understanding of the "struggle for peace" as an active, revolutionary struggle is further evidenced from a resolution adopted in 1935 by the Comintern, which resolution reads in part as follows (J.A. 1498):

"At the present historical juncture, when on one-sixth part of the globe the Soviet Union defends socialism and peace for all humanity, the most vital interests of the workers and toilers of all countries demand that in pursuing the policy of the working class, in waging the struggle for peace, the struggle against imperialist war before and after the outbreak of hostilities, the defense of the Soviet Union must be considered paramount" (Ex. 137, p. 48).

These tactics are also revealed in Dimitroff's The United Front, a part of the body of Marxism-Leninism, which says, inter alia (J.A. 1547):

" . . . You cannot carry on a real struggle against fascism if you do not render all possible assistance in strengthening the most important buttress of this struggle, the Soviet Union. You cannot carry on a serious struggle against fascism instigators of a new world blood bath, if you do not render undivided support to the USSR, a most important factor in the maintenance of international peace . . . " (Ex. 149, p. 279, emphasized in text).

Additional insight into Respondent's use of the "struggle for peace" is furnished by the aforementioned "greeting" sent to Respondent by the Soviet Union on the occasion of Respondent's 15th National Convention in late 1951. This "greeting" is later herein discussed in more detail with respect to the issue of Respondent's reporting to the Soviet Union. Petitioner's witness Lautner, based on his experiences as a member of Respondent, including what he taught and was taught, considers the greeting "a political document of the highest importance" (J.A. 994), which raises all the basic questions that Respondent is confronted with at the present time and "gives leadership to the American Party" (J.A. 994-995). Lautner interprets "struggle for peace, democracy and socialism" as "the new tactical approach since the end of the war, the link with which this tactical united front is to be built." (J.A. 995); and so we conclude.

In view of the foregoing and upon the entire record, we find and conclude that the "struggle for peace" as used and practiced by Respondent, sometimes called the "struggle against reaction", represents the present emphasis of the "struggle against imperialism" which is and has been a basic, active, revolutionary doctrine taught and advocated by Respondent for the purpose of overthrowing "imperialist" governments (by force and violence if necessary) and substituting the dictatorship of the proletariat. We further conclude and find that Respondent's "struggle for peace", "struggle against imperialism" and united front tactics followed in connection therewith, represent a continued following of directives of the Soviet Union as contained in Marxism-Leninism, in specific instructions of the Soviet Union and in the program of the Communist International; and are designed to advance the objectives of the world Communist movement.

4. Democratic Centralism and Self-Criticism

Respondent's use of the organizational principle known as "Democratic Centralism", hereinbefore referred to under "Marxism-Leninism", is one of the many facts indicative of its operation pursuant to directives from the Soviet Union through which the policies of the Soviet Union are effectuated.

The Programme of the Communist International covers democratic centralism as follows (J.A. 1465-1466):

> "The Communist International and its Sections are built up on the basis of democratic centralism, the fundamental principles of which are: (a) election of all leading committees of the Party * * *; (b) periodical reports by leading Party committees to their constituents; (c) decisions of superior Party committees to be obligatory for subordinate committees, strict Party discipline and prompt execution of the decisions of the Communist International, of its leading committees and of the leading Party centres.
>
> "Party questions may be discussed by the members of the Party and by Party organizations until such time as a decision is taken upon them by the competent Party committees. After a decision has been taken by the Congress of the Communist International, by the Congress of the respective Sections, or by leading committees of the Comintern, and of its various Sections; these decisions must be unreservedly carried out even if a Section of the Party membership or of the local Party organizations are in disagreement with it." (Ex. 125, p. 86)

Respondent admittedly follows and applies the principle of democratic centralism.[1] It has done so substantially

---

[1] Respondent's witness Gates says democratic centralism is the principle which governs the party organization and function. He does not, however, indicate its origin (J.A. 1204).

throughout most of its existence. In 1945, when Respondent was reconstituted as the Communist Party, its leader, William Z. Foster, proclaimed:

> "* * * Only by applying the sound principles of Leninist-democratic-centralism can our Party keep its mistakes to a minimum and develop the clear-thinking unity of action and resolute discipline that are the great strength of Communist parties all over the world." (Ex. 372, p. 793).

Respondent's position with respect to the issue of democratic centralism is as expressed by its counsel in arguing before us: "What has all that got to do with domination and control by Moscow?" (R. 1708). Respondent's evidence is to the effect that the principle of democratic centralism is the ultimate in democracy in that the rank and file members elect the next higher officers and so on up to the highest authority of the Party—the national convention. Respondent states that once a decision is reached by the majority, that decision is binding on the whole body (J.A. 965-966; 1204-1205).

Witnesses for the Petitioner testify to a different understanding of democratic centralism.

Gitlow stated (J.A. 217): "The Comunist Party in the United States was a centralized organization, ruled from the top down, and not from the bottom up;" and when he, Lovestone and Wolf were deposed in the schism of 1929, arrangements were made in Moscow that control of the United States party was to be vested in a representative of the Communist International who was given specific power to nullify any decision that any committee or any branch of the CPUSA made. He was also given power to expel any member of the party as well as other powers over the party (J.A. 270).

Kornfeder likened the party structure to a military one, with power coming from above (J.A. 306).

Nowell testified that, during his membership (between 1929 and 1936), in actual practice authority descends upon the membership from the top (J.A. 353).

We find that the materiality and relevancy of the issue of democratic centralism lies in its source as concerns Respondent's acceptance and practice of it, and in its use as a means of bringing Respondent within the authority of the Soviet Union. The record leaves no real doubt that, at least until 1940, Respondent followed democratic centralism as a requirement of membership in the Communist International,[1] and that on the basis of democratic centralism all decisions of the Communist International had to be fulfilled by Respondent (Ex. 145, p. 24); Ex. 125, p. 86; J.A. 1535-1537, 1464, 1658). From this it follows, based on the evidence elsewhere herein set forth, that for the period covering over twenty years of Respondent's existence, the principle of democratic centralism was one of the means whereby Respondent came within the authority of the Soviet Union.[2] Upon consideration of all of the evidence concerning Respondent's policies, activities, and conduct over the subsequent period of its existence, particularly the evidence covering nondeviation and allegiance as elsewhere set forth in this report, it is reasonable to conclude, and we do so, that Respondent's continued following of the principle of democratic centralism keeps Respondent within the authority of the Soviet Union.

We further find that the principle of democratic centralism is one of the policies established by the government and Communist Party of the Soviet Union, through adaptations of Marxism-Leninism, as an organizational Policy of the world Communist movement, and that Respondent's operations based upon the following of the principle evidences the purpose to effectuate the policies of the Soviet Union and of the world Communist movement.

In making our findings and conclusions concerning democratic centralism, we have taken into consideration the disciplinary aspect of the principle which is treated later in this report.[1] We have also taken into consideration the evidence concerning the collateral Marxist-Leninist concept or device called self-criticism, as followed and understood by Respondent. In arguing about self-criticism before us, Respondent's counsel stated as follows concerning self-criticism:

[2] See pages 50 to 53 herein.

> "Another instruction or directive that the recommended decision relies on is what the Marxists call self-criticism. What is self-criticism? You get it from the books that are in evidence here. You get it from testimony of the witnesses. It is the proposition that Marxists assert that any serious political party should be willing openly to admit its mistakes, should discuss its mistakes of the past openly, and in the course of such public and open discussion also decide how those mistakes should be corrected. That is all that this principle of self-criticism means." (R. Jan. 7, 1953, p. 54)

The record, however, shows that the source of the doctrine and its use by Respondent lies in Marxism-Leninism and has as its primary purpose keeping Communists in line with the policies of the Soviet Union. As elsewhere herein noted, Respondent in 1945 re-emphasized the revolutionary line of Marxism-Leninism and expelled Earl Browder as a "revisionist" (J.A. 1136-1151). Those who had supported Browder engaged in "self-criticism" by saying that they were wrong in adhering to Browder's de-emphasis of the revolutionary line of Marxism-Leninism and in committing the other errors pointed out by Jacques Duclos, a spokesman for the world Communist movement (J.A. 1574-1575, 1692-1694; Exs. 208, 372).

[1] This includes the evidence furnished by Petitioner's witness Johnson and others which establishes that in the past Respondent's organization included a Central Control Commission—the national disciplinary body—which was the American section of the International Control Commission in Moscow that maintained the strictest, iron discipline in the Party and kept every Communist in line (J.A. 647-648, 659-660, 1470-1471).

"Self criticism" is a device for safeguarding the unity of the Party and the iron discipline required by the Soviet Union. Elsewhere herein we discuss the evidence on these points in more detail. It is pertinent here to set forth a few illustrations from the record. Respondent's Manual on Organization contains the following:[1]

> "It is clear, however, that basic principles and decisions, such, as for example, the Program of the Communist International, cannot be questioned in the Party. (Ex. 145, p. 26, J.A. 1537

> * * * *

> "We do not question the correctness of the revolutionary theory of the class struggle laid down by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin." (ibid, pp. 26 and 27, J.A. 1537).

> * * *

> "Self-criticism is a natural part of the life of the Party * * *. Without self-criticism, there can be no Communist Party. But this criticism must never depart from the line of the Party, from the principles of Marxism-Leninism. * * * destructive criticism * * * if tolerated * * * leads to factionalism." (ibid, pp. 32 and 33, J.A., 1538).

In short, the policies of the Soviet Union cannot be questioned.

An "Outline On Fundamentals of Marxism For Class Use or Self Study", issued by Respondent's National Educational Commission, cites Stalin's Foundations of Leninism as the "source of unity and discipline in the Communist Party" and quotes from Lenin, Selected Works, on

[1] According to Respondent's witnesses, the Manual is obsolete in Party circles. On the other hand, the evidence furnished by witnesses Nowell, Crouch, Lautner and Budenz, and the fact that the author of the Manual, J. Peters, a high officer of Respondent, only left the United States and Party work in 1949, preponderates to establish the continued use of the Manual until at least 1949 (J.A. 398-400, 425-428, 431-432, 897-898, 905, 960-965, 1032, 1121).

the practice of self-criticism (Ex. 370, p. 31, J.A. 1688-1689), which is indicative of the source of Respondent's use of the doctrine. Further, an article in Political Affairs for January 1951 covering the main resolutions of Respondent's 15th National Convention, treats with the practice of criticism and self-criticism as "the inner law of Party development", (Ex. 378, p. 33) and includes the following:

> "Thus the whole Party does not often enough participate in evaluating major developments and struggles; does not sufficiently learn from mistakes committed.
>
> "This in turn leads to many 'independent' estimates which are not resolved into one single Party estimate. This tends to weaken Party discipline and the carrying out of Party decisions. (J.A. 1723).
>
> "The 15th National Convention of the Communist Party, U.S.A., demonstrates the firm political unity of our Party. It calls upon the whole membership to guard the monolithic character and unity of our Party, based on democratic centralism. We must strive for the highest discipline arising out of conscious understanding of the Party's theory and political line. Tendencies toward factionalism are totally impermissible and must be sharply dealt with because they weaken the Party and make it possible for the enemy more easily to penetrate its ranks" (J.A. 1723-1724).

In view of the foregoing and upon consideration of the evidence concerning discipline and allegiance as later in this report reviewed, and upon the record as a whole, we find and conclude that Respondent practices the doctrine of self-criticism in compliance with the requirements of the Soviet Union and for the purpose of keeping its members in line with the policies and directives laid down by the Soviet Union.

5. Foreign Representatives in the United States

The foregoing facts concerning Respondent's organizational structure and the changes therein, the true meaning and use of Marxism-Leninism, and Respondent's policies and activities in "the struggle against imperialism" demonstrate and confirm the international character of the world Communist movement; that Respondent is the United States section or part of that movement; and, that the movement is dominated and controlled by the Soviet Union. Further confirmation and demonstration are found in the evidence concerning other activities or programs which the record establishes are the subjects of Respondent's major attention and efforts. These are hereinafter covered under the headings "Major Programs" and "The Communist Press".

We find that from time to time throughout Respondent's existence, the formulation and carrying out of its policies, programs, and activities as aforesaid have been directed or supervised by foreign representatives in the United States from the Soviet Union; this serves to illuminate and explain the basis and source of the policies and activities, and further illustrates the international aspects of Respondent's operations, as well as the foreign control thereover. A condition of the Communist International which was accepted and followed by Respondent was that (J.A. 1469-1470):

> "The E.C.C.I. and its Presidium have the right to send their representatives to the various Sections of the Communist International. Such representatives receive their instructions from the E.C.C.I. or from its Presidium, and are responsible to them for their activities. Representatives of the E.C.C.I. have the right to participate in meetings of the central Party bodies as well as of the local organizations of the Sections to which they are sent. * * * Representatives of the E.C.C.I. are especially obliged to supervise the carrying out of the decisions of the World Congresses and of the Executive Committee of the Communist International." Ex. 125, pp. 89 & 90)

It would unduly burden this report to trace the many instances of record where such foreign representatives have been in the United States and active in the affairs of Respondent. Among such representatives identified in the record are Gerhardt Eisler (sometimes known as Edwards and Hans Berger), (J.A. 321-325, 379, 424, 875-877, 1142-1143, 1186-1187), J. Peters (J.A. 398-400, 425-428, 431-432, 897-898, 905, 960-965, 1032, 1121, 1168), Pogany (John Pepper) (J.A. 255, 265, 315, 423), Golos (J.A. 263, 1163-1166), Peterson (J.A. 248), Frank Miller (J.A. 249), P. Green (Gussev) (J.A. 245-246), Yusefovich, Merker (Wagner) (J.A. 489-491, 1165-1166), Walettsky, and Allen (J.A. 491) (See also: J.A. 316-319, 338). Limiting this report to a few examples, the record supports the testimony of Petitioner's witness Johnson who testified, based on what he was taught in Respondent's training school in 1932, that a representative of the Comintern had power superseding that of any leader in the American Party and was the complete boss over Respondent's policy (J.A. 660-661). Similarly, Petitioner's witness Lautner shows that when a Comintern representative spoke at Party meetings, no one questioned his decisions and they were accepted as the Party line (J.A. 321-325, 461-462, 660-661, 692-693, 874, 969-970, 1140-1143).

In the light of the record, we find that many of the policies and activities presently being carried out by Respondent were originally formulated under the supervision of representatives of the Communist International, and that this fact is indicative of foreign domination and control of Respondent. This, however, is not the entire state of the record as to activities of foreign representatives. When viewed in the light of the facts that Respondent announced its disaffiliation from the Comintern in 1940 to avoid identification as a foreign agent in the United States, and that the dissolution of the Comintern was announced in 1943 as a tactical move for unity in World War II and to eliminate that manifestation of foreign direction over the member Communist Parties, the less apparent but yet identifiable subsequent activities of foreign representatives in the United States becomes significant.

We have previously found that Manuilsky, while a Soviet Union representative to the United Nations in 1945, sent word to Respondent to the effect that it should heed Duclos' statement concerning the reconstitution of the Communist Party.[1] Other individuals who had previously been here as Communist International representatives are identified on the record as active in the United States after 1940. J. Peters and Gerhardt Eisler[2] are the subjects of considerable testimony.

Respondent's witness Flynn states on direct examination that since she assumed her duties as a member of the National Committee in 1938, Respondent has not received any directives or instructions from any representative of the CPSU and that to her knowledge no Communist International representative has been in the United States since 1946 (J.A. 1289). She knows Gerhardt Eisler but did not meet him until after his arrest. She states that neither he nor any of her fellow officers in the CPUSA ever told her that he (Eisler) was a representative of the Communist International. The testimony of Respondent's witness Gates is to the same effect (J.A. 1250-1251).

Of the reputed Communist International representatives in the United States, Eisler was the most conspicuous and most noteworthy. Eisler was in this country for many years and fled the United States while on bail, pending the appeal of his conviction in 1949 for false swearing. Witness Kornfeder shows that in 1933 Eisler, whom he had 1 See supra page 30; see also J.A. 1137, 1182-1183.

2 The record shows that both Peters and Eisler as well as other Comintern representatives have used various other names and aliases. Eisler has been known as "Edwards" and "Berger", (J.A. 424, 692-693, 1142-1143, 1163, 1186-1187), and on one occasion he asked witness Nowell to call him "Brown" (J.A. 379, 660). J. Peters was also known as William Peters, Alexander Stevens and Clarence Miller (J.A. 399). Also as Joe Peters, Alexander or Goldberg (J.A. 961).

originally met in Moscow, was a Comintern representative in the United States and discussed with him the infiltration of the American Federation of Labor and the Railroad Brotherhoods (J.A. 320-322). Eisler warned him of serious consequences if he spoke against a new trade union policy at a national convention of the Communist Party in 1934. Kornfeder disregarded Eisler's warning and was told to repudiate in the Party press within sixty days what he had said (J.A. 322-325). He was expelled from the Party (J.A. 325). Witness Johnson stated that Eisler's word was law in the CPUSA (J.A. 660-661). Witness Meyer knew Eisler as a Comintern representative (J.A. 692-693) as did witness Lautner (J.A. 874). Lautner testified that after 1945 he knew that Eisler undertook to influence Party activities in the United States (J.A. 969-970). Witness Budenz said that Stachel, a high Party leader, received orders from Eisler in 1943 and 1944 (J.A. 1162-1163) and that there was talk of Eisler as a Comintern representative in 1945. During this period Stachel consulted with Eisler frequently (J.A. 1140-1142).

Another person conspicuously active in the activities of the CPUSA was J. Peters, author of Respondent's Manual On Organization. Witness Nowell identifies him as a Comintern representative (J.A. 376-378). Witness Crouch said he took orders from Peters between 1934 and 1940 (J.A. 426-428), and witnesses Johnson and Lautner testified that Peters provided them with secret codes (J.A. 664-665, 876-877).

Peters was deported in 1949. Subsequently, an official actively engaged in Respondent's youth activities met Peters in Hungary while the former was attending the World Youth Festival there (J.A. 1032, 1037-1038).

We find that the testimony of Petitioner's witnesses is credible and that the testimony of Respondent's witnesses is not in accord with the facts in this matter. A preponderance of the evidence clearly shows that representatives of the CPSU were in the United States and that through them Respondent received directives and instructions.

6. The Communist Press

In addition to the foregoing, further indication that the Respondent operates pursuant to directives of the Soviet Union, and is controlled by the Soviet Union in its views and policies, is furnished by the evidence hereinafter summarized concerning the Communist press and its use for the exchange of information. In the United States, the Daily Worker and Political Affairs operate as guides for the membership of Respondent as to the correct views and policies. (J.A. 336, 359, 464-465, 745, 767-768, 938-942, 1128-1130, 1309) In the Soviet Union, the organ of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union is a paper called Pravda (See Ex. 217). On an international scale, For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy is the organ of the Information Bureau of the Communist and Workers' Parties (Cominform).

We find that one significant aspect of the issue of domination and control lies in the formation, nature, and character of the Daily Worker. The record shows that the Communist International required the member parties to "create a new type of periodical press . . . in which the Communists . . . learn to utilize the slightest liberty allowed by the laws . . ." and without which "the preparation for the dictatorship of the proletariat is impossible." (Ex. 8, p. 20, J.A. 1325). The International also required that such a Party press carry on a policy fully corresponding to the policy of the Party; edited by reliable Communists; and subject to the control of the governing body of the Party (ibid., p. 27, J.A. 1325-1326). We find that the policy, content, and advocacy of the Daily Worker is and has been under the complete supervision and control of Respondent's leaders and top committees; that officers of Respondent have been the principal officers of the paper; that the paper's policies correspond to the policies of the Party and the paper is considered a necessity for the effectuation of the Party's aims and purposes (J.A. 940-943, 1134-1138, 1160-1161, 1176-1178). In its early years, the Daily Worker was aided by financial subsidies from Moscow and until about 1944 was furnished free information or dispatches at nominal cost, from Moscow through a Soviet Union news service. The record shows various directives issued by the Communist International concerning the Daily Worker, which were followed. Upon consideration of the foregoing and upon the whole record, we find and conclude that the Daily Worker was established pursuant to directives of the Communist International and presently fulfills the function it has always had.

We further find, on the basis of the evidence hereinafter summarized, that the Daily Worker is the counterpart in the United States of the Soviet Union organ, Pravda, translated issues of which are part of the record in this proceeding. While Petitioner's witness Budenz was managing editor of the Daily Worker (1941-1945), staff meetings were held for political education—"to keep the staff on their toes regarding Party theory and thinking"—at which meetings the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) was used (J.A. 1160-1161). We have heretofore found that the History constitutes one of the principal sets of rules and guides followed by Respondent. It is stated in the History that, "A powerful instrument used by the Bolshevik Party to strengthen its organizations and to spread its influence among the masses was the Bolshevik daily newspaper Pravda . . . founded, according to Lenin's instructions, on the initiative of Stalin, Olminsky and Poletayev" (Ex. 330, p. 149, J.A. 1614-1618). The History also states that Pravda "directed the working class movement toward one definite aim—preparation for revolution" (ibid, p. 153) and that a legally published newspaper "could not call openly for the overthrow of tsardom" and " had to resort to hints, which, however, the class-conscious workers understood very well . . ." (ibid, p. 150, J.A. 1615). Examples are given of "modest" sounding words which were understood by the workers as a "call" (ibid, p. 151, J.A. 1616). Respondent's official concept of the Daily Worker in the 1930's, which the record shows still persists, is that the paper is "One of the main and most important instruments of agitation and propaganda . . . for reaching and winning the masses." (Ex. 145, pp. 78-79, J.A. 1540). This is pertinent for comparison with the aforequoted concept of Pravda as "A powerful instrument used by the Bolshevik Party to . . . spread its influence among the masses."

We treat now with the issue as to whether the foreign Communist press contains articles or statements that constitute directives or instructions to Respondent. Respondent's witness Gates is a member of the National Committee, and is editor of the Daily Worker.[1] He denies that any foreign publication contains directives to the Respondent (J.A. 1208-1211). The testimony of Respondent's other two witnesses is to the same effect. On the other hand, while Petitioner's witness Budenz was managing editor of the Daily Worker, "the Communists looked in these articles from Moscow for the directives and the line that was to be pursued, the attitude that should be taken" (J.A. 1170-1171).

The direct oral testimony, however, is not the full state of the record in the premises. In resolving this issue, we have taken into consideration the facts elsewhere herein set forth concerning "non-deviation", and particularly, as established by a review of the pertinent documents of record, the fact that the Daily Worker does not deviate from or disagree with the Soviet press.[2] We have also taken into consideration the background of the Communist press in this country and in the Soviet Union as heretofore set forth, and the aforementioned principle that the press resorts to "hints" or "modest" language but which the "workers" understand. Further, it is not seriously disputed on the record that the Daily Worker receives political news from abroad, particularly from Moscow, which includes translations from the Soviet press (See e.g., Budenz, J.A. 1168-1170), and that a correspondent of the Daily Worker is stationed in Moscow.

Additional evidence on this issue consists of the fact that the Communist publication For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy is distributed in the United States to functionaries of Respondent, and copies have been made available by Respondent to meetings of various of Respondent's committees and groups. Petitioner's witness, Matusow, furnishes an example of the effect of an article in For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy. In the summer of 1948, the director of the Jefferson School gave a lecture at the school's summer camp to the effect that the Communists agreed with Tito and Yugoslavia and all the things they were trying to do. A few weeks later, the news was published in For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy that Marshal Tito and the Yugoslav Communist Party had been denounced by the Cominform. The same school director then took the reverse position in his lectures although his only source of information was the Cominform journal (Matusow, J.A. 1056-1057).

Other parts of this report present our findings concerning the well-established requirement of the Soviet Union that vigilance be maintained against "reformists," "opportunists", "stool pigeons", etc.; and the application in this respect of the Communist doctrine of self-criticism. An article by Gilbert Green, high officer of Respondent, entitled "For Communist Vigilance" appears in the May 1950 issue of Political Affairs. The article refers to the way in which the Polish and Bulgarian Communist Parties dealt with lack of vigilance—"the reflection of opportunism in the thinking and work of the Party" (Ex. 363, p. 118)—and quotes articles from Pravda and For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy on the need for Bolshevik criticism and self-criticism (Ibid, pp. 127 and 128). It is reasonable to conclude from the article that the author considered the foreign articles as authoritative instructions.

Some of the articles which are in evidence from Pravda contain specific reference to the United States. The March 11, 1950 issue (Ex. 217) contains a speech by Molotov on the international situation in which the following appears (J.A. 1579):

> "The democratic camp, which unites the USSR and the countries of the people's democracy, is opposed by the camp of the imperialist powers headed by the ruling circles of the United States of America. (ibid, p. 6)
>
> * * *
>
> "It is our permanent task and important duty to watch everything that is going on in the camp of imperialism. (ibid, p. 6).

(J.A. 1580):

> "We fully stand for the Leninist-Stalinist principles of peaceful coexistence of the two systems and their peaceful economic competition. But we know it to be true that while imperialism exists, there also exists the danger of new aggression and that in the presence of imperialism and its predatory plans wars are unavoidable. Therefore, the advocates of a durable peace among the peoples must not be passive and become empty pacifists who are charmed by phrases, but they must everyday conduct a stubborn and still more effective struggle for peace, drawing into it the masses of the people and not stopping before appropriate measures when the imperialists attempt to unleash new aggression." (ibid, p. 11)

When read in the light of the considerable evidence of record respecting Respondent's position concerning the United States as an aggressive, imperialist power, and Respondent's policies and activities in the struggle for peace, all of which is set forth in detail elsewhere in this report, it is reasonable to conclude that the foregoing article in Pravda demonstrates that the so-called struggle for peace is used in order "to sweep imperialism and aggression from the face of the earth forever." (Ex. 217, p. 11, J.A. 1580).

Upon the whole record, we find and conclude that articles published in Pravda and For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy are understood by Respondent and treated as authoritative instructions or directives as to the line to be taken or the policy to be pursued.

7. Major Programs

We have hereinbefore referred to the fact that Marxism-Leninism, through the so-called Classics, sets forth certain programs and policies as the means of forwarding the world revolution. Particular emphasis as to programs (as distinguished from organization and discipline in the world Communist movement and from the strategies and tactics for the overthrow of imperialism), is placed upon work in and with labor unions, youth, and minority groups (see pages 62 to 68, supra).

We also find that such programs were basic requirements of the Communist International and have been and are constantly advanced by the Soviet Union. We find further that Respondent early formulated and has consistently carried out such programs in the United States in conformance with Marxism-Leninism and pursuant to other directives of the Communist International and of the Soviet Union, and that the formulation and carrying out of such programs have as their aims and purposes the advancement of the objectives of the world Communist movement. The evidence as to Respondent's activities in and with labor unions, youth, and minority groups, particularly the Negroes, is voluminous. It would unduly burden this report to set forth the many detailed facts from which the foregoing findings are established. We limit ourselves to what we consider the more significant—those in the past which determine the source and illuminate the present, and those of more or less current use and application which determine the continuity and consistency.

It is clear, and as we read the record not disputed, that major attention is given by Respondent to trade union work, to youth and to "the struggle for national liberation of the Negro people". At issue are the reasons for this attention—why and for what purposes. In other words, this proceeding is concerned with whether these policies and activities were formulated and are being carried out on Respondent's initiative or whether they come within Section 13 (a)(1) of the Act.

The preceding section of this report which establishes the meaning of Marxism-Leninism as understood and used by Respondent shows that trade union work, youth work, and work among the minorities, are given importance in the world Communist movement. Trade Unions and youth under Marxism-Leninism are the "belts" and "levers" without whose aid the dictatorship of the proletariat cannot be realized, while the directing force is the Party. Trade unions are "a school of Communism"; youth are "young reserves"; and national minorities have "latent revolutionary capacities". Under the Classics, Communists are taught the necessity of "winning over" and "utilizing" unions in order to carry on the struggle against the government; the necessity of "organizing the Marxist-Leninist training of youth"; and, the necessity of "utilizing" the latent revolutionary capacities of the minority groups for "the overthrow of imperialism".

Additional evidence as to the importance of trade unions, youth, and national minorities in the world Communist movement is furnished by the consistent requirements of the Communist International. The Theses and Statutes required that the component member parties carry on Communist work in labor unions and form Communist groups within the organizations to "win over labor unions to Communism" and "to subordinate the unions to the practical leadership of the Party, as the advance guard of the workers' revolution" (Ex. 8, pp. 29-57, J.A. 1331); that organizational relations between youth and the Communist Party be basically defined in every country after the same system

(p. 8) and, that a policy be carried out for the closest union between all national and colonial liberation movements and Soviet Russia—"to support the revolutionary movement among the subject nations (for example, Ireland, American Negroes, etc.) and in the colonies" (p. 69, J.A. 1332; emphasis added). In discussing preparation for the dictatorship of the proletariat, the Theses and Statutes says in part (J.A. 1323):

> "In every organization, union, association—beginning with the proletarian ones at first, and afterwards in all those of the non-proletarian workers and exploited masses (political, professional, military, co-operative, educational, sporting, etc.,) must be formed groups or nuclei of Communists—mostly open ones, but also secret ones which become necessary in each case when the arrest or exile of their members or the dispersal of their organization is threatened; and these nuclei, in close contact with one another and with the central Party, exchanging experiences, carrying on the work of propaganda, campaign, organization, adapting themselves to all the branches of social life, to all the various forms and subdivisions of the working masses, must systematically train themselves, the Party, the class, and the masses by such multiform work." (p. 16).

The Programme of the Communist International further emphasizes these policies and activities. Concerning trade unions, the Programme says (J.A. 1456):

> ". . . It is particularly important for the purpose of winning over the majority of the proletariat, to capture the trade unions (emphasized in text), which are genuine mass working class organizations closely bound up with the every day struggles of the working class. To work in reactionary trade unions and skillfully to capture them, to win the confidence of the broad masses of the industrially organized workers, to change and 'remove from their posts' the reformist leaders, represent important tasks in the preparatory period." (Ex. 125, p. 76).

With respect to youth, the Programme, in what we find to be adherence to the principles of Lenin and Stalin, points out that the Party relies directly on the mass organizations which include youth, and that systematic work must be carried on among the proletarian and peasant youth (J.A. 1462).

Concerning minorities, the Programme points out the necessity to support every movement "against imperialist violence in the colonies, semi-colonies and dependencies themselves"; to carry on propaganda against all forms of chauvinism and against the "imperialist maltreatment of enslaved peoples and races, big and small (treatment of Negroes, yellow labor, anti-semitism, etc.)" (J.A. 1457).

Still further evidence concerning the role to be given trade unions, youth, and national minorities in the world Communist movement lies in the official organ of the Communist Information Bureau. The December 2, 1949, issue of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy contains a report submitted to the Cominform by M. Suslov, representative of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, entitled "Defense of Peace And The Struggle Against The Warmongers", which emphasizes the necessity of drawing trade unions into the "camp of the fighters for peace, against the warmongers"; it points out the help that can be furnished by youth; and says that the duty of the Communist and working class parties in the capitalist countries is to merge the struggle for the national independence with the struggle for peace (Ex. 249, p. 3, J.A. 1584-1586). The Zhdanov report, previously herein referred to, includes the following statement:

> "Imperialist countries like the United States, Britain and countries near to them become dangerous foes of the national independence and self-determination of nations, while the Soviet Union and the countries of the new democracy are a secure bulwark in the defense of the equality and national self-determination of nations." (Ex. 214, p. 22, J.A. 1577).

Upon consideration of the foregoing and upon the entire record, we find and conclude that trade union work, the training and organization of youth, and national liberation movements, all under the guidance of the Communist Party, are essential elements in carrying out the world communist movement and that these policies were formulated and have been from time to time implemented by Lenin and Stalin, the Communist International, and the Communist Information Bureau. We proceed to examine the record concerning Respondent's use and application of these elements. Evidence as to Respondent's direction in its trade union and national liberation programs is furnished from an article by "Alex Bittelman" which was printed in the March 1934 issue of Respondent's magazine The Communist (J.A. 1473-1483). The author, Bittelman, is presently a high official of Respondent. The theme of the article was to seek to make it appear that the Communist International did not "interfere" in American affairs or "dictate" to Respondent, but that Respondent heeded the Comintern in the exercise of Respondent's own conviction and will.[1]

With respect to trade union work, Bittelman wrote in part as follows (J.A. 1476-1479):

> "The next milestone in the Comintern leadership for the American party we find on the question of trade union work. * * * The Comintern brought the American militants and lefts closer to the world labor movement and to the basic problems of the American labor

1 Bittelman's attempt to explain away control by the Comintern is not in accord with the facts. From the record as a whole, it is apparent that the Comintern in fact dominated and controlled Respondent under conditions whereby Respondent could not exercise its own volition in any major respect. An example is furnished, among many, by Kornfeder's expulsion from the Party for failure to follow the instructions of a Comintern representative. See page 130 herein. Cf. Nowell's trial by the Comintern for opposing the Negro policy of the Comintern, pp. 139-140.

movement. The trade union question was one of them. * * * Even the best and most experienced among the left and militant leaders of the American workers * * *, such as the late Charles E. Ruthenberg, as well as the present leader of our Party, William Z. Foster, were able to rid themselves and our movement of the old ballast of opportunism only by coming closer to Leninism and into the Comintern * * *. (p. 239).

"It was Comintern advice and guidance that helped the American Communists to turn full face to the building of a left-wing in the reformist unions beginning with 1920; it was the advice of the Comintern that helped formulate a correct solution to one of the basic problems of the American proletariat—the organization of the unorganized into trade unions; it was advice of the Comintern on independent leadership of the economic struggles by the revolutionary elements that helped formulate strike policies and tactics; * * * (p. 240).

"Comintern influence on the development of revolutionary trade union policies in the United States has especial significance. * * * It is significant, therefore, that the first question which Comrade Stalin put to the American trade union delegates was: 'How do you account for the small percentage of American workers organized in trade unions?' * * * the intent of Stalin's question is clear: Why don't you organize the workers in trade unions? Why don't you strengthen them against the capitalists? (pp. 240-241). And it was in this direction that the Comintern threw the full weight of its influence and advice in the American labor movement. * * * Tactics and methods of work might vary, depending upon the state of the class struggle. * * * But the strategic aim always remained the same, and for this aim the Communist Party fights bravely and persistently and with increasing effectiveness. * * * So, we ask again: can any American worker, who is alive to the needs of his class and is willing to fight for them, find anything to object to in this 'interference' of the Communist International in American affairs? And will he object to the Communist Party of the U.S. accepting and taking deep satisfaction in such 'interference'? No, he will not. * * * " (p. 241).

And concerning the matter of national liberation, the article includes (J.A. 1480-1481):

"Once more came the 'outside' influence of the Comintern, and what did it say? It said that the struggle against discrimination and for Negro rights is a revolutionary struggle for the national liberation of the Negroes, that we must fight for complete Negro equality, and that in the Black Belt the full realization of this demand requires the fight for the national self-determination of the Negroes, including the right to separation from the United States and the organization of an independent state. Furthermore, it was the interpretation of Leninism and its application to the United States as made by the Comintern that showed the American Communists that the agrarian revolution in the Black Belt, * * * is the basis of the national-liberation movement and that this movement is one of the allies of the American proletariat in the struggle for the dictatorship of the proletariat. * * * Will the Negro workers, farmers, and city poor consider the Comintern advice on the Negro question 'outside dictation'? No. They will, as they actually do, receive this advice with outstretched arms and will continue in every larger masses to rally around the Communist Party as the leader of the liberation fight. * * * (ibid, p. 244).

A review of Respondent's early documents and the testimony of witnesses who were officials of Respondent during its formative years, establish that Respondent gave to trade unions, youth, and minorities as prominent a place in its structure as did the founders of the dictatorship of the proletariat in the Soviet Union. Respondent's articles Publications and other documents, together with the testimony of witnesses, show that throughout its existence and up to the time of this proceeding, Respondent has continued to give importance to trade union work, the mass organization and training of youth, and the struggle for national liberation of the Negroes. It is not necessary to review herein the considerable quantity of evidence that shows the extent of Respondent's policies and activities in furtherance of the world Communist trade union, youth, and national liberation movements; nor to review the large quantity of evidence from which we find that these policies and activities of Respondent represent to a substantial degree the continued following and adherence by Respondent to unrepudiated directives given by the Soviet Union. We limit this report to some of the more significant indications. For clarity, we treat the subjects separately. The evidence hereinafter set forth is in addition to the fact, which we find, that Respondent's policies and activities with trade unions, with youth, and in the struggle for national liberation are based upon and adhere to Marxism-Leninism.

(a) The Trade Union Work

In 1927, Benjamin Gitlow, at the time a member of the Politburo of Respondent and its Central Committee, was sent by Respondent to the Soviet Union at the special request of the Communist International to attend the Plenary sessions of the Executive Committee of the Communist International (J.A. 265). While there, Gitlow, and other leaders of Respondent, met with Joseph Stalin at Stalin's office at the Headquarters of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. Stalin directed the Communist Party to make a very serious effort, among other things, to get a foothold in the trade union movement of the United States, in order to attract to the Communist Party a much larger membership, and to await a sharpening of the economic and social situation in the United States for future revolutionary action (J.A. 265-266).

It will be noted that Stalin's statement is in line with the policies of Marxism-Leninism and of the Comintern, to which we have previously referred. The record shows that Respondent has continuously and consistently placed major emphasis on trade union work to build up the Party (Ex. 376, p. 28, J.A. 1708) and to aid in what Respondent sometimes calls "the class struggle". (Exs. 378, p. 12 and 424, Session 5, Item II).

Petitioner's witness Nowell in 1929 received instructions from the Central Committee of Respondent concerning an elaborate program, later adopted at the founding convention (which Nowell attended as a representative) of a national parent organization—Trade Union Unity League—affiliated with the Red International of Labor Unions in Moscow, for organizing industrial workers in basic industries as well as to foster Communism in unions and for facilitating the proletarian revolution (J.A. 353-354). In 1935, Nowell was instructed as an official of Respondent to gain control of local unions for the purpose of gaining hegemony of the C. I. O. After certain strikes in 1936, Respondent counted on the C. I. O. as part of the People's Front movement to influence United States home and foreign policy in conformity with the International People's Front movement outlined by Dimitroff in his Seventh World Congress speech and resolutions in August 1935 (J.A. 397).

The official minutes of the proceedings of Respondent's governing committees for a number of meetings during the period from late in 1925 to late in 1928 were put in evidence by Petitioner. Many of these minutes show action by Respondent concerning trade union work pursuant to specific instructions and directives from the Communist International. (Examples are Exhibits Nos. 53, 63, 65, 77, 80, 87, and 91).

The record shows that Respondent's tactics in its trade union work have been changed at least three times pursuant to directives of the Communist International and to effectuate the policies of the Communist International. Originally, the policy was to operate in existing unions. This was changed in 1928 to a policy of concentrating on forming new unions. In 1934, the policy reverted to one of operating in existing unions. This policy is still in existence as established by the evidence herein reviewed. Respondent's united front program in the trade union field which presently receives considerable attention from Respondent, originated with the Communist International. As expressed in the aforementioned article by Alexander Bittelman (J.A. 1477-1478):

> "* * * In short, at every stage in the development of the revolutionary trade union movement in the United States (TUEL, class struggle unions of the TUUL, the application of the united front on the trade union field, the fight for trade union unity, etc.), it was with the help of the Comintern that the American revolutionary workers were able to find the correct way, to correct their errors, and, through manifold changes in tactics, to press on to the goal of building a revolutionary trade union movement in the United States." (Ex. 126, p. 240).

Petitioner's witness Kornfeder taught a course at one of Respondent's schools at the national headquarters in New York in 1932 which covered Communist labor union tactics and strategy, including the organization of secret groups inside of labor unions for the purpose of gaining control of such unions, and the preparation and conduct of strikes.[1] (J.A. 351-352).

At its national convention in 1950, Respondent resolved (J.A. 1722):

[1] His course also included one in Leninism, including the main doctrine calling for the total and complete overthrow of all existing social institutions, the government, and organizations which support the government, as well as the complete elimination of the present state structure and the substitution of a dictatorship led by the Communist Party. (J.A. 351-352).

"We must face the fact that the overwhelming bulk of the organized workers in the country are in the A. F. of L., C.I.O. and independent Right-led unions. It is this which must determine the main direction of all of the Party's work, and especially its trade-union and industrial concentration policy." (Ex. 378, p. 13).

In May 1940, Respondent published in its magazine The Communist, an article by Dennis, then and now a high official of Respondent, entitled "The Bolshevization of The Communist Party In The Struggle Against The Imperialist War" which states it is particularly urgent, in accordance with certain conditions outlined by Stalin in Pravda in 1925, to conduct more consistent and effective activity among the A. F. of L. Workers. (Ex. 436, pp. 412 & 417, J.A. 1767).

An article by Henry Winston appearing in Political Affairs for September 1948 (Ex. 418) entitled "For a Fighting Party Rooted Among the Industrial Workers" was used in discussions at Party Club meetings in October and November, 1948, attended by witness Matusow. The article concerns the necessity for mobilizing the workers in the factories as a main base for a successful fight against war and fascism (Ex. 418, pp. 839-840, J.A. 1741). In a subsequent discussion of the article with witness Matusow, the writer, Winston, said that the question of industrial concentration and the movement of young people, members of the Communist Party youth movement, to basic industries was important at this time because in the event of any "imperialist war" it would be necessary to have people in basic industries to mobilize the workers against such war in an effort to slow down production and to do anything possible to see that such an "unjust war" should not be successful (J.A. 1041-1042). The writer, Winston, is a member of Respondent's National Committee and was the National Organizational Secretary.

The February 1951 issue of Political Affairs (Ex. 376) "devoted to reports, speeches, and greetings of the 15th

National Convention of the Communist Party, USA, held in New York City on December 28-31, 1950''; contains an article by John Williamson entitled ''The Main Direction of the Party's Trade Union Work'' (J.A. 1709-1710) which direction, the author says, must be ''among the members of the reformist-led unions'' (primarily the A. F. of L. and C. I. O.). (J.A. 1709) The article refers to the role of the Party through its thirty-one years existence and concludes that ''in general, the trade union policies adopted by our Party were correct'' (ibid, p. 72). According to Williamson (J.A. 1710):

> ''The present situation demands from all Party trade-unionists, especially in positions of leadership, closer ties with the Party, better understanding of policies, and a more vigorous fight for Party policies among the masses.'' (ibid, pp. 72-73).
>
> ''We know . . . our Party, headed by its helmsmen Foster and Dennis, will lead the working class safely to the port of Socialism.'' (ibid, p. 73).

Petitioner's witness Janowitz was a member of Respondent both during the period it was called the Communist Political Association and after it reverted to the name Communist Party. He joined in 1943 (J.A. 1024) and was still a member at the time he testified in this proceeding. He held minor official positions and was active in Respondent's trade union work in Ohio. He and one Fred Haug, at a meeting of Communist labor members in 1950, were assigned the duty of getting new members for the Party (J.A. 1020). Also in 1950, at a meeting of a Communist Party group at the plant where Janowitz was employed, a state official of Respondent handed out copies of New Times, published by the newspaper Tass in Moscow, and of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, official organ of the Cominform. The official told the labor members to read and study the documents and pass them on (J.A. 1018). These documents contain articles which strongly condemn the United States while praising the Soviet Union (Exs. 412 and 413). On the basis of his experience in the Party, Janowitz learned that the Communists are to take advantage of every opportunity that arises to lead the masses, whether it be through depression or strikes or anything else, and are to be the leaders in any movement that unites the masses for the purpose of "getting rid of the capitalist system in America," and substituting Communism (J.A. 1023).

Petitioner's witness Evans attended a regional convention of Respondent in 1951 (J.A. 1101-1102) where a talk was made concerning the policy of industrial concentration and Communist work in trade unions. The witness describes the talk as including reference to the necessity of infiltrating the different unions, especially the key unions (J.A. 1103). His best recollection is that the speaker actually used the word "infiltrating". Similar evidence is furnished by Petitioner's witness Cummings who was taught in Respondent's schools in 1945 that to infiltrate trade union movements was one of the primary objectives of Respondent (J.A. 856).

We have previously referred to the supervision of Respondent's activities by foreign representatives in the United States. In trade union work, the record shows that Petitioner's witness Kornfeder, while an official of Respondent, disagreed with the change in trade union policy in 1934 and was expelled for failure to heed Gerhardt Eisler, a foreign representative, who told him not to voice his disagreement (J.A. 322-325). Witness Honig in the early 1930's was given instructions by a Communist International representative in the United States concerning his Party assignment as editor of a publication called "Labor Unity" (J.A. 475-477).

Members of Respondent have in the past been sent to the Soviet Union where they received schooling and instructions regarding trade union policies and activities. Four of the witnesses in this proceeding had this experience. Witness Nowell was taught trade union and strike strategy at the Lenin School in Moscow in 1931 (J.A. 369-371). Witness Honig was sent by Respondent to Moscow in 1932 where he remained until 1935. While there, he studied the operations of the Soviet trade unions and helped the Communist International to formulate policies to be carried out by Respondent in the trade union field (J.A. 469-470). Honig sent back to Respondent reports on decisions made by the Communist International or its affiliated Red International of Labor Unions with headquarters in Moscow, on such things as where the Respondent was to step up its activities and try to produce strikes and try to capture control of unions. The Respondent reported back to Moscow commenting on the instructions it received to the effect that the Party had been attempting and believed it was succeeding in carrying-out these directives (J.A. 476-482).

The record shows that under Marxism-Leninism, as well as the Communist International and the Soviet Union, the incitement to strike is a tactic of labor union policy and activity. In the late 1920's a special committee was created by Respondent in an attempt to gain control of the United Mine Workers by utilizing anthracite strikes to Respondent's advantage. In 1934, the Comintern and the Red International of Labor Unions at joint meetings in Moscow, instructed Respondent to press the current situation among the longshoremen and dock workers in San Francisco to the point of a general strike (J.A. 479-480). These instructions were communicated to Respondent by coded message and were carried out (J.A. 480; Ex. 157 (see J.A. 1551-1559)). Manuilsky, then secretary-general of the Communist International,[1] expressed himself as anxious to have the strike since a cardinal principle of Leninism was that a general strike is a rehearsal for revolution or for a seizure of power by the Communist Party (J.A. 481-482).

A strike meeting was called at the Fisher Body Plant in Cleveland in the 1930's at the direction of the Communist International representative, Gerhardt Eisler (J.A. 321-322). In 1940, Respondent instigated a strike at Allis-

[1] Manuilsky in 1945 was Soviet representative to the initial United Nations Conference on international organization held in San Francisco.

Chalmers in order to slow down the production of war materials for Great Britain, then at war with the Soviet Union's then ally, Germany. In 1941, Respondent instigated and led a strike conducted by the aircraft division of the United Auto Workers at the North American Aviation Company in California.

(b) YOUTH WORK

As in the case of Respondent's other policies, activities, and programs, we have taken into consideration in arriving at our determinations regarding Respondent's youth work, the fact that Respondent has republished in the United States and uses as textbooks and guides to action, many of the documents, publications and writings of leading officials of the Soviet Union and organs under its control, such as the Communist International. We have also taken into consideration the fact that various members of Respondent have been trained in the Soviet Union and that some of its present top officials were intimately connected with the Communist International.

The evidence clearly preponderates to establish that while it was a part of the Communist International, Respondent's youth policies were formulated and carried out and its activities performed pursuant to directives of the Communist International. A decision of the Comintern in 1926, contained in the "Resolution on the American Question" and requiring greater attention to the building of a mass Young Communist League and pioneer movement was distributed by Respondent's general secretary to all District, City, Section Committees, and Language Bureaus of the Party (Ex. 40; J.A. 1351-1352).

A resolution of Respondent's Central Committee wholeheartedly approved the decisions of the Seventh World Congress of the Comintern in 1935 "to build the widest anti-fascist youth front through the world." The Central Committee in its resolution called upon the Party to do all in its power to help the Young Communist League accomplish a change in its character indicated by the Sixth World Congress of the Young Communist International and which had subsequently been approved by the Communist International (Ex. 185, J.A. 1567-1572).

The minutes of various top committees of Respondent for the period from October 1925 through November 1938 disclose guidance by Respondent of the Young Communist League in the United States on the basis of directives from the Communist International. (Examples are Exs. 58, 71, 72, 73)

Additional evidence as to foreign direction of Respondents's youth policies and activities is furnished by Alexander Bittelman's pamphlet issued in 1932 entitled, The Communist Party in Action (Ex. 144) and by Respondent's Manual on Organization of the Communist Party (Ex. 145). In the pamphlet entitled, The Way Out,[1] issued by Respondent in 1934, the Young Communist League is defined as the mass political organization of young workers which leads them in the struggles for their demands and acts as a training school for Communism. It is organizationally independent of the Communist Party, but acknowledges its political leadership and is affiliated with the Young Communist International (Ex. 136, J.A. 1491).

The record establishes that the Young Communist League in the United States was dissolved in 1943 (when the Communist International ceased to exist) and that in its place the American Youth for Democracy was formed as what is known by Communists as a coalition group, being composed of both members and non-members of the Communist Party. It was technically a non-Communist organization, formed as a win-the-war organization designed to recruit and influence as many young people as possible for the Respondent Party. Witness Philbrick, a member of Respondent, was State Treasurer of the American Youth for Democracy and one of its leaders (J.A. 752-753). Witness Matusow joined the American Youth for Democracy in 1946 and through his associations therein became a member of Respondent in 1947. He continued to be active in Respondent's youth work and in 1949 assisted in the formation of a new Marxist-Leninist youth organization in the United States—the Labor Youth League (J.A. 1024-1032). The plan of Respondent which was carried out was to disband all Communist youth clubs and to transfer their leadership to the Labor Youth League under Respondent's leadership. Among the books used by the educational committee of the Labor Youth League for training its members are: Twilight of World Capitalism by William Z. Foster; The Tasks of Youth by Stalin; and The Young Generation by Lenin (J.A. 1028-1029).

In view of the policy of the world Communist movement for the mass organization of youth organizationally independent of the Party, and in view of the various directives issued to Respondent, all as heretofore set forth, the following quotation from an article in Political Affairs for February 1951 (Ex. 376, J.A. 1711-1712) is relevant to the issues herein:

> "This Convention [15th Natl. Convention, Dec. 1950] reflects real progress in our youth work and better understanding of our Party policy in this field.
>
> * * *
>
> "The 1948 Convention of our Party gave important emphasis to the need of establishing a non-Party working-class youth organization dedicated to the training of the youth in the spirit of socialism.
>
>
> "The recent founding Convention of the Labor Youth League . . . has made a deep impression on our whole Party. In this short time the League has proven itself to be a worthy heir of all the best traditions of the Young Communist League, its 25-year record of struggle and its training of many of the outstanding leaders of our Party today. * * *" (p. 175).
>
> * * *
> "Experience has borne out fully the correctness of establishing L.Y.L. as an independent non-Party mass youth organization. The best answer to those comrades who two years ago thought Party youth clubs filled the need for youth work are the thousands of non-Party members of L.Y.L. who are today participating in its activities and learning in a Marxist spirit." (p. 180).

Other contents of this article are pertinent for comparison with the principles of Stalin and of the Communist International, as previously herein set forth, that a matter of decisive importance in the proletariat's fight against imperialist wars is the work among the youth (See Ex. 148; J.A. 1543-1545). This 1951 article says:

"There can be no fully effective fight for peace without waging a struggle against the militarization of youth. * * * (p. 176).

* * *

"It follows that these are some of the most immediate issues around which our Party must develop an energetic struggle.

1. No extension of the draft to 18-year olds, veterans and married men. No lengthening of the draft service term. No universal military service and training." (p. 178).

Particularly significant for comparison with the foregoing evidence as to Respondent's present policy concerning work among the youth as part of the fight against imperialism, is the resolution passed by the Communist International in 1928 entitled "The Struggle Against Imperialist War and the Tasks of the Communists" (Ex. 148), which says the greatest efforts must be exerted—not only by the youth organizations, but by all Communists—in combatting bourgeois sport organizations, fascist organizations, military schools, etc., through which the bourgeoisie are training the youth for imperialist wars. Also, it is stated that bourgeois military training of the youth must be combatted. (J.A. 1544).

The obligation which the Sixth Congress of the Communist International (1928) placed upon all Communist Parties to assist in setting up Youth Leagues was approved by Respondent's publication as late as 1950, of an article in Political Affairs, entitled "A Generation of Soviet Youth", which refers to such obligation as still authoritative on Party members (Ex. 477, pp. 85-95; J.A. 1775-1777). In this article, the author holds up Lenin and Stalin as models for youth and, after reviewing the role which youth played in bringing about the establishment and consolidation of the dictatorship of the proletariat in Russia, pictures the lot of the Soviet youth under such dictatorship as one of security, free from unemployment and with the right to leisure, whereas in sharp contrast, the American youth must face the constant fear of unemployment under the scourge of American capitalism. In conclusion, the author declares that solidarity with the Soviet Union and appreciation of its leading role in the struggle for peace, democracy and socialism, become the touchstones of true internationism among young people of all countries; and that it is particularly important in the United States—the center of world imperialism—to bring this wonderful understanding to the young people who are studying Marxism-Leninism and to the Party which helps to guide their youth.

The experiences and careers of various witnesses in this proceeding while engaged in youth work as members of Respondent furnish still further relevant evidence. While in Moscow in 1927 and 1928, witness Crouch as a member of Respondent and a representative of the youth organization, was directed to form in the United States joint units of the Party and the Young Communist League to work together in the Navy yards. (J.A. 403-405). He followed this and other directives upon his return to the United States and upon reporting to William Z. Foster and the national officers of the Young Communist League. (J.A. 413). In 1929, Crouch was a member of the National Young Communist League Secretariat and National Educational Director of the Young Communist League but upon orders given to the National Convention of the Young Communist League in 1929 by a representative from Moscow, Crouch was not elected National Secretary because of his previous support of Lovestone in the factional dispute of the Party (J.A. 419-421).

Witness Meyer before coming to the United States was a member of the Communist Party in Great Britain where he was active in work for the Young Communist League and was associated with the secretariat of the Central Committee of the British Young Communist League (J.A. 679-680). In 1934, he went to Paris, France, in connection with setting up a world student and youth congress with counterparts in America and Great Britain. This work, while Meyer was in Paris, was under the direction of Walter Ulbricht, who at the time Meyer testified herein was Vice Prime Minister of Eastern Germany (J.A. 680-681). Upon arrival in the United States in 1934, Meyer was assigned by "Gil Green" to youth work in the United States and during the summer of 1934 attended the convention of the Young Communist League of Canada together with "Gil Green" and a Max Weiss from the Young Communist League of the United States (J.A. 682-683).

Witness Philbrick was a member of the Young Communist League for a couple of years before joining Respondent in 1944, of which he remained a member until 1949, continuing his duties in the Young Communist League and later the American Youth for Democracy. The meetings of the American Youth for Democracy which he regularly attended were conducted along the same lines as those held by the Young Communist League which included training in organization, discussion of current activities on the part of young Communists in the group, and educational sessions on Marxism-Leninism (J.A. 753-756).

Respondent's witness Gates joined the Young Communist League in 1931 to attain what he thought to be the answer to the "personal tragedy" of the depression. (R. 14665-14673). His activities in the Young Communist League led to his attaining a position of leadership in Respondent, which he joined in 1933. He participated in League agitation for the Unemployment Insurance Act and about the Scottsboro affair. (R. 14679-14680). He says his duties and activities as head of the League in New York State were almost identical with the general activities of Communists during the period—activities by the young people of New York State on behalf of the economic welfare, democratic rights and peace. Later herein we deal with the evidence as to the ideological aspects of Respondent's trade union, youth and minorities work.

(c) National Liberation

We have previously herein referred to the fact that Marxism-Leninism, the Communist International, the Soviet Union, and the Communist Information Bureau give importance to what they call the national problem—the "world problem of emancipating the oppressed peoples in the dependent countries and colonies from the yoke of imperialism" (Foundations of Leninism, Ex. 121, p. 77). We have also noted that under Marxism-Leninism, the Comintern, the Soviet Union, and the Cominform, the "national problem" is applied to the Negroes in the United States on the theory that the Negro people in the Black Belt of the South constitute an oppressed nation within the territorial borders of the United States.

The record clearly establishes that a main "line" of Respondent is and has been what it calls the struggle for national liberation of the Negro people (See, in addition to the evidence hereinafter summarized, Ex. 378 (J.A. 1722-1723); Ex. 376 (J.A. 1709); Ex. 479 (J.A. 1777)). This proceeding is concerned with whether or not the concept and application by Respondent of the theory as to the right of the Negro people in the Black Belt to self-determination is a program which Respondent arrived at independently.

Respondent's position in this respect is summed up by its witness, Dr. Aptheker, as follows:

> "• • • I would stick to my answer that the Negro question is a national question, it is certainly not something dictated from abroad or by the Communist International. The Negro question is a national question, is a reflection of objective reality. If it is dictated, it is dictated by life." (R. 16244).

Dr. Aptheker concedes that although certain Negro leaders after the Civil War thought in terms of the concept of Negro nationalism, that was not known to the leaders of Respondent and was not used by Respondent in evolving its position on the Negro question. Also, that at the time the policy of self-determination of the Negro people and the Black Belt was enunciated by the Party, it was not the policy advocated, in the developed sense at least, by the majority of the Negro people or a majority of their leaders. (J.A. 1306).

In the early 1930's, the Executive Committee of the Communist International drew up and passed certain resolutions concerning the Negro question in the United States which were sent to Respondent to be carried out. (J.A. 364). These resolutions established the line of the Communist International to be a demand for self-determination of the Negroes in the United States in the form of unconditional autonomy-separation, or secession from the United States and the establishment of a separate Negro government in the Black Belt of the South. (J.A. 363). As explained by witness Nowell and corroborated by the copy of the resolution in evidence, if no proletarian revolution has occurred, Respondent is to support the rebellious government of the Negro republic in its opposition to the Government of the United States, in order to weaken the Government of the United States and aid Respondent in precipitating and executing the proletarian revolution (J.A. 363-364). During Nowell's membership in the Party, definite steps were taken to execute this program (J.A. 364).

As a member of Respondent, witness Nowell attended the Lenin School in Moscow in 1931, where he was taught that the Negro question in the United States was a part of the colonial question; that the foundation of the colonial problem was imperialist exploitation by the mother countries; that the Communists were to help colonial countries break themselves away from their mother countries, thereby weakening the mother countries and thus aiding the proletariat and the Communist Parties in those countries to precipitate and carry through a proletariat revolution and the establishment of a communist dictatorship. (J.A. 371-372). Witness Nowell was disciplined while in the Soviet Union for voicing disagreement with the theory and demand for separation and secession by the Negroes from the government of the United States and the establishment of a separate government (J.A. 373-375).

Witness Johnson was active in Respondent's Negro work during his membership from 1930 to 1940. In 1932, he attended Respondent's National Training School in New York City (J.A. 648) where his instructors included William Z. Foster, Gilbert Green, Jack Stachel, Max Bedacht and others who are presently leaders of the CPUSA. (J.A. 648) At the school he was taught by a member of Respondent's Central Committee that members of the Party were to work for equal rights for Negroes which included specifically the right in the Black Belt to rebel and wage civil war to form an independent autonomous Soviet Republic; that the movement toward the establishment of this autonomous Negro Republic should be guided and steered in such a way by the Negro Communists that it would take place simultaneously with the general proletarian or Communist revolution in America (J.A. 654-655). Johnson, who became a Negro member of Respondent's Central Committee, subsequently lectured in the school and before Party meetings and study groups on this program (J.A. 654-655).

In its "Manual On Organization" first issued in the 1930's, Respondent said the Negro people are "the other important ally" in speaking of those that the proletariat must win to its cause, and "without whom there cannot be a successful revolution." (Ex. 145, pp. 14 and 15). The Manual quotes the following from an "Open Letter" adopted by Respondent's Central Committee in 1933 (J.A. 1534-1535):

"The Party must mobilize the masses for the struggle for equal rights of the Negroes and for the right of self-determination for the Negroes in the Black Belt. It must ruthlessly combat any form of white chauvinism and Jim-Crow practices. It must not only in words, but in deeds, overcome all obstacles to the drawing in of the best elements of the Negro proletariat, who in the recent years have shown themselves to be self-sacrificing fighters in the struggle against capital . . ." (ibid, pp. 15 and 16).

Witness Cummings was a member of Respondent from 1942 to 1949. He attended one of Respondent's training schools and many of Respondent's meetings. He also read Party literature. He was taught that the primary objective of Respondent was "to infiltrate trade union movements, Negro organizations, and any organizations that we were able to get into and take control of, to eventually change the system of American Government" (J.A. 856).

Benjamin Davis, National Committee member, in his report to Respondent's 15th Convention, held on December 28-31, 1950, in New York City, said an important feature of the Negro liberation movement is "the international significance of this question". (Pet. Ex. 379, p. 12); that the "Party's line on the Negro question is a Leninist-Stalinist principle and method of work" (J.A. 1726) and that (J.A. 1726):

"Tendencies to treat the Negro people as mere victims of oppression, without seeing their unique positive and revolutionary role in the struggle against capitalist reaction are a patronizing form of white chauvinism." (ibid, p. 19).

John Williamson, in a report to the 15th National Convention of Respondent in December 1950, pointed out that "the cause of the working class as a whole cannot advance unless a firm alliance is established with the Negro people and unless the working class assumes its full responsibility in support of the struggle of the oppressed Negro nation for freedom." (Ex. 376, p. 69, J.A. 1709). Jim Jackson, another of Respondent's leaders, puts it as follows:

> "'The development of higher levels of the Negro national revolutionary struggle in the Black Belt, and the broad mass movement for democratic rights in the South as a whole, is an indispensable prerequisite for insuring the victory of the working class and the American people over the menacing challenge of the ruling class forces of fascism and war presently, and for working class victory over capitalism ultimately. This is a basic fundamental in the strategy for working class victory, and a special feature of the path to the triumph of Socialism in our country." (Ex. 376, p. 119).

An article in Political Affairs for January 1951, entitled "Working Class and People's Unity for Peace! (Main Resolution of the 15th National Convention, CPUSA)" characterizes the Negro people as a "tremendous reservoir of strength for the whole democratic movement" (Ex. 378, p. 11) and states (J.A. 1722):

> "Because U. S. imperialism is compelled to cloak with demagogic phrases about democracy and equality its drive for world conquest, particularly its military assault against the colonial liberation movement in Asia, the Negro question tears the mask off Wall Street's real face and assumes the greatest international significance." (ibid, p. 17).

(d) Ideological Versus Political Aims

The foreign-evolved policies, activities, and programs for the carrying out of the world Communist movement, as set forth by the Soviet Union through Marxism-Leninism, the Communist International and otherwise, teach and sanction activities calculated to achieve reforms. The record shows that Respondent has campaigned for and championed reforms such as shorter working hours, nonmilitarization of youth and Negro rights. However, the record shows that such activities are political and only incidentally ideological; that the campaigns are primarily carried out not for the ostensible objective of the campaigns but to aid in the accomplishment of the objectives of the world Communist movement.

In addition to the evidence hereinbefore set forth concerning the true purposes of Respondent's trade union work, youth work, and national liberation activities, the following is pertinent.

Petitioner's witness Evans, chairman of a Party club, delegate to a Party regional convention in 1951, and section educational director in 1951, states, on cross-examination as to recent Negro rights activities of his Party club, that a study of Communist tactics and of Communist strategy will refute the declaration that the interest of the Party in the fight for Negroes is focused upon the individual; he shows that, in effect, the fight for Negro rights is an effort by the Party to make the Negro a useful means of helping the Party obtain the victory of socialism (J.A. 1113-1114).

Foundations of Leninism points out that the necessity for the proletariat to support the national liberation movement of the oppressed and dependent countries does not mean everywhere and always, in every single concrete case, but only where the national movement tends to weaken, to overthrow imperialism, and not to strengthen and preserve it. (Ex. 121, p. 79, J.A. 1435-1436).

Respondent's publication The Communist Party in Action, written by one of Respondent's present leaders, Bittelman, in 1934, says the importance of the daily struggles concerning "small" grievances must not be underestimated, and quotes the Communist International as stating in effect that only by conducting every day struggles can the Party achieve a united front and lead the working class to a victorious dictatorship of the proletariat. (Ex. 144, pp. 43-44).

In 1924, Stalin wrote in Foundations of Leninism (J.A. 1439-1440):

"Some think that Leninism is opposed to reforms, opposed to compromise and to agreements in general. This is absolutely wrong. Bolsheviks know as well as anybody else that in a certain sense 'every little bit helps', that under certain conditions reforms in general, and compromises and agreements in particular are useful . . .

"Obviously, therefore, it is not a matter of reforms or of compromises and agreements, but of the use people make of reforms and compromises . . .

"To a revolutionary, . . . the main thing is revolutionary work and not reforms; to him reforms are by-products of the revolution". . .

"The revolutionary will accept a reform in order to use it as an aid in combining legal work with illegal work, to intensify, under its cover, the illegal work for the revolutionary preparation of the masses for the overthrow of the bourgeoisie." (Ex. 121, pp. 103-4).

(e) Conclusion As To Major Programs

Our summary of the evidence concerning trade union work, youth work, and work among the Negroes, does not include all of the evidence relevant to these subjects. On the basis of the foregoing and upon the entire record, we find and conclude that early in its existence Respondent accepted these policies and programs and has continued to follow them and has not repudiated them; that Respondent's trade union work, youth work and national minorities work could only have as their aim the effectuation of the policies of the Soviet Union with respect to the world Communist movement; and that Respondent's policies and activities in these fields are substantially formulated, carried out, and performed, pursuant to directives of the Soviet Union.

8. Conclusions as to Foreign Policies and Directives

In view of the findings and conclusions hereinbefore set forth in this section of our report, we find and conclude that:

1. Respondent's organizational form is based upon instructions and directives issued by the Soviet Union;

2. Respondent's organizational policies are formulated and carried out to effectuate the policies of the Soviet Union and the world Communist movement;

3. A substantial number of Respondent's leaders have accepted the views and policies of the Soviet Union concerning the advancement of the objectives of the world Communist movement, and have made such views and policies the views and policies of Respondent;

4. Marxism-Leninism, as understood, used and followed by Respondent, consists of a body of doctrine, policies, strategies and tactics intended to bring about the end of capitalism and substitute for it a dictatorship of the proletariat; it has been promulgated and issued by the Soviet Union as the overall philosophy, authoritative rules, directives and instructions governing the world Communist movement;

5. Among other things, by the acceptance and following of the organizational devices of democratic-centralism and self-criticism, as these devices are defined and explained by the Soviet Union, and by the acceptance of and adherence to Marxism-Leninism, Respondent subjects itself to the authority of the Soviet Union;

6. Respondent throughout its existence has and does at the present time teach, advocate, and carry out activities having for their objective the overthrow of the United States Government and other governments which are designated as "imperialist" by the Soviet Union, pursuant to directives of the Soviet Union and to effectuate the policies of the Soviet Union, all for the purposes of defending and protecting the Soviet Union and of establishing in the United States (and other countries) a dictatorship of the proletariat patterned after that in the Soviet Union;

7. Respondent has established a press in the United States patterned after that in the Soviet Union which operates as a means of setting forth for Respondent's members the correct line as laid down by the Soviet Union;

8. The press in the Soviet Union and the journal of the Communist Information Bureau are major communication means whereby directives and instructions of the Soviet Union are issued to Respondent;

9. Representatives of the Soviet Union who were sent by it to the United States have been instrumental in putting or keeping in power leaders of Respondent, devotedly loyal and subservient to the Soviet Union, who have continued to be and still are Respondent's leaders; that such representatives have on behalf of the Soviet Union directed the adoption and use of a number of the Respondent's present policies and activities;

10. Among the major programs set forth by the Soviet Union for the accomplishment of the objectives of the world Communist movement are trade union work, youth work, and work with national minorities; and, pursuant to requirements of the Soviet Union, Respondent has made these its major programs in the United States and carries out such programs pursuant to directives issued by the Soviet Union, for the purposes of effectuating the policies of the Soviet Union and advancing the objectives of the world Communist movement;

11. Respondent's policies are formulated and carried out and its activities are performed pursuant to directives of, and to effectuate the policies of, the Soviet Union, which directs and controls the world Communist movement.

C. Non-Deviation

Section 13(e)(2) of the Act provides that the Board shall take into consideration "the extent to which its [Respondent's] views and policies do not deviate from those of such foreign government or foreign organization;".

The petition alleges, in part, on this subject:

> "Throughout its existence the Communist Party never knowingly has deviated from the views and policies of the government and Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Communist International, the Communist Information Bureau and other leaders of the world Communist movement. Whenever such views and policies have conflicted with the position taken by the Government of the United States, the Communist Party has opposed the position of the United States."

Dr. Philip E. Mosely, Professor of International Relations at Columbia University and Director of the University's Russian Institute, was Petitioner's principal witness for the purpose of establishing that Respondent's views and policies do not deviate from those of the Soviet Union. Dr. Mosely has had a distinguished and active career in the field of international relations and for more than 20 years has devoted his research primarily to Russian political and diplomatic history. While so doing, he has had occasion to analyze carefully the publications and other documents issued by Respondent and the Soviet Union. He is eminently qualified to testify as an expert on evidence relative to the "non-deviation" criterion of the Act (J.A. 507-512).

Dr. Mosely's testimony traced the continuing stream of international questions, upon which both the Soviet Union and the CPUSA have announced a position. He enumerated some 45 international questions of major import,[1] extending over the past 30 years, with respect to which there was, as revealed by his testimony, no substantial difference between the position announced on each by the Soviet Union or its official and controlled organs and that announced by the CPUSA or its official and controlled organs.

On each specific topic, several exhibits illustrating the views or policies of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA, respectively, were introduced contemporaneously with Dr. Mosely's oral testimony.

At the hearing, Respondent moved to strike Dr. Mosely's testimony and objected to the admission into evidence of the exhibits offered through this witness on the grounds that: (1) basing a registration order thereon would violate the First Amendment; (2) to base a finding of domination and control thereon would violate the Fifth Amendment; (3) it was not proved that the Soviet Union adopted its views first; (4) Respondent was not allowed proper cross-examination; (5) Dr. Mosely was disqualified as an expert; and (6) exhibits purporting to be translations from the Russian language were not properly authenticated. (R. 9056-9059).

Additional objections also raised at the hearing were that specific documents (a) predated the Act;[2] (b) pertained to subjects not covered in the petition; (c) were not shown to express authoritative views; (d) did not establish a parallel view; (e) did not support allegations of the petition; and (f) did not support Dr. Mosely's testimony. (R. 10881-10920).

We have reviewed the entire record relative to all of the aforementioned contentions of Respondent. Those pertaining expressly to Constitutional issues will be treated later in this Report under "Legal Discussion".[1] Viewing the record in a light most favorable to Respondent, we find no error in the Panel's acceptance of this particular evidence or in its rulings with respect thereto.

Passing to its exceptions, Respondent took issue in the manner described heretofore (pp. 4-5, supra) with every statement in the Panel's decision concerning non-deviation. These exceptions are generally contentious, lacking in specificity and without merit; and, except to the extent that they pertain to matters discussed below or are incorporated in our findings, they do not warrant further comment.

In its brief accompanying its exceptions, Respondent contends that the Panel's concept of the non-deviation criterion is (a) irrational, erroneous and based on incompetent evidence, and (b) involves conclusions which Dr. Mosely admitted he could not draw. Respondent further asserts that the Panel's misconception in this regard is reflected by rulings which prevented it from showing on cross-examination of Dr. Mosely and in its affirmative case that its views preceded those of the Soviet Union, were correct and reasonable, were arrived at independently by Respondent, and coincide with universal opinion and the best interests of the American people.

With regard to these contentions, we find no material error or irrationality in the Panel's conception of this criterion. We likewise find no merit to the contention that the Panel reached a conclusion which the witness Dr. Mosely admitted he could not make. Dr. Mosely stated in effect that his expert testimony was directed toward analyzing the basic line of thinking, analysis and advocacy of views and policies of the Soviet Union and Respondent and not at the process by which Respondent arrived at a given position on an international question, i.e., whether independently of the Soviet view or as a result of Soviet domination and control of Respondent. We do not understand this to conflict with, or detract from, the purport of his testimony. Whether the oral and documentary evidence adduced through Dr. Mosely tends to establish domination and control of Respondent when viewed with the evidence of record in the light of the other criteria of Section 13(e) of the Act is for the Board's determination.

With respect to the remaining contentions related above, we conclude that Respondent was permitted reasonable opportunity to cross-examine Dr. Mosely and to establish its affirmative case. It is noted in passing that Dr. Mosely was cross-examined for 15 days. Respondent was not permitted, and rightly so, to put in issue the merits of the views or policies of Respondent, which views and policies were placed in evidence by Petitioner to establish "non-deviation". For in applying the "non-deviation" criterion, the Board is required to view cumulatively the spread of the evidence relating to the non-deviation of views and policies without deciding the merits of any views or policies of Respondent.

Respondent has contended throughout that the term "non-deviation" as used in the Act should be interpreted to mean "following a course already established" and that since a substantial number of Petitioner's exhibits illustrating the view or policy of Respondent predated the exhibits expressing the Soviet view or policy, these exhibits did not show that Respondent adopted a previously established view of the Soviet Union but the contrary. Assertedly, this consideration was reinforced by the absence of proof by Dr. Mosely to establish that the announcement of the Soviet view had preceded the Respondent's expression on the same topic.

Petitioner, on the other hand, took the position at the outset of Dr. Mosely's testimony, and in advance of the raising of this objection by Respondent, that the exhibits under discussion were offered in evidence merely to illustrate the oral testimony of Dr. Mosely on the respective international questions, in order to show a documentary basis for his testimony; and that the documentary evidence was not intended to establish the date of the first announcement thereon by either the Soviet Union or the CPUSA. Petitioner further argued that in many instances the Soviet view or policy must necessarily have come first, particularly since the first announcement of the Soviet Union's position may have taken the form of a fait accompli, as for example, its unexpected signing of the Hitler-Stalin non-aggression pact.

As stated by Petitioner, these exhibits were placed in evidence to afford a documentary basis for the testimony of Dr. Mosely and not to establish the first announcements of views and policies. Moreover, we have considered Dr. Mosely's testimony with other evidence of record,[1] all of which establishes that Respondent invariably follows the views and policies of the Soviet Union. We do not believe, therefore, that the date sequence of the exhibits placed in evidence through Dr. Mosely is dispositive of whether Respondent's views and policies have deviated from those of the Soviet Union.

We now proceed to set forth our findings on the evidence established by Dr. Mosely and other witnesses relative to this criterion.

The nature of the evidence adduced through Dr. Mosely is illustrated by his testimony, and documents submitted through him, concerning the non-aggression Pact entered into by Hitler and Stalin, known as the Hitler-Stalin Pact of August 23, 1939. He established the identity of views between the CPUSA and the Soviet Union prior to the making of this Pact (J.A. 536-539); the parallel attitude of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA toward World War II while this Pact was in effect (J.A. 536-537, 539, 541-545, 548); and the simultaneous change of policy on the part of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA after June 22, 1941, the date on which the Pact was abrogated by the German attack on the Soviet Union (J.A. 548-551, 556-557).

[1] This consists of documentary evidence, and oral testimony of witnesses Witlow, Kornfeder, Markward, Matusow, Budenz and others, as illustrated later in this finding.

To further illustrate the evidence, it is established that prior to the making of the Hitler-Stalin Pact, Respondent, conforming to the position taken by the Soviet Union, had denounced Fascism in Nazi Germany as the main threat of aggression in the world and as the foremost danger to peace and democracy (J.A. 536, 538-539) notwithstanding that the signing of the Pact by the Soviet Union on August 23, 1939, constituted a reversal of the anti-Fascist line and caused considerable consternation and defection among Respondent's leaders and members, Respondent immediately switched to the Soviet Union's position and hailed the non-aggression agreement as an important contribution to peace (J.A. 539, 878-879); when Germany invaded Poland, Respondent echoed the Soviet assertion that the Pact continued to be an important contribution to peace as it would limit the spread of war (J.A. 537, 539); and, further, that opposition to this territorial expansion was the work of war mongers (J.A. 529); after the defeat of Poland, the Soviet Union and Respondent both took the position that England and France were guilty of prolonging the war (J.A. 537, 539-540); that the war was an "unjust"[1] and imperialistic war and that no country which hoped for peace should assist England and France (J.A. 539-543, 545-548). Respondent, like the Soviet Union, strongly opposed lend-lease aid by the United States to Great Britain (J.A. 545-547). Immediately after the German attack on the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the latter reversed its position and almost simultaneously Respondent did the same; both suddenly concluded that the character of the war had changed (J.A. 548, 550-551); World War II became in the eyes of both a "just" war; they urged that the "Allies" should have the support of the United States and of all freedom-loving people; they advocated aid by the United States to Great Britain and to the Soviet Union (J.A. 548, 550), and Respondent branded those in the United States who opposed such aid as agents of Hitler (J.A. 550). Soon after the German attack on the Soviet Union, Respondent joined with the Soviet Union in demanding the opening of a second front "now" with the United States participating therein (J.A. 556-557).

The views of the Soviet Union and Respondent likewise coincided on the trials and executions in the Soviet Union in 1937 (J.A. 448-450, 522-525, 840-841, Exs. 172, 173, 175); Respondent echoed the statements of the Soviet Union concerning the Russo-Finnish War (J.A. 525-527, 844; Exs. 176, 177, C.P. Ex. 39); the same situation prevailed in regard to the absorption of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania by the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union and Respondent assumed the same position in 1947-1949 with regard to the internal crisis in Greece in that they both favored the actions of the Greek guerillas (Exs. 214, 241, 242, 243); and they coincided in their views on the change in the Czech government in February 1948 (J.A. 578-584; Exs. 214, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224).

The evidence relative to this criterion further established that, prior to the Cominform resolution which attacked the Tito government, Respondent paralleled the Soviet Union in giving approval of the course of post-World War II developments in Yugoslavia and of the Tito government (J.A. 612-614). On June 28, 1948, however, the Cominform issued a resolution, initiated assertedly through an exposure by the Soviet Union, which attacked Tito and his regime in bitter terms; among other charges, Tito and his leaders were derided for having entertained the hope that Yugoslavia could build "socialism" without "the support of the Soviet Union" (Ex. 344, J.A. 1659-1663). One day later, on June 29, 1948, Respondent also reversed its position on the Tito government and issued a statement lauding this Cominform resolution and criticizing the Tito regime for showing hostility to the Soviet Union and for attempting to "curry favor with Anglo-American imperialism" (Ex. 260, p. 699).

The views and policies of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA were identical on the question of the Berlin Blockade in 1948 (J.A. 603-604); they have likewise coincided on the course of events in post-World War II Germany (J.A. 602-605; Pet. Exs. 244, 248, 397, 398).

The views and policies of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA have been substantially the same with regard to the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall Plan, ECA, and the North Atlantic Pact, namely, that the United States participation and leadership in these measures are for the aggressive purpose of domination of the world; whereas the views and policies of the Soviet Union and Respondent, on the other hand, allegedly support peace and democracy (J.A. 606-612).

The Soviet Union and Respondent took the same position in regard to the Stockholm Peace Petition in 1950[1] in asserting that all true proponents of peace should support the petition, which was issued by a committee of the World Peace Congress (J.A. 624-627; Ex. 268). Respondent supports the Soviet Union's position, as opposed to that of the United States, concerning control and inspection of atomic energy (J.A. 630-632; Exs. 241, 273, 274). The same situation prevails regarding the seating of Yugoslavia in the United Nations Security Council, with Respondent supporting the Soviet Union's opposition to the United States on this question (J.A. 635-637; Exs. 277, 278, 279, 280). The Soviet Union and the United States Government have taken opposite positions with respect to the representation of China in the United Nations; Respondent maintains the Soviet position which favors the seating of the representatives of the Chinese Democratic Peoples Republic and the exclusion of representatives of the Chinese Nationalistic Government (J.A. 632-636, 837-838; Ex. 275, 276). Respondent concurred with the views of the Soviet Union in opposition to the United States peace treaty with Japan (J.A. 718-721; Exs. 210, 314, 315, 316, 317).

[1] Respondent again expressed this view regarding the Stockholm Peace Petition in December, 1951 (Ex. 488, J.A. 1779-1781).

The CPUSA's position in support of the conduct of the Czechoslovakian government in the William Oatis case (American correspondent) coincides with the Soviet Union's position thereon (J.A. 721-723, 845; Ex. 318, 319).

The testimony and documentary evidence also established that the CPUSA and the Soviet Union express the same views regarding Korea; both maintain that the Syngman Rhee government is a reactionary "puppet regime" (J.A. 637-646, 862-864; Exs. 268, 269, 270, 281, 282, 286, 289); both vigorously condemn the hostilities in Korea as the direct result of American imperialism and aggression; both insist the United Nations police action is illegal and aggressive toward North Korea (J.A. 637-646; 724-726, 862-866; Exs. 282, 288, 289); both maintain that this war constitutes a threat to the Chinese Peoples Republic which justifies the Chinese Communist intervention in the conflict (J.A. 637-646, 707-708, Ex. 283); both assert that the Chinese intervention in support of North Korea aids the struggle of "peace-loving" peoples of the world, which are led by the Soviet Union, against the program of the American imperialist aggressors (J.A. 645-646; 707-708; Ex. 283, 290, 299); both charge that the United States desires continuation and expansion of the Korean War (J.A. 726; Exs. 320, 323); both insist that the United States has disrupted and delayed cease-fire negotiations and blocked peace in Korea (J.A. 726; Ex. 320, 321, 322, 323); and both demand acceptance of the proposals for cease-fire and "peace" made on behalf of the North Korea Peoples Republic (Ex. 320, 321, 322, 323). In short, Respondent and the Soviet Union, regarding Korea and the Korean conflict, coincide completely in their condemnation of the policies of the United States Government in its support of the United Nations in Korea.

In addition, other witnesses established that, during the existence of the Communist International, Respondent did not deviate from Comintern instructions in a single instance (J.A. 336, 668); further, that a CPUSA member could not disagree with a position taken by the Cominform and continue to remain a Party member[1] (J.A. 780-781); that in those instances in which the policies of the United States and the Soviet Union appeared to be in conflict, Respondent at no time expressed sympathy with the policy of the United States Government (J.A. 748-749); that the Soviet Union was never criticized in Party circles, but, on the contrary, it was a cardinal rule to praise the Soviet Union at all times (J.A. 782, 1161); that in 1941 and prior thereto, a Moscow news agency supplied Respondent with political and other news dispatches which were distributed to Respondent's leaders so that they could keep informed of the "party line" and its interpretations; and that the aforementioned dispatches were regarded by Respondent as being directives from the Soviet Union on positions to be taken, and were implemented accordingly (J.A. 1169-1171). It was stated in Respondent's 1942 Constitution (Ex. 328, Art. VI, Sec. 15) that no CPUSA member was permitted to have a personal or a political relationship with "Trotskyites", a term used in CPUSA and Soviet Union circles in an odious sense to signify persons sympathetic to a system of deviation from the official "line" of the Soviet Union (J.A. 264).

It is also shown by evidence, in addition to that adduced through Dr. Mosely, that throughout the entire existence of Respondent, including the present, it has agreed with the view of the Soviet Union to the effect that the United States is an imperialistic nation which seeks world domination and whose government should be overthrown, whereas the Soviet Union is a true democracy in search of peace and its aims should be fostered.[2] When the United States was a potential or actual ally of the Soviet Union this chant was not sung by either the Soviet Union or the CPUSA.

[1] There have been instances of internal deviation within the CPUSA. Such instances usually resulted in dismissal from the Party, as in the cases of Gitlow and Browder. This, of course, in no wise detracts from these findings. In fact, these instances lend even greater weight to the findings, in that they highlight the intolerability with which any deviation is regarded by both Respondent and the Soviet Union.

[2] See "Imperialism", pp. 81 to 103, supra; and "Allegiance", pp. 215 to 233, infra.

Respondent made no effort to rebut the condition clearly shown to exist by Petitioner's evidence. It offered no evidence to establish a conflict between the policies of the Soviet Union and the CPUSA at any time or on any occasion. Nor is there any evidence to show that, where the views or policies of the United States as officially announced conflicted with the views of the Soviet Union, the CPUSA in any instance took a position thereon in harmony with the views of the United States, though its witnesses were repeatedly invited on cross-examination to show such an occasion. Each of Respondent's witnesses evaded a direct answer to the question and, curiously enough, each gave a similar circuitous and equivocal answer stating that Respondent's policies reflect what it conceives to be the true national interest of the American people; that if the views or policies of Respondent and the Soviet Union are similar or identical, this proves only that the national interests of the people of the two nations are the same; that Respondent takes the view that the true national interests of all people are identical; and that Respondent arrives at its views independently (J.A. 1224-1227, 1249-1250, 1252-1254, 1283-1284, 1299-1300).

These platitudes do not negate Petitioner's evidence. Respondent's witnesses were unable to cite a single instance throughout its history where, in taking a position on a question which found the views or policies of the Soviet Union and the United States Government in conflict, the CPUSA had agreed with the announced position of the United States; nor could they show a single instance when the CPUSA had disagreed with the Soviet Union on any policy question where both Respondent and the Soviet Union have announced a position.

The testimony of Dr. Mosely and documents submitted through him embraced a tremendous area of international problems on which the positions of Respondent and the Soviet Union coincide. We have pointed out a representative portion of them. The uniformity is constant and on a wide variety of questions, and is corroborated by other evidence of record.

In evaluating the foregoing evidence we have taken into consideration that during the early history of Respondent, when it was openly a member of the Communist International and less secretive about its objectives, it accepted and effectuated the principles and tactics of the Comintern pursuant to an express condition of membership in the Communist International which required Respondent so to do (Exs. 8, 6(c)). Moreover, in weighing the evidence set forth herein we have considered Respondent's adherence to Marxism-Leninism,[1] which in its essence requires acceptance by it of any position that the Soviet Union determines will advance the world Communist movement.

The record precludes the conclusion which Respondent would have us draw, i.e., that the uniformity of views results from "sharing a common scientific outlook" and independent application of principles by it and the Soviet Union. The great weight of the evidence is to the contrary.

We find on the entire record that the views and policies of Respondent throughout its history invariably coincide with the views and policies of the Soviet Union. Moreover, Respondent conforms immediately to each reversal in the Soviet Union's views and policies.

We conclude and find that Respondent's views and policies do not deviate from those of the Soviet Union.

D. Financial Aid

We are directed by the Act to consider "the extent to which it [Respondent] receives financial or other aid, directly or indirectly, from or at the direction of such foreign government or foreign organization" (Section 13(e)(3)).

The petition alleges:

> "The Communist Party now receives and from time to time in the past has received financial aid, from or at the direction of the government and Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Communist International and the Communist Information Bureau * * *"

---

[1] See "Marxism-Leninism", pp. 38-81, supra.

The CPUSA sent members to the Soviet Union to attend schools located there, notably the Lenin Institute in Moscow. The expense for their travel and subsistence was borne by the Communist International (Gitlow, J.A. 528-529; Honig, J.A. 484-485; Nowell, J.A. 392; Kornfeder, 303-304; Exs. 72, 83, 87, 101).

In the 1920's and 1930's, the Communist International financed the travel of CPUSA officials and members to and from the Soviet Union and on missions to other countries for the purpose of orientation and the conduct of official business on behalf of international Communism, such as fulfilling representative functions in the Communist International; in addition to their subsi ence, salaries were paid them in some instances by the Communist International for the duration of their stay in the Soviet Union (Crouch, J.A. 401-402; Honig, J.A. 484-487; Kornfeder, J.A. 327-330; Exs. 63, 80, 89, 102).

During the period from 1920 to 1934 the CPUSA received financial assistance from the Soviet Union, often in the form of subsidies, which are described more fully in subsequent findings under this heading (Gitlow, J.A. 224, 259-261; Kornfeder, J.A. 327-329; Honig, J.A. 487-489; Ex. 102-A).

The Communist International contributed the sum of $50,000 to Respondent for the purpose of financing the 1924 campaigns of William Z. Foster and Benjamin Gitlow, the Communist Party candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States, respectively (J.A. 272); and the Communist International likewise contributed a substantial sum to Respondent to finance the campaigns of these candidates on the same ticket in 1928 (J.A. 257-258, 285-291).

The Communist International directed the establishment of the Daily Worker and contributed the sum of $37,000 to Respondent in 1924 for this purpose (J.A. 229-230; Ex. 47). During the period of 1936 to 1938 the expenses of the Daily Worker were reduced because international news was received from the International Press Correspondence, an organ of the Communist International (J.A. 656-657, 1117-1118).

In 1929, a delegation of ten CPUSA officials went to Moscow to appeal a decision of Stalin on a factional dispute within the Respondent organization. The Communist International paid the travel expenses of the members of this delegation (J.A. 261-264, 269-270; Ex. 103, J.A. 1418-1420).

The Communist International in Moscow announced the decision on the 1929 factional dispute within the CPUSA. Thereupon, the Communist International gave a substantial sum of money to the Chairman of the new Secretariat of the CPUSA, which had been formed by the Communist International. These funds were to be used to establish a new newspaper, loyal to the Communist International, in the event that the CPUSA lost control of the Daily Worker because of the factional dispute (J.A. 270, 315); further, the Chairman of the newly formed Secretariat was given a substantial additional sum to finance enforcement among the members of the CPUSA of the decision reached in the Soviet Union regarding the leadership of the CPUSA (J.A. 291-295, 315).

The Trade Union Educational League (TUEL) was formed in the early 1920's pursuant to instructions from the Communist International; the latter also furnished a subsidy for the initial financing of this newly formed organization (J.A. 317-318).

In 1928, a Trade Union Delegation was organized in this country by the CPUSA at the direction of the Communist International, to visit the Soviet Union. A member of this delegation's technical staff, who was a secret member of Respondent, eventually wrote the delegation report. The Communist International partially financed the organization and expenses of the delegation's visit to the Soviet Union (J.A. 233-236, 273-281).

About 1928, the Communist International subsidized, by grants of substantial sums of money, a campaign by the CPUSA among the members of the United Mine Workers to defeat John L. Lewis for the union presidency (Gitlow, J.A. 256; Kornfeder, J.A. 311-313; Ex. 95, 98).

During the early period of Respondent's existence in the United States, paid functionaries of the CPUSA were permitted to purchase books at 1/3 discount from the International Publishers, the latter being a Soviet Union publishing organization in the United States (J.A. 264, 325-327, 1420-1421; Ex. 104).

In 1929, or shortly thereafter, the Communist International directed that Respondent form Port Bureaus at leading ports in this country. The purpose was to facilitate recruiting and organizational work on the waterfront on behalf of the CPUSA. The establishment of these bureaus was facilitated by funds furnished by the Communist International (J.A. 250-251, 407-409; Ex. 76).

In 1927, a representative of the Communist International requested that the CPUSA send a delegate to the International Miners Conference at Moscow. Respondent's Political Committee voted unanimously to reply that it would send a delegate but that funds for the delegate's fare should be cabled to the Respondent organization (J.A. 252, 1387; Ex. 77).

Amtorg is a trading corporation of the Soviet Union which was organized in the United States in 1924. From its inception until 1929, Amtorg rendered financial assistance to Respondent by: (a) paying excessive rates to Respondent publications for placing advertisements therein, and (b) making it possible for the Communist Party School of Business Relations to realize money from insurance and other activities (J.A. 238-239).

During the period from 1919 to 1934, members of the CPUSA were sent to other countries to assist in Communist Party activities there, in many instances under specific instructions from the Communist International; the Communist International financed these missions (Gitlow, J.A. 271-272; Kornfeder, J.A. 309-310, 330-333).

A member of Respondent organization, who was specializing in labor activities in the United States, was sent to the Soviet Union in 1934 to serve as a representative of the Trade Union Unity League at the Red International of Labor Unions at Moscow; the latter was a section of the Communist International. Funds for the trip were furnished by Jacob Golos, a representative of the Soviet Union in the United States. Subsistence while in Moscow was borne by the Red International of Labor Unions (J.A. 466-485).

In 1927, the International Red Aid sent Russian films to the United States, free of any charge. The films were delivered to the International Workers Aid. The CPUSA determined the distribution of profits realized from the showing of the films in the United States (J.A. 252, 1388; Ex. 77).

In the 1920's the Communist International sent a show troupe to the United States called the "Blue Blouses." This troupe operated under the auspices of the Workers International Relief. The funds realized from their tour in this country were distributed to various organizations by Respondent, including itself and the Daily Worker (J.A. 257, 1407-1408; Ex. 96).

During the years 1930 to 1934 the Communist International provided subsidies for Labor Unity, a labor magazine operated under the direction of the CPUSA (J.A. 487-489).

In 1939, the Treasurer of the CPUSA stated that it was impossible to put additional CPUSA funds into the Midwest Daily Record, a CPUSA controlled paper, because at that time communications to their sources of funds abroad, i.e., the Soviet Union, had been disrupted (J.A. 1123-1125, 1180-1182).

During the late 1930's, the Daily Worker received political news dispatches free from the Runag news service in Moscow. These dispatches were used by the editorial staff of the Daily Worker and, also, were distributed to the Party leadership for scrutiny and study. After the passage of the Foreign Agents Registration Act in 1938, these dispatches were sent to The Intercontinent News, a corporation which had been formed by the CPUSA in New York City to handle the service in a manner that to all appearances would be independent of the Daily Worker. This medium in turn relayed the dispatches to the Daily Worker at a nominal cost[1] (J.A. 656-657, 1168-1175, 1195-1199).

[1] This news service from Moscow ceased in 1944 when the Department of Justice ordered The Intercontinent News either to label its news material as

In or about 1949, Respondent, through International Publishers, received from the Soviet Union book plates and English translations of books, such as an edition of The Selected Works of Lenin, as well as actual page proofs for books, with no charge (J.A. 1035-1037).

After the passage of the Voorhis Act in 1940, with the consequent nominal disaffiliation of Respondent from the Communist International,[2] evidence of such financial aid does not appear in the record with one exception, this being the above instance of financial aid to Respondent in or about 1949.

Respondent denies that it receives financial aid from or at the direction of the Soviet Union or the Communist International; and denies the relevancy of the above findings to any issue in this proceeding.

We find a preponderance of the evidence in the record establishes numerous instances of substantial financial aid which flowed to Respondent from and at the direction of the Soviet Union and the Communist International; and we conclude that the above findings are relevant to the ultimate issue in this proceeding in the light of the whole record.

E. Training and Reporting

Sections 13(e)(4) and (5) of the Act provide that in determining whether or not an organization is a "Communist-action organization," the Board shall take into consideration:

> "(4) the extent to which it [Respondent] sends members or representatives to any foreign country for instruction or training in the principles, policies, strategy, or tactics of such world Communist movement; and
> "(5) the extent to which it [Respondent] reports to such foreign government or foreign organization or to its representatives; * * *" propaganda or to discontinue its service. Thereafter, the Bulletin of the Soviet Embassy was used as a news source. We have reviewed Respondent's Exhibits [i.e. C. P. Exs.] 70-75, incl., but we do not credit them for the purpose offered in view of the testimony of Petitioner's witness Budenz concerning them, which we accept. (J.A. 1169-1175, 1192).

[2] This is discussed fully hereinbefore.

The petition alleges inter alia:

> "The Communist Party regularly reports and has reported to the government and Communist Party of the Soviet Union and to the Communist International and the Communist Information Bureau, and has sent members and representatives to the Soviet Union and other foreign countries for instruction and training in the principles, policies, strategy, and tactics of the world Communist movement * * *."

Respondent denies the foregoing allegations of the petition, but states in its amended answer that during the period of its affiliation with the Communist International, members and representatives of Respondent attended and participated in Communist International Congresses and certain of its committees; that members of Respondent have from time to time visited foreign countries, including the Soviet Union; and that, in the past, certain members of Respondent studied in the Soviet Union (amended Answer, J.A. 163).

In its amended answer and again in its exceptions, Respondent denies the relevancy of any of these conceded facts to any issue in this proceeding. Upon consideration of the record, we do not agree with this contention.

The evidence pertaining to "training" and "reporting" is somewhat interwoven and we have, therefore, consolidated these subjects in this section of our report.

Since Respondent admits that its members have studied in the Soviet Union, that it has participated in meetings of the Communist International, and that it has sent representatives to the Soviet Union, it is unnecessary to set forth in this part of our report the considerable amount of detailed evidence establishing these points, except to the extent it may be necessary for an understanding of the findings under these criteria.

An elaborate world-embracing school system was established in Moscow for training Communists and preparing them for leadership roles in the world Communist movement. The Western University taught trainees from the semi-agrarian areas, such as the Balkan and Baltic countries; the Eastern University schooled trainees from the Asiatic countries, such as China, Siam, and Korea; the Academy of Red Professors was a training school for theoreticians for the world Communist movement; a special section of the Fronze Military Academy was devoted to training students sent from foreign countries; and the Lenin School took in trainees from the "more advanced" countries, such as Germany, France, England and the United States (J.A. 304-306). Petitioner's witness Honig was an American instructor at the Lenin School in 1934-35 where he taught labor subjects to a select group of Respondent's members. In the main, however, the school's instructors were Russians (J.A. 482-484).

To qualify for training in Moscow a CPUSA member had to be recommended by Respondent and approved by the Communist International, which had established as qualifications for selection that the student be less than 36 years of age, have 5 years of active Party work, and be above average in ability (J.A. 301-302).

Petitioner's witness Crouch, during the period 1928-1930, studied material at the Fronze Academy pertaining to civil war, guerrilla tactics, and sabotage (J.A. 404-405).

From 1928 to 1936, many of Respondent's outstanding members were sent to the Lenin School for varying periods where they received training and instructions in the strategy and tactics of the world Communist movement (J.A. 657-658; Exs. 78, 87). Among them were Hall,[1] (J.A. 787) Steve Nelson (J.A. 658), Irving Potash[1] (J.A. 366-368), Charles Krumbein (J.A. 1339), Joseph Kornfeder (J.A. 301-304), George Siskind (J.A. 815), Morris Childs (J.A. 693), Ray Hansborough (J.A. 693), Roddie Lester (J.A. 814), Admiral Kilpatrick (J.A. 787), Abraham Lewis (J.A. 787, 814), Margaret Unjus, Rudolph Baker (J.A. 1399), Sclar (J.A. 1399), Harry Haywood (J.A. 658), Odel Nowell (J.A. 658), Charles White (J.A. 658), Leonard Patterson (J.A. 658), Timothy Holmes (J.A. 658), William Patterson (J.A. 658), Hutch Hutchinson (J.A. 658), George Hewitt (J.A. 367), Sam Nessin (J.A. 367), Beatrice Siskin (J.A. 367-368), Philip Raymond (J.A. 367), John Marr (J.A. 367), William Brown (J.A. 367), Claude Lightfoot (J.A. 340), William Taylor (J.A. 746), Bill Kruse (J.A. 253) and Bell (Ex. 72, J.A. 1377). Many of the aforementioned persons held high positions in Respondent,[1] including Nowell and Kornfeder who testified for Petitioner in this proceeding.

The evidence establishes that in the early 1930's Respondent's students in the Lenin School were taught such subjects as Marxism, Leninism, the history of the labor movement, trade union and strike strategy, history of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, history and organizational structure of the Communist International, the national and colonial problem, including the concept of a Negro nation in the "black belt" of the United States;[2] the history of the CPUSA, international propaganda, the theory and practice of Soviet economy, revolutionary tactics and the science of civil warfare. These subjects at the school were adapted to the peculiar conditions in the countries of the students, including the United States. For instance, the course given Respondent's members on civil warfare included political and economic conditions in the United States, the culture of the people, the terrain, the histories of the United States and the CPUSA, and the degree of political maturity in the United States. Students in the course were taught also how to convert economic strikes into political strikes, and then into general strikes that might precipitate revolution. They also were taught how to disassemble and reassemble the guns and small arms of the major nations.

For the actual carrying out of the revolution, Red Army officers taught military details in both legal and guerrilla warfare, how to erect barricades, snipe, throw grenades, use gas masks, sabotage, take over the system of transportation, seize food supplies and persuade army units to fight with the insurgents and guerrillas. They were taught how to capture and hold hostages, capture arsenals, arm Communist supporters, utilize and destroy food and water supplies, and, in general, how to carry on a total revolution for the seizure of power. All this was taught with the object of destroying the economic system in the United States, and establishing a dictatorship of the proletariat here (J.A. 369-373, 387-389, 482-484).

Concerning strategy and tactics, students at the Lenin School were taught, among other things, that "partial demands", i.e., demands within the framework of democratic procedure dealing with limited grievances on everyday problems, served as a tactical means, "a cutting edge", for the Party in mobilizing for the long range objective of the general strategy, this being the overthrow of capitalist governments everywhere through proletarian revolution (J.A. 387-389). This tactic has been utilized constantly by Respondent in this country.

On the subject of "just" and "unjust" wars, the students were taught that any war in which the Soviet Union becomes involved is a "just" war for the Soviet Union, regardless of whether the Soviet Union is the aggressor or defender; that any war between a colony and its mother country is a "just" war for the colony; and conversely, any war against the Soviet Union, regardless of who is the aggressor, is "unjust" for the Soviet Union's adversary. In the event of war between two "imperialist powers" the students were taught to work for the destruction of both and thus leave to the Soviet Union a clear field for future conquest[1] (J.A. 389-390).

Concerning the ultimate aim of the Party regarding capitalist-imperialist nations, students were taught that the class struggle prevailed throughout the capitalist world; that internal contradictions within these states were becoming sharper; and that their international imperialist policies toward colonial peoples were becoming more oppressive. They were further taught that, in view of these political and economic conditions, it was the duty of the CPUSA, as a part of world Communism, to cultivate revolutionary movements in colonial countries; and, in striving for world socialism, to work for the overthrow and complete abolition of capitalist states and imperialism (J.A. 385-386).

In conformance with the foregoing, students from the United States were taught that the proletarian revolution was necessary and that it was their major duty to work under the leadership of the Communist International and Respondent for the overthrow of the United States Government (J.A. 384-387).

The texts used by Respondent's members at the Lenin School included Lenin's State and Revolution (Ex. 139); Left Wing Communism; Military Revolution; Imperialistic War; What Is To Be Done (Ex. 417); How It Is To Be Done; Imperialism (Ex. 140; J.A. 1518); Infantile Leftism (J.A. 484); a modern treatment of Lenin's works by Leontov entitled Leninism by Leontov; Stalin's Foundations of Leninism (Ex. 121; J.A. 1427-1443); and Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138; J.A. 1500-1517); Marx's Capital; the Communist Manifesto (Ex. 31; J.A. 1339-1342); Engel's Scientific Socialism; the Programme of The Communist International (Ex. 125; J.A. 1446-1472); the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International, including the 21 conditions for membership therein (Ex. 8; J.A. 1318-1332); a number of writings by Soviet authors concerning political policies and the economy of the Soviet Union; and other works (J.A. 384-387, 389).

The purpose of Lenin School instruction as explained by Earl Browder, then leader of Respondent, was to develop Party leaders and through them to raise the political and ideological level of the Party membership as required by the development and intensification of revolutionary situations developing in countries throughout the world, including the United States (J.A. 365-366).

In addition to the formal institutionalized schooling in the Soviet Union, many of Respondent's highest functionaries have received training through serving abroad in various positions of the international Communist organization. Honig, while functioning as CPUSA representative to the Red International of Labor Unions, was sent to various places in the Soviet Union to study Soviet operations and the activities of Soviet trade unions (J.A. 472-473). William Z. Foster,[1] Earl Browder,[2] Gilbert Greene,[3] Charles Ruthenberg, and Alexander Bittelman, functioned for various periods during the 1920's and early 1930's in Moscow as members of the Soviet-controlled Executive Committee of the Communist International. In addition to the aforementioned position, Foster also served on the Presidium of the Communist International and Green was a member of its Young Communist League Secretariat (Gitlow, J.A. 227-228; Johnson, J.A. 659; Kornfeder, J.A. 338-340). William F. Dunne served as an alternate member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International in the 1920's (Ex. 32, J.A. 1342). Bosse functioned in the Information Department of the Communist International in 1926 and 1927 (Ex. 72; J.A. 1377). In the early 1930's, Clarence Hathaway functioned as representative of Respondent to the Communist International and also served as a member of the Anglo-American Secretariat of the Communist International in Moscow (J.A. 377). Robert Minor succeeded Hathaway as Respondent's representative to the Communist International (J.A. 378). Other members who served as the Party's representatives in Moscow include Louis Farina, John Reed, Nicholas Horawich, Israel Amter, Louis Engdahl, Max Bedacht, Harrison George and H. M. Wicks (J.A. 271-272; Ex. 72, 98). Morris Childs was a member of the Lander Secretariat of the Comintern (J.A.

377). Harry Heywood served on the International Negro Bureau of the Communist International (J.A. 360).

The record establishes that following their return to the United States, members of Respondent who had been trained and indoctrinated in the Soviet Union taught in Respondent's schools, and put into practice, where circumstances permitted, that which they had learned in the Soviet Union (Kornfeder, J.A. 349, 351-352; Nowell, J.A. 371, 389; Crouch, J.A. 439-440).

There is no substantial evidence of record showing training of Respondent's members in the Soviet Union subsequent to the outbreak of World War II. However, it is established that the extensive foreign training set forth above is still being effectuated in this country by Respondent. This training was clearly a program initiated by the Soviet Union to indoctrinate while there outstanding workers and leaders of Respondent so as to have a cadre for imparting such training to Respondent's membership in the United States.

It is apparent that World War II, and what Respondent has termed the "political situation" in this country subsequent to the war, have made travel to Moscow to obtain such training inexpedient or impossible. It is reasonable to conclude that this foreign training is no longer imperative to the functioning of Respondent as a Marxist-Leninist Party because its outstanding members and leaders, having received Soviet indoctrination, are able to educate, similarly, students at Party schools in this country and to dispense their previous training through Respondent's publications and activities.

We find that Respondent has sent its members and representatives to the Soviet Union, at the latter's insistence and with its financial assistance,[1] for instruction and training in the principles, policies, strategy and tactics of the world Communist movement, as determined by the Soviet Union, for the purpose of adopting and effectuating such principles, policies, strategy and tactics in the United States, which it does.

[1] See findings under "Financial Aid", p. 163, supra.

There is considerable evidence of record that Respondent reports to the leadership of the world Communist movement, as we now establish.

In 1926 William Z. Foster and Alexander Bittelman were in Moscow and made a written report to the Communist International covering Respondent's activities during the year 1925 with reference to the economic and political situation in the United States, trade unions, Socialist Parties, Bolshevization of Respondent, Leninist education, United Front campaigns, Negroes, farmers, women, anti-imperialism and internal Party developments[1] (J.A. 243; Ex. 39, J.A. 1343-1350). The witness Gitlow went to Moscow in 1927, 1928 and 1929 to discuss similar matters with the Comintern officials (J.A. 216-217, 221-223). In 1929, Gitlow and other members of Respondent traveled to the Soviet Union to participate in a hearing held in Moscow by the Communist International to resolve the factional dispute then raging within Respondent. (The details of the settlement of this factional dispute are discussed infra, p. 187, supra, pp. 25-26).

Respondent's youth organization, the Young Workers League, was in continuous communication with the Young Communist International (J.A. 247-248). The witness Crouch visited Moscow in 1928, where he met with general staff officers of the Red Army and reported to them concerning activities designed to increase Communist infiltration in the American armed forces. He presented a tentative draft for future work, posed questions, and received answers and detailed directives (J.A. 400-405, 411-412; Ex. 147, J.A. 1543). Reports of Respondent's work on the Negro question, including the work of the Party-controlled American Negro Labor Congress, were sent in the 1920's to the Eastern Department of the Communist International, which then had jurisdiction over this phase of Respond-

[1] Their report also contains various statements as to Respondent's activities in carrying out "decisions" and "main lines of policy" dictated by the Communist International and, therefore, constitutes additional evidence to that reviewed in support of our finding and conclusion that Respondent acts pursuant to directives and to effectuate policies of the Soviet Union as covered supra at pp. 144 to 147.

ent's activities (J.A. 250; Ex. 69, J.A. 1370). The witness Nowell reported on behalf of Respondent in Moscow in 1930, on matters concerning the Trade Union Unity League (TUUL) in the United States (J.A. 354). During his stay in Moscow, Nowell received instructions in various aspects of the world Communist movement including the Negro question in the United States (J.A. 361-364).

The witness Honig went to Moscow in June 1934, and remained there until November 1935 as "referent" and official representative of the Trade Union Unity League and Respondent to the Red International of Labor Unions, a creature of the Communist International. Honig, representing Respondent, attended meetings of representatives from various Communist parties throughout the world that were held in Moscow not less than once a week. At these meetings, the representatives reported on the activities in which their parties were engaged among trade unions in their respective countries, and discussions based on their reports followed. Leaders of the Comintern were always present at these meetings and registered approval or disapproval of the work being carried out in the various countries; they also determined whether such work was being carried out according to the instructions of the Comintern and gave directions as to how it should be conducted (J.A. 466-473). Honig, while functioning in the Communist International's labor organization (RILU) in Moscow, received reports from Jack Stachel,[1] then acting head of the Trade Union Unity League, and Earl Browder, then head of Respondent, concerning the failure of the San Francisco general strike of 1934 (J.A. 506-507). Reports which Honig received at the Red International of Labor Unions were generally mimeographed or typed when not of a confidential nature and were sometimes sent through the mails. Confidential reports were taken to Moscow by American Party leaders and by Respondent's students going to the Soviet Union for training (J.A. 469-470, 474).

[1] Convicted in 1949 of conspiring to teach and advocate the overthrow of the United States Government.

Minutes of meetings of Respondent's Central Executive Committee and its Political Committee were sent to Moscow during the 1920's and 1930's. Reports also were sent by various departments of Respondent's national headquarters and by individual CPUSA leaders. As positions of leadership in Respondent could not be held without the approval of the Soviet Union, advancement in the Party depended in part upon the reflection of a member's work in these minutes and reports (J A. 232, 647-648, 658-659). In addition to the foregoing, the minutes of Respondent's Political Committee covering official actions of Respondent during the years 1925 to 1928 reflect many instances of reporting to the Communist International through representatives sent to Moscow and through other channels of communication (Exs. 58, 59, 60, 63, 65, 71, 72, 73, 75, 80, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 95, 97, 98).

The Information Department of the Communist International collected and digested for the Comintern's Executive Committee, all information sent from the American Party (Ex. 89, J.A. 1403). The Anglo American Secretariat of the Communist International received reports from the English speaking Communist Parties, including Respondent; and during witness Kornfeder's membership on this Secretariat in the period 1927 to 1930, he received reports and recommendations from Respondent concerning the situation then existing in the United Mine Workers Union (J.A. 308 310-313; see also: J.A. 256).

In 1932, Earl Browder reported to the Communist International on behalf of Respondent's Central Committee concerning economic developments in the United States as they related to the world situation at that time (J.A. 379-381, 1488-1489; Ex. 135).

It is reasonable to conclude that Respondent has reported more recently to the Soviet Union through representatives of the World Communist movement from evidence furnished by the witness Matusow. While he was state literature director of the New York State Labor Youth League, Matusow attended a meeting in the Fall of 1949 at which Lou Diskin (a member of the CPUSA) gave a report on a recent trip that he (Diskin) had taken to Budapest, Hungary, where he met with J. Peters[1] at a World Youth Festival. Diskin remained to report on and discuss the American youth movement of Respondent, and the American Communist Party movement generally, with officials of the World Federation of Democratic Youth, and with representatives of the Communist Information Bureau (Cominform) (J.A. 1031-1033). Elizabeth Gurley Flynn a member of Respondent's highest governing body and a witness for Respondent herein, visited France in 1945, 1949, and again in 1950, where she met with Communist Party leaders of other countries, including, in 1945, the Soviet Union. At the 1949 meeting, there was discussed the question of the "imperialist war" which the conferees claimed was being fomented by the United States, and they considered the steps to be taken and the role of Respondent with reference to this question (J.A. 1037-1038, 1277-1278, 1297, 1298).

The record discloses an instance where, by means unknown, the contents of an important letter written by William Z. Foster concerning Respondent's affairs were communicated to Jacques Duclos, General Secretary of the Communist Party of France and a former member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International (J.A. 1138-1139, 1302-1303, Ex. 208, pp. 660-661). The letter in question played a decisive part in Respondent's reconstitution in 1945, as elsewhere herein covered.[2] The record further shows that Respondent has reported its program and activities to the Soviet Union through representatives of the Communist International and other agents of the Soviet Union in the United States,[3] who exerted influence and control over the leadership and programs of Respondent.

In addition to Respondent's reporting in the aforementioned ways, the record establishes the existence of another form of reporting through the issuance and exchange of significant, detailed and timely information in the form of "greetings," which are generally reprinted in Communist publications.

This exchange of messages contained in "greetings" commenced early in Respondent's history. We will cite typical examples of the numerous "greetings" so exchanged. The following "resolutions were adopted at Respondent's convention in 1921 and sent to the Soviet Union:

"* * *

"2. Greetings to the Third World Congress of the Communist International.

"The delegates of the Communist Party of America and the United Communist Party of America, in joint Unity Convention, send fraternal greetings to the Third World Congress of the Communist International. In the name of the revolutionary proletariat of America, we affirm our determination to fight under the banner of the Communist International for the overthrow of the American imperialism and for the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship. Hail to the International Soviet Republic! Long live the Communist International!" (Ex. 13(a), J.A. 1335).

"3. Greetings to the Soviet Republic.

"* * *

"The unified party, the Communist Party of America, declares that it will render all possible assistance to the Russian Soviet Republic in its struggle against the counter-revolutionary bands of the world imperialism. The Communist Party of America declares that only by the overthrow of world imperialism will the safety and mastery of the Soviet Republic over its enemies be definitely assured. The Communist Party of America pledges itself to rally the revolutionary proletariat of America for the annihilation of the most formidable stronghold of world imperialism: the American capitalist state, and to struggle for the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship. Down with world imperialism! Hail to the universal Soviet Republic! Long live the international solidarity of the workers!" (Ex. 13(a)).

"4. To the Third World Congress of the Communist International.

"The Unity Convention of the Communist (sic) of America and the United Communist Party of America fully upholds and endorses the firm and uncompromising stand of the Executive Committee of the Communist International against the opportunistic and centrist elements in various countries—in Italy (Serrati), and in Germany (Levi). The convention instructs its delegates to the third world congress to uphold and defend the stand of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. * * * " (Ex. 13(a), J.A. 1336).

In September 1927, on the occasion of its Fifth Convention, Respondent received "greetings" from the Comintern that were read to the Convention by acting chairman Gitlow, after which the governing body of Respondent was instructed to draw up a reply. The Comintern "greetings", in part, follow:

"* * *

"In the country of the most powerful imperialism and a most brutal capitalist class the Communist Party can fulfill its duty and can become the leader of the working class against imperialism and capitalist aggression only if it is united and if it is not torn to pieces by factional struggle.

"The Comintern considers as one of the central tasks of the Party the extermination of all factionalism and the unification organizationally as well as ideologically. It will be the duty of the newly elected Central Executive Committee to lead the Party in a non-factional spirit and it will be the duty of the whole Party membership to rally around the Central Executive Committee which it itself shall have chosen. * * * " (Underscoring supplied) (Ex. 23, J.A. 1337).

This "greeting" elicited a response which Respondent openly declared to be a "reply" and in which it gave assurances to the Communist International that it would comply with what were, in effect, the directions contained in the Comintern "greeting". This reply is as follows:

"The Fifth Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party greets the International leader of the working class, the Communist International. Under its leadership and with our own firm and unanimous determination to unify our Party, we will overcome the tremendous difficulties in the path of building a mass Communist Party in America. The Convention recognizes fully as Party's task the winning of the American proletariat for the revolutionary struggle against American imperialism.

"In the execution of this task we are inspired and guided by the principles of Marxism and Leninism, by the experiences of the victorious struggles of the Russian proletariat and the heroic battles of the exploited and oppressed masses of Europe and Asia. The Convention and the incoming Central Executive Committee pledge themselves speedily to eliminate all remnants of factionalism and to unify the Party as a prerequisite for the further success of our work. (Underscoring supplied)

"We pledge the unification of our Party and to fight more effectively for the defense of the Soviet Union and the Chinese revolution and against the war danger as well as to resist more effectively the offensive of the capitalist reaction and the reactionary trade union bureaucracy against our Party and the militant section of the American working class. (Underscoring supplied)

"The Convention is spurred by a full consciousness of its duty to recruit the toiling masses of America for relentless struggle against American imperialism.

"Long Live the Soviet Union!

"Long Live the Communist International!

"Fifth National Convention.
"Workers (Communist) Party."
(Ex. 24; J.A. 1338).

On the occasion of the Sixth Convention of Respondent, in 1929, a "greeting" was sent to the Communist International in Moscow which contained the following:

"'We greet our Communist International leadership and pledge our Convention and our Party to prepare itself, to strengthen itself, to clarify itself, for its share of this task. It will close its ranks, it will cleanse its ideology from the poison of opportunism, it will defeat Trotskyism, it will mobilize against and lead the American proletariat for the struggle against the imperialist war; it will mobilize the American workers for the defense of our Soviet Union and for the final defeat of American imperialism by the revolutionary overthrow of American capitalist rule. (Emphasis supplied)

"Long Live Leninism!

"Long Live the Communist International!" (Ex. 28, J.A. 1339).

On December 21, 1949, the Daily Worker reprinted a telegram "greeting" sent by Respondent to Joseph Stalin on his 70th birthday which states, among other things:

"Like the Communists and other true partisans of peace, democracy and progress in all lands, we hail your more than 50 years of sterling leadership in the interest of the international working class and humanity.

* * *

"Under a Hitler-like anti-Soviet and anti-Communist smokescreen, the American imperialists launched their predatory and aggressive Truman Doctrine, Marshall Plan and North Atlantic Pact.

* * *

"Undaunted by the threats of the war instigators, the USSR steadfastly pursues its Stalinist peace policy and promotes cooperation with all who strive for peace. And the mighty world camp of peace, democracy and socialism headed by the Soviet Union, daily becomes more powerful and is destined to triumph.

* * *

"In our country, too, the organized peace forces, among the workers, the Negro people, men and women of science and culture, are growing and will continue to grow in unison with the peace forces of the world" (Ex. 375, J.A. 1706-1707).

After stating that the American people "favor acceptance" of Stalin's proposals for a "Pact of Peace, for demilitarization and democraticizing Germany and Japan, * * * outlawing the atom bomb", the telegram declares that the American people envy and admire the Soviet Union's peaceful harnessing of atomic energy and that they rejoice at the victory of the Chinese Communists and their bond with the Soviet Union. The so-called telegram "greeting" closes by saying:

> "With full confidence in the American working class and people, the Communist Party of the USA exerts every effort to assure that by their united action they will check and help defeat the fascist-minded monopolists and warmongers. As this united action grows in influence and scope, it will bring its full weight to bear for the achievement of an American-Soviet pact of peace and friendship—the cornerstone for world peace.
>
> "Long life to you, Comrade Stalin, and to your great and enduring contributions to world peace, democracy and Socialism." (Ex. 375; see also: J.A. 1707).

Petitioner's witness Lautner establishes that the primary significance of this "greeting" lies in Respondent's reaffirmation of loyalty to Stalin as the aeknowledged leader of the world Communist movement (J.A. 976).

That such "greetings" actually convey significant messages between members of the world Communist movement when the wording appears comparatively innocuous to the uninitiated is made clear by both testimonial and documentary evidence of record. The following quotation from the August 1, 1948 issue of For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy (Ex. 264), official organ of the Communist Information Bureau, demonstrates the significance given to a simple statement of solicitude by Stalin:

> "Comrade Stalin's telegram to the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Italy said: 'The Central Committees of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) is grieved that Comrade Togliatti's friends failed to protect him from this foul and cowardly attack'.
>
> "The reply sent by the Central Committee of the Italian Communist Party to Comrade Stalin is worthy of this well-tested Party. In their answer the Italian comrades assure Comrade Stalin that the solidarity of the heroic Soviet people and Stalin's warning about vigilance will be for the Italian Communists 'a spur to strengthen and develop the struggle of the united international front of peace, democracy and socialism'.

"All the Communist Parties took Comrade Stalin's message to the Italian Communist Party as the expression of his great solicitude for the international working class movement and its leaders.

"Increased struggle against remnants and revivals of fascism, the welding of all supporters of democracy and progress into a single socialist camp will be the best answer of the Communists of all countries to Comrade Stalin's solicitude." (Emphasis supplied) Ex. 264, J.A. 1594-1595).

To show further the significance attached by the initiated to these "greetings", Lautner explains in this light the import of "greetings" received by Respondent at its 15th Convention in December 1950 from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (CPSU), which follows:

"The Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union extends fraternal greetings to the 15th Convention of the Communist Party of the U.S.A. We wish the Communist Party of the U.S.A. successes in its struggle against reaction, for the vital interests and rights of the working class and all toilers of the United States of America, for the ideological strengthening of the Party ranks, for lasting peace between the peoples.

"May the international solidarity of the toilers in the struggle for peace, democracy and Socialism gather strength. (Emphasis supplied)

"Long live the friendship between the peoples of the United States and of the Soviet Union!

"Long live the Communist Party of the United States!

"CENTRAL COMMITTEE
"Communist Party of the Soviet Union"
(Ex. 376, p. 229, J.A. 1714).

Lautner, from his experience as a former high official of Respondent (until January 1950) and as a student of Marxism-Leninism, establishes that this greeting from the CPSU was a political document of the highest importance to Party members since in a concise way it raised all the key problems confronting Respondent. Specifically he interpreted some of the various terms used by the CPSU as follows: "struggle against reaction" as basic Marxist-Leninist opposition to imperialism and monopoly capitalism, i.e., the basic line of the Party; "struggle for peace, democracy and socialism" as the new tactical approach since the end of World War II on which a new tactical united front is to be built; "ideological strengthening of the Party ranks" as a reference which the Soviet Party used to call the attention of the rank and file Party members to the "Browderite" disaffection and other opportunist deviations (J.A. 994-995).

It is reasonable to conclude, and we do so, that the language used by Respondent in its "greetings" to the Soviet Union is likewise possessed of veiled content through which Respondent reports in this manner to the Soviet Union.

Respondent's witnesses deny categorically that Respondent reports or has reported to the Soviet Union or its representatives (J.A. 1215-1216, 1250-1252, 1289-1291). The clear weight of the evidence is to the contrary.

Upon the basis of the foregoing and the entire record, we conclude and find that Respondent reports to the Soviet Union and its representatives.

F. Disciplinary Power

Section 13(e)(6) of the Act provides that the Board shall take into consideration:

> "the extent to which its [Respondent's] principal leaders or a substantial number of its [Respondent's] members are subject to or recognize the disciplinary power of such foreign government or foreign organization or its representatives;"

The petition alleges:

> "From the inception of the organization to the date of the filing of this petition, the principal leaders of the Communist Party have been and are subject to and recognize the disciplinary power of the Soviet Government, the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Communist International and the Communist Information Bureau and other spokesmen of the world Communist movement. This power has been exercised principally through the Communist doctrine of 'democratic centralism' which binds all Communists to execute the decisions of the leaders of the world Communist movement.''

Respondent's witness Gates says the leaders of the Party do not recognize and do not consider themselves subject to the disciplinary power of the Soviet government, the CPSU, the Comintern, the Cominform or any agencies of these organizations. He stresses that Respondent's leaders are subject only to the discipline of the Party (J.A. 1223-1224). He maintains the leaders of Respondent do not recognize any disciplinary power over them by the Soviet Union any more than the fact that he loves his wife indicates that she has disciplinary power over him (J.A. 1255-1257).

On the other hand, the record shows that under the rules and conditions governing the world Communist movement as promulgated by the Soviet Union and accepted and followed by Respondent there is prescribed a party of iron discipline on an international as well as a national scale.[1] This "iron discipline" borders on "military discipline" and implies "the establishment of authority, the transformation of the power of ideas into the power of authority, the subordination of lower Party bodies to higher Party bodies" (Ex. 121, pp. 113 and 114, 120; J.A. 1427-1443).

The requirements of discipline in the world Communist movement as formulated by the Soviet Union are, as previously noted, two-fold. First, on an international scale the decisions of the leadership of the movement—the Soviet Union—are made binding and obligatory upon the various Communist Parties and their members through the concept of democratic centralism and through policies and rules issued by organizational instrumentalities such as the Communist International, and the various Parties as well as their members are prohibited from any deviation from the line laid down by the Soviet Union. Secondly, the individual parties are required to maintain similar discipline within their own organizations and to guard against factionalism or division of authority in the Party—to purge themselves of dissident elements.[1]

The record shows that the principle of strict international discipline in the world Communist movement is basic and has for its purpose unity in the struggle against imperialism, in order that the "revolutionary work and revolutionary action may be coordinated" and "guided most successfully" (Ex. 125, p. 84, J.A. 1446-1472). In other words, it is a fundamental of the world Communist movement that in order to accomplish the establishment of dictatorships of the proletariat and the defense of the Soviet Union there must exist in every country a "compact Communist Party, hardened in the struggle, disciplined, centralized, and closely linked up with the masses." (Ex. 125, p. 75; J.A. 1446-1472).[2]

We proceed, in the light of the foregoing, to examine the evidence concerning Respondent's recognition and acceptance of the disciplinary requirements of the world Communist movemnt as laid down by the Soviet Union.

One of Respondent's present top leaders, Bittelman, in his pamphlet "The Communist Party In Action," published in 1932, says:

> "* * * But our World Communist movement always presented an iron front against any such weakening of international discipline, fighting for the Leninist principle that the Communist Party is a monolithic and homogeneous body of revolutionary workers functioning as the vanguard of the working class." (Ex. 144, pp. 34-35; J.A. 1530)

[1] See, for example, Exs. 8 and 125; J.A. 1318-1332, 1446-1472.

[2] This principle was a requirement of the Communist International and is also stated in Strategy and Tactics of the Proletarian Revolution (Ex. 343, p. 62; J.A. 1647-1659) which was used and referred to many times by Respondent during the seven years ending in 1949 that Petitioner's witness Philbrick was a member and held official position in Respondent.

Speaking of deviations from theory and policy as well as in the daily practical work, the article observes:

> "* * * We observe, however, among certain Party members, a tendency to be easy-going, tolerant and conciliatory towards opportunist deviations. This is a dangerous attitude which is very harmful to the interests of the working class and to the growth of our Party. It is this attitude that Comrade Stalin attacked so sharply, branding it as 'rotten liberalism' and calling upon every communist to demonstrate in practice in his everyday revolutionary work true Bolshevik intolerance of an irreconcilability with all opportunist deviations from the Leninist line." (ibid. p. 48, J.A. 1533).

In 1934, Respondent defined the executive committee of the Communist International as "the general staff of the world revolutionary movement giving unity and leadership to the Communist Parties of the world." (Ex. 136, p. 18, J.A. 1490). Respondent's Manual on Organization, issued in 1935, notes that Communists attach "so much importance" to discipline because "without discipline there is no unity of will, no unity of action." (Ex. 145, p. 28, J.A. 1537). Henry Winston, a present top leader of Respondent, told the 14th National Convention of the Party in 1948 that:

> "* * * We do not shrink from the hammer blows of reaction. Under them we will steel our Party in Communist discipline, loyalty and unity, develop its Marxist-Leninist understanding, and temper our cadres and leadership * * * " (Ex. 418, p. 856, J.A. 1742-1743).

The foregoing is indicative of a continued recognition and acceptance by Respondent of iron discipline in the world Communist movement, particularly when viewed in the light of the facts set forth in the section of this report covering Respondent's operation pursuant to directives of the Soviet Union and to effectuate the policies of the Soviet Union and to effectuate the policies of the Soviet Union in the world Communist movement.

Particularly significant of the operation and enforcement of discipline by the Soviet Union in the world Communist movement and of Respondent's recognition of this discipline and subjection to it, is the evidence concerning the requirement that the Communist Parties and their members "follow the line" laid down by the Soviet Union. Those who do not follow the line are branded as "opportunists", "revisionists", "factionalists", "renegades", "stool-pigeons", etc., and are purged from the Party.

We have previously herein noted Respondent's present use of such Marxist-Leninist material as the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, J.A. 1613-1632) and a pamphlet entitled: "Resolutions—Seventh Congress of the Communist International[1] —Including The Closing Speech of G. Dimitroff" (Ex. 137, J.A. 1943-1948). The following excerpts from these documents show what Respondent is teaching its members and is practicing as well, concerning the necessity to "follow the line."

In the History it is stated:

> "The History of the Party further teaches us that unless the Party of the working class wages an uncompromising struggle against the opportunists within its own ranks, unless it smashes the capitulators in its own midst, it cannot preserve unity and discipline within its ranks, it cannot perform its role of organizer and leader of the proletarian revolution, nor its role as the builder of the new, Socialist Society." (Ex. 330, p. 359, J.A. 1631-1632)

And Dimitroff's speech as contained in the aforementioned document says in part (J.A. 1494-1495):

> "Championing, as we do, working class unity, we shall with so much the more energy and irreconcilability fight for unity within our Parties. There can be no room in our Parties for factions, or for attempts at factionalism. Whoever will try to break up the iron unity of our ranks by any kind of factionalism will get to feel what is meant by the Bolshevik discipline that Lenin and Stalin have always taught us. (Ap- plause.) Let this be a warning to those few elements in individual Parties who think that they can take advantage of the difficulties of their Party, the wounds of defeat or the blows of the raging enemy, to carry out their factional plans, to further their own group interests. (Applause.) The Party is above every thing else! (Loud applause). To guard against the Bolshevik unity of the Party as the apple of one's eye is the first and highest law of Bolshevism!" (Emphasized in text. Ex. 137, p. 13).

Respondent's Manual On Organization, to which we have referred in various places in this report, points out that basic principles and decisions, such as the necessity for the proletarian dictatorship, the correctness of the line "laid down" by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, and, the necessity for the forceful overthrow of capitalism, cannot be questioned (Ex. 145, p. 26, J.A. 1537). Respondent's publication The Way Out covering its 8th Convention held in 1934, says "Renegades are those who were formerly members of the Communist Party but were expelled from it for failure to follow the correct revolutionary line and who now fight against the revolutionary movement and against the Soviet Union" (Ex. 136, p. 17, J.A. 1490). John Gates, one of Respondent's present leaders and a witness for Respondent in this proceeding, told the 15th Convention held in 1950 that the struggle of "the renegades from Marxism against the Communist Party inevitably and logically leads to struggle against the Soviet Union and to becoming outright agents of the imperialist bourgeoisie", and that the Party needs "to be alert to the danger of factionalism" (Ex. 376, pp. 79 and 86, J.A. 1710). Also pertinent are Respondent's Discussion Outline for Lenin Campaign, issued in 1929 (Ex. 108, J.A. 1422), of which a considerable portion is devoted to discipline; and Respondent's publication Why Every Worker Should Join The Communist Party, issued in the mid-1930's (Ex. 143, J.A. 1523-1525).

We treat now with specific incidents of record related to the purging of those who have not "followed the line". The record shows that from the beginning of Respondent's existence in the United States, the Soviet Union has exercised disciplinary power to enforce adherence to the revolutionary line. We have hereinbefore noted the foreign direction concerning the settlement of the factional dispute in Respondent in 1929 whereby, under Comintern "authority and wisdom",[1] the Party was purged of factional elements and opportunists pursuant to Stalin's solution, in which he said:

> "* * * And when a revolutionary crisis develops in America, that will be the beginning of the end of world capitalism as a whole * * * For that end the American Communist Party must be improved and bolshevized. For that end we must work for the complete liquidation of factionalism and deviations in the Party * * *"[2]

Stalin's speeches before the Comintern on the settlement of the aforementioned factional dispute, which speeches were subsequently published in Respondent's official organ,[3] refer to the conduct of Respondent's members who questioned the decisions of the Executive Committee of the Communist International as "insubordination" and apply the term "enemies of the working class" to the factional group. We find on the record that this expression covers so-called renegades, revisionists, reformers, opportunists, etc., and that the expression and words it covers are current in Communist use to denote one who deviates or does not follow the correct revolutionary line.

The record shows that Trotsky who was expelled from the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and Lovestone who was expelled from the CPUSA[4] became descriptive of [4] Respondent's official declaration on the expulsion of Lovestone, Gitlow and others who had refused to be bound by certain demands of the Comintern in 1929 calls their conduct "unprecedented warfare against the Party", and states that "any association with the expelled, any support given them is incompatible with the duties of membership in the Party." (Ex. 117, p. 2, J.A. 1425-1427).

"enemies of the working class" who must be purged. We consider it significant, therefore, that Respondent's constitution as amended in 1942 provided[1] (J.A. 1611):

> "No Party member shall have personal or political relationship with confirmed Trotskyites, Lovestoneites, or other known enemies of the Party and of the working class" (Ex. 328).

And that the present constitution provides (J.A. 1705):

> "Personal or political relations with enemies of the working class and nation are incompatible with membership in the Communist Party" (Ex. 374).

We have noted in other sections of this report that Paul Crouch, an early official of Respondent, was denied election in 1929 to the position of national secretary of the Young Communist League because of his previous support of Lovestone and upon instructions from Moscow. We have also noted that Nowell, while a student from Respondent to the Lenin School in Moscow, was disciplined by the Communist International for disagreeing with the policy on the "Negro question" (R. 4450), and that Kornfeder was expelled in 1934 for failure to heed the instructions of a Soviet Union representative in the United States (J.A. 322-325). Petitioner's witness Johnson was expelled by Respondent in 1940 for having exhibited opportunistic tendencies, and all members were warned not to have anything to do with him (J.A. 668-669, 1601; Ex. 294).

In many respects the reconstitution of Respondent under the name Communist Party in 1945, after having existed for about 13 months as the Communist Political Association, is similar to the 1929 settlement of the factional dispute which existed at that time. We have previously herein noted the foreign participation in the 1945 reconstitution and in the 1929 factional settlement. With respect to the 1945 episode, William Foster reported to the convention

[1] We note that although Respondent had previously announced "disaffiliation" from the Comintern, its constitution as amended in 1942 included the Comintern, together with Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin as the enunciators of the principles according to which Respondent seeks to establish "socialism".

that the only way he could have gotten his letter to the membership, which letter opposed the formation of Respondent under the name Communist Political Association, was by facing expulsion, and that since his letter would have caused disunity, anyone who attempted to discuss it would have been denounced as a Trotskyite by Browder (Ex. 378). Following the reconstitution in 1945, Earl Browder was expelled as a "revisionist" for seeking to abandon basic Marxism-Leninism principles and for opposing the re-emphasis thereof which was part of the 1945 reconstitution following the Duclos and Manuilsky pronouncements (J.A. 1136-1151; Ex. 208, J.A. 1574-1575; Ex. 372, J.A. 1692-1694).

In 1950, Lautner, without advance warning, was subjected to a severe inquisition by officials of Respondent and forced to sign a statement that he was a spy and agent in the ranks of the Communist Party and had received a fair hearing. He was not, and had not been, a spy or agent. His efforts to get a hearing or review by Respondent's National Review Commission were ignored. His only notice or information about his expulsion came from an article in the Daily Worker stating that he was expelled as a "traitor and enemy of the working class" (J.A. 882-888; Ex. 361, J.A. 1671-1672). Indicative of the disciplinary program in the world Communist movement is the fact that the notice of Lautner's expulsion from the CPUSA was printed in the Cominform journal For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy, and that the same issue contained a similar notice as to the expulsion of a member from the Communist Party of Italy, both under the heading "Rooting Out Traitors from the Ranks of the Communist Part s" (Ex. 362, J.A. 1672-1673). Also in this connection, the record shows that in 1948 the Communist Information Bureau adopted a resolution that the leaders of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia were pursuing an unfriendly policy toward the Soviet Union and the CPSU (B), that this anti-Soviet attitude was incompatible with Marxism-Leninism, and that the Yugoslavia Party had failed to accept the criticism and measures set forth by the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The resolution suggests the Yugoslavia Party leaders be replaced if they did not "recognize their mistakes" and rectify them. This resolution was printed in the August 1948 issue of Political Affairs (Ex. 344, J.A. 1659-1663) and was discussed in meetings of Respondent's groups. It was printed by Foster and Dennis (J.A. 778-780). In 1949, the Cominform adopted another resolution concerning Tito and other leaders of the Yugoslav Party which brands them as "enemies of the working class" for becoming agents of "Anglo-American imperialism", conducting a "campaign of slander and provocation against the Soviet Union," and being disloyal to the principles of Marxism-Leninism. This resolution states the struggle against the Tito clique is the international duty of all Communist [redacted] Workers' Parties (Ex. 258, J.A. 1592-1594).

Finally, with respect to specific instances of discipline, in 1951 one Warwick Thompkins was expelled by Respondent for trying to organize Communist members to support in the distribution of leaflets containing "slanderous" remarks about the Soviet Union (J.A. 1090-1091).

In addition to the foregoing, we have also taken into consideration in connection with Respondent's recognition of and subjection to the disciplinary power of the Soviet Union, the facts elsewhere herein set forth concerning Respondent's following of the concept of democratic-centralism, the nature of the Daily Worker, and the activities of foreign Communist representatives sent to supervise Respondent. Regarding this latter aspect, the record shows that some of the foreign representatives or agents sent to the United States have been members of the Soviet secret police who instructed Respondent on underground and espionage work (J.A. 236-238 240-241, 433-435). Petitioner's witnesses Gitlow, and later, Budenz, knew and dealt with Jacob Golos as a resident agent of the Soviet secret police (J.A. 263, 1163-1166). Elizabeth Bentley was designated by Golos as a trusted go-between in his relations with Budenz (J.A. 1165-1166).

Further, the record shows that Communists who took the three-year training course in Moscow, and were considered qualified, were sent as representatives or instructors into other countries. Petitioner's witness Kornfeder after completing training in Moscow as a member of Respondent was sent in 1930 to South America to reorganize the badly functioning Party in Colombia and to organize an underground Party in Venezuela (J.A. 308-311). Kornfeder identifies Charles Crumbein and Rudolph Baker as other United States Communists who were sent as representatives outside of the United States. While in Moscow before going to South America, Kornfeder had daily meetings with Palmiro Togliatti[1] who briefed him on South American policies (J.A. 309-310).

Earl Browder, high official of Respondent until his purge following Respondent's reconstitution in 1945 as above noted, came back to the United States as an official of Respondent in 1929 as part of the settlement of the factional dispute. He was first summoned to Moscow from a position as Soviet representative in Shanghai, China, and after being instructed as to what was required of him, was assigned as General Secretary of Respondent (J.A. 311-314). Other members of Respondent are identified in the record as receiving foreign assignments on instructions of the Communist International (e.g., J.A. 314-315).

Summarizing, we find that the Soviet Union has established a requirement of iron discipline throughout the world Communist movement which imposes upon the Communist Parties and their members in the various countries the duty of following with unquestioned devotion the line laid down by the Soviet Union; that Respondent herein has recognized and accepted the requirement of iron discipline, has not repudiated it and has acted in accordance therewith; that officers and members of Respondent have been expelled by Respondent upon instructions from the Soviet Union; that [1] Presently leader of the Italian Communist Party and at the time he instructed Kornfeder, head of the Latin American Secretariat of the Communist International.

Respondent has subjected itself to Soviet discipline by expelling officers and members for failure to follow the line laid down by the Soviet Union, or for conduct of the type prescribed by the Soviet Union such as so-called revisionism and opportunism; and that Respondent has followed policies and activities designed to carry out the disciplinary policies of the Soviet Union.

Upon consideration of the foregoing and of the entire record, we find and conclude that Respondent's principal leaders and a substantial number of its members are subject to and recognize the disciplinary power of the Soviet Union and its representatives, and that by its recognition and subjection to the disciplinary power of the Soviet Union, Respondent seeks to advance the objectives of the world Communist movement.

G. Secret Practices

Section 13(e)(7) of the Act provides that the Board shall take into consideration:

> "the extent to which, for the purpose of concealing foreign direction, domination, or control, or of expediting or promoting its objectives, (i) it [Respondent] fails to disclose or resists efforts to obtain information as to, its membership (by keeping membership lists in code, by instructing members to refuse to acknowledge membership, or by any other method); (ii) its [Respondent's] members refuse to acknowledge membership therein; (iii) it [Respondent] fails to disclose, or resists efforts to obtain information as to, records other than membership lists; (iv) its [Respondent's] meetings are secret; and (v) it [Respondent] otherwise operates on a secret basis;"

The petition alleges:

> "For the purpose of expediting and promoting its objectives and concealing its foreign direction, domination and control, the Communist Party from its inception has adopted a multitude of clandestine practices. While the degree of secrecy has varied from time to time, there has been a strict adherence to the practice of secrecy during the period from July 1945, to the time of the filing of this petition. * * *"

The petition further sets out 12 specific types of such practices allegedly engaged in by Respondent. For convenience, the evidence relating to these and other activities is set forth in this section under appropriate head notes which in the main correspond to the aforementioned alleged practices. Evidence relating specifically to the purpose for which the subject activities were undertaken, aside from that of the nature and character of the acts and practices themselves, is summarized under the heading Purpose of Secret Practices at the end of this section.

1. Secret and Open Members

It is conceded by Respondent (Gates, J.A. 1254-1255) and the evidence establishes that some portion of its membership was and is concealed. Party members active as labor union leaders, mass organization leaders, members of professions, and others have concealed their party membership from the general public or from the organizations in which they worked or in which they were members. The degree of concealment varies with Respondent's current policy regarding its activities (Honig, J.A. 493-495; Meyer, J.A. 694-700; Blanc, J.A. 787-791; Cummings, J.A. 815-817; Philbrick, J.A. 762-764; Lautner, J.A. 900-905; Budenz, J.A. 1115-1117).

A higher degree of secrecy generally applied to members of the Respondent who were important civil servants, members of the armed forces, teachers and those individuals engaged in espionage and other illegal and confidential activities for the CPUSA or the Soviet Union. Such members were known only to the leading officials of Respondent or to a limited number of the members thereof (J.A. 220-221, 245-246, 273-276, 416-417, 434-435, 493-495, 694-695, 770-771, 790-791, 815-817, 963-965, 1079-1080, 1108-1110, Exs. 340, 341).

Open members of the CPUSA have been those who by reason of their position in the Party or because of the type of their operations need not be concealed. For the most part, these were the national, state and district officials of the CPUSA or candidates for public office on the Communist Party ballot (J.A. 695, 790-791 815-818).

New members upon entering tl. CPUSA were instructed generally not to reveal their Party membership. In 1928, members of the staff of the Daily Worker were instructed to deny their CPUSA membership in the event of a police raid. Similar instructions were given to Party members attending CPUSA schools in 1932. Party members in trade unions were ordered in 1948 not to reveal their CPUSA membership (J.A. 491-497, 661-662, 791-792, 818-819).

It is thus that Respondent engages in the practice of maintaining a membership of both concealed and open members.

2. Refusal to Reveal Information

Respondent's organ, the Daily Worker for February 17, 1930, stated:

> "It is the duty of Communists to throw every possible obstacle in the way of conviction of their fellow Party members in the courts, to defend these members by all possible means, and absolutely to refuse to give testimony for the state in any form. Testimony of Communists can only be given for the defense of Communists, not for the state, and then it must be based upon uncompromising defense of the Party and its program. And any one who trades his testimony to the State for personal immunity from prosecution, should be unhesitatingly kicked out of the movement" (Ex. 496, J.A. 1798).

CPUSA members were taught in Respondent's schools and at meetings during the late 1930's and early 1940's that the moral basis of all acts by a Communist is the determination of whether such acts do or do not help in the achievement of the victory of the classless society; that no oath, or statement in court, or consideration of any kind can take precedence over the question of whether or not his act helps or harms the CPUSA (J.A. 701-702). The record discloses a number of other instances, wherein CPUSA members, several of whom testified for Petitioner in this proceeding, were instructed while members to deny their Party membership in the courts and to government agencies, e.g., to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in connection with the Loyalty Program of the Federal Government (J.A. 495-496, 662, 667-668, 695, 739-740, 755, 793-796, 818-819). Respondent has instructed its members to refuse to talk to FBI agents (J.A. 1087-1088). In answer to a question in this proceeding as to the whereabouts of certain members of the CPUSA National Committee, who are fugitives from justice, the Respondent's witness Gates stated, "if I knew, I wouldn't tell you in a million years" (J.A. 1246).

The CPUSA, in the early 1940's, caused documents to be filed with the Department of State which stated that the Intercontinent News Agency was an independent agent, when, in fact, it was formed by the Respondent for the purpose of circumventing the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 (J.A. 1193-1196; CP Exs. 70 through 75).

Plans were discussed by Party leaders together with agents of the Soviet Secret Police in 1928, whereby blank American passports might in some manner be obtained illegally from the Department of State (J.A. 434-435). CPUSA members (Kornfeder, Honig and Arbona) have used detached visas which were issued by Soviet Union sources here and abroad in 1927 and 1934, as a device to conceal from agencies of the United States Government visits to the Soviet Union (J.A. 302-303, 467-468). In 1937, Respondent's witness Gates did not list Spain as one of the countries to be visited when he applied for an American passport, since the United States Government did not issue passports for travel to Spain at that time; actually, it was his purpose to go to Spain and he did so (Gates, J.A. 1200). In 1949, Eugene Cubues Arbona, head of the Communist Party youth movement of Puerto Rico, in collaboration with members of Respondent, submitted to the Department of State an application for a passport which falsified the answers to questions concerning the countries to be visited abroad, and other matters. At that time, CPUSA members assisted this official in making arrangements to obtain a detached visa in France in order to visit Hungary, thereby concealing knowledge of the Hungarian destination from the United States Government (J.A. 1051-1053).

Hence it is clear that members of Respondent are trained to and do refuse to reveal information to proper governmental agencies and tribunals concerning Respondent and its membership as a matter of basic Party policy.

3. Destruction and Secretion of Records

In periods of strict secrecy, the Party has issued directives to destroy records and such literature as would identify members with Respondent. Such orders were issued throughout the period of the Hitler-Stalin Pact from 1939-1941 and also during the period from 1946-1951. During the latter period, records in CPUSA headquarters were burned by Party leaders while the individual members were instructed to burn Party lists and literature kept in their homes (J.A. 741, 763, 1019-1020, 1026-1027, 1069-1071). During the 1946 Congressional campaign, a CPUSA member, Herbert A. Philbrick, was instructed to destroy his Party membership card for security reasons while participating in the campaign of a non-Communist candidate for public office (J.A. 763). Pursuant to the orders of CPUSA officials, Party membership books were destroyed in 1947 and membership cards were destroyed in 1948 (J.A. 798-802, 823-828). In 1949, a system was established at New York county headquarters of Respondent whereby all messages containing names, addresses and phone numbers were to be burned as soon as read. This system was still in effect in January 1951 (J.A. 1026-1027).

In addition to the steps taken to destroy records and other material during the aforementioned periods, Respondent adopted the practice of keeping no records which would divulge information concerning its members and activities. In situations where it was thought absolutely necessary to keep records, however, secret devices such as charts and code systems have been used. Records have been kept at a minimum by such varied practices as engaging in cash financial transactions, issuing oral directives without ever reducing them to writing, and requiring club leaders of Respondent to memorize the names of members of their respective clubs (J.A. 696-698, 736-737, 799-800, 890-891, 1011-1012, 1016-1017, 1068-1070). In 1949, instructions were given to a club official of Respondent, which he followed, that dues and "sustainers" were not to be collected from any member in the presence of other members (J.A. 1067-1068).

CPUSA membership cards are not issued when the Party operates under conditions of strict secrecy. In this connection, no membership cards were issued to members for one of the years during the Hitler-Stalin Pact period from 1939-1941 because Respondent believed it would have to go underground, i.e., operate completely clandestinely. Membership cards have not been issued for the years 1949 to date as a security measure to conceal the identity of CPUSA members (J.A. 697-698, 740-741, 1000, 1069-1071, 1086-1087).

Records of the CPUSA pertaining to its membership and other affairs have been maintained secretly (J.A. 699, 800). The Party has selected carefully concealed places in which to hide its records. Such hiding places have consisted of homes and business offices of secret or concealed members of the Party or of other persons who would be least suspected of being identified with the CPUSA (J.A. 661-662, 820-822, 1000-1001, 1010-1011, 1019-1020, 1024-1027).

Thus, during periods of strict secrecy Respondent has engaged in the practice of destroying or secreting records, and of not maintaining membership records, or of maintaining them in code.

4. Deceptive Language in Party Writings

The CPUSA, as recommended by Lenin, has used deceptive language in its Constitution (Pet. Exs. 328, 329, 374) and other writings to conceal the real aims, purposes and objectives of the Party. A decisive clause in the preamble to the CPUSA Constitution of 1942, viz., "* * * by the establishment of socialism, according to the scientific principles enunciated by the greatest teachers of mankind, Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin, embodied in the Communist International * * *" was taught in Party schools as equivalent to the statement, "in accordance with the principles of Marxism-Leninism," as defined hereinbefore. Notwithstanding any other language to be found in other sections of the preamble, this clause controls the interpretation which CPUSA members place upon the Constitution (Ex. 328; J.A. 729, 730-733). Similarly, statements in the preambles of the 1945 and 1948 Constitutions of the CPUSA to the effect that Respondent's functions are founded "upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism" cannot be reconciled with subsequent statements which refer to the Constitution of the United States. These direct and implied references to Marxism-Leninism control the interpretation which Communists must place upon the subject matter found in the Party Constitution. Such reference to Marxism-Leninism is intended to override any other matter contained therein which may be conflicting in any manner. Marxism-Leninism is defined fully elsewhere in this report[1] (J.A. 975-976, 979, 1053-1055,1152-1155; Ex. 374, J.A. 1695-1706).

Deceptive language has been used in other statements and documents of Respondent for the purpose of concealing its true aims purposes and objectives (R. 14266-14362). Lenin explained the necessity for the use of such language in Imperialism, the Highest Stage of Capitalism (Ex. 140; J.A. 1518-1520). During the period 1935-1945 the witness Budenz used such language in his writings as a staff member of the Midwest Daily Record and of the Daily Worker (R. 14325-14327).

That Respondent uses deceptive language, even in the most basic Party documents, such as Constitutions, to conceal its real objectives is established in the record.

5. Use of Party Names, Aliases, etc.

By direction of Respondent, Party names or aliases were used by its members in 1927 and 1934 on American passports, which had been obtained illegally in order to conceal from the United States governmental agencies the knowledge that trips were being or had been made to the Soviet Union (J.A. 220-222, 302-303). By similar direction, CPUSA leaders have at other times, for the same reason, used false names in connection with their trips to the Soviet Union as have Respondent's students en route to the Lenin School at Moscow. Pursuant to instructions from CPUSA leaders, the students were not to use their real names while on board ship but were to conceal their identity and destination (J.A. 367-368, 491-492). Also, Respondent's leaders and members, acting on instructions, have used Party names or aliases to conceal their activities on behalf of the CPUSA in labor circles and in other organizations, as well as in the conduct of strikes and labor disputes (J.A. 493-496). Concealment of Party membership from law enforcement agencies, by the use of Party names, has been practiced by Respondent's members throughout the existence of the Party (J.A. 783-784, 801-802, 828-829, 1254-1255). False or Party names have been used on CPUSA membership cards at various times. In the 1930's, Respondent's leaders were instructed to use Party names in order to conceal their identity in the event of police raids (J.A. 662-663). In the years immediately following the conclusion of World War II, membership books were issued in blank. Party members were directed to enter a false name or, in some instances, were given the option of entering a false name, of entering only their first name, or of entering no name at all on the books (J.A. 740-741, 762-763, 869).

The rigidity of the concealment measures which commenced in the late 1940's, is indicated by the employment of certain practices in the Party whereby the names of Party members were not disclosed to each other, even at conventions and meetings, Party names or aliases being used by members as a substitute (J.A. 795-805, 834, 867-870; Ex. 348, 349).

During the present period, the payment of dues and other contributions to the Party is recorded by the use of a system whereby the members are designated by number at the club level (J.A. 797; Ex. 347-A, 347; J.A. 830-831; Ex.

353; J.A. 1012; Ex. 389; J.A. 1093-1094). Also, numbers and symbols have been used by the Party in order to identify its members on mailing lists (J.A. 869-870). Students at Respondent's Marxist-Leninist Institute in Oakland, California, during the period 1949-1950 were enrolled by numbers instead of names, and students at the former were directed to refer to each other by their enrollment numbers rather than by their correct or Party names (J.A. 1060-1061, 1105).

The use of Party names or aliases for the purpose of concealing membership and activities in the CPUSA has been a widespread and continuous practice by the CPUSA leaders and the rank and file members throughout the existence of the Party. The record is replete with instances of such practices.

6. Use of Codes, Couriers, etc.

In the early history of the CPUSA, its leaders received training in the secret department of the Communist International in the use of codes for the transmittal of Party messages, as well as training in the operation of short wave communication (J.A. 310). In the "Arcos" raids which took place in Great Britain during 1927, British authorities seized codes, documents, letters, and files which revealed the identity of certain CPUSA leaders who had received confidential letters, reports, cables, and sums of money in the United States from the Soviet Union. As a result, new codes for the CPUSA were delivered in Moscow by a Comintern official to a leader of Respondent who in turn brought them into the United States (J.A. 253-254).

During the 1930's, the CPUSA established and used various code systems in transmitting confidential messages between its units and its leaders in the United States (J.A. 430-433, 876-877). Instructions were received by Respondent in code from the Comintern in connection with the 1934 general strike in San Francisco (J.A. 477-480).

In the summer of 1949, instructions were given and steps were taken by Respondent's leaders to establish a national system of radio communication for use by the Party on a stand-by basis. The establishment of this system involved the acquisition of radio receivers, familiarization with the use of radio equipment, plans for the location of mobile transmitters and receiving equipment, and a search to find amateur radio operators among CPUSA members. In addition, leaders of Respondent sought to establish this system in such a manner as to avoid detection by the Federal Communications Commission of illegal transmissions (J.A. 932-936).

At a secret meeting of the CPUSA held in Toledo, Ohio, in July 1947, Respondent's witness Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, then Chairman of the Women's Commission of the CPUSA, told Party members pursuant to instructions of the CPUSA National Committee that Party leaders should not use the telephone for communicating with Party members; further, that Communist documents and directives should not be sent through the mails, that names of Communists should not be used over the telephone, and that lists of names of Communists should not be carried on one's person. The record shows that these instructions were carried out in general by Party members (J.A. 800-801, 806-807, 823-826, 849-850).

Secret devices for concealing the transfer of members from one Party unit to another have been used within the CPUSA, notably during the periods of strict secrecy, which includes the present (J.A. 432-433, 741-742, 1034-1035). After the reconstitution of the CPUSA in 1945, transfer cards in certain units of the Party were sent to destination points by couriers instead of being forwarded through the mails as theretofore (J.A. 741-742).

Prearranged code words or phrases have been used by CPUSA members in communicating with each other, particularly with respect to underground activities since 1947 (J.A. 1072, 1109-1110). A telephone code was devised in 1949 and used through 1950 to transmit information about meetings and other Party affairs in California (J.A. 1069-1070).

Extensive use has been made of confidential mailing addresses by the CPUSA and its members through 1949. Such addresses have included those of members least suspected of being affiliated with the Party (Ex. 105, J.A. 1421; Ex. 151, J.A. 1550-1551; J.A. 701, 876-877, 901-903).

Couriers have been used extensively by Respondent as a concealment measure in the transmission of documents and other material over a period of many years. Until 1940, CPUSA members served as couriers for the transmission of documents between the United States and the Soviet Union and also on behalf of the Communist International in Moscow for the purpose of transferring funds and documents between the Soviet Union and other foreign countries (J.A. 432-433, 443, 735, 741, 770-777, 806-807, 834-836, 846-847). Communist International representatives to the CPUSA have acted as couriers in exchanging documents between the United States and the Soviet Union (J.A.. 469-477). One objective of the Red International of Labor Unions in carrying on Communist activities in the maritime industry was to create an unlimited courier service throughout the world (J.A. 409-410).

In February 1952, a CPUSA member who testified in this proceeding for Petitioner was told by a Party official that the former was to receive instructions as to the performance of the Party's underground activities; and, further, that this member would act largely as a courier between certain Party units (J.A. 1107-1110).

It is thus clearly shown that Respondent uses codes, courier , confidential mailing addresses, and other secret devices to conceal its membership and activities.

7. False Swearing

On instructions from Respondent, a Party Leader, Joseph Kornfeder, swore falsely when he applied to the Department of State in 1927 for a passport (J.A. 351).

Jack Stachel, a member of the CPUSA National Committee, instructed a member in the 1930's to testify falsely in an injunction suit brought against the Shoe and Leather Industrial Union, concerning the issue of whether this union was Communist-controlled (J.A. 495-498).

A Party member, in early 1948, falsely denied his membership in the Party before a court in Virginia. At a meeting of a Party Committee held in Washington, D. C., following that occasion, his resignation from Respondent was so dated as to enable him to say that he was not a CPUSA member on the date that he denied such membership (J.A. 739-740).

In order to circumvent the non-Communist affidavit provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, CPUSA members holding positions in labor unions were instructed by Respondent's officials in 1948 and 1949, to "resign" formally from the CPUSA, but nevertheless to continue functioning as members of the Party. In this connection, Gus Hall, a CPUSA official thereafter convicted under the provisions of the Smith Act, instructed a member in 1948, to sign a letter of resignation back-dated to a time prior to the effective date of the Taft-Hartley Act in order to protect the member from prosecution under the Provisions of that Act. In 1949, a member was given Party instructions that a formal "resignation" from Respondent, but an actual continuation of his functions as a Communist, was the procedure to follow if he must sign a non-Communist affidavit as required under the Taft-Hartley Act (J.A. 807-808, 813; Ex. 350; J.A. 1042-1044).

Party members are impressed by Respondent with the necessity and desirability of making false statements to conceal Party information and to forward Party objectives.

8. Secret Meetings of Trusted Members

Throughout its history Respondent's meetings generally have been restricted to Party members, although on occasions authorized "public" meetings have been held. Election rallies held when Respondent supported candidates for public office have been open to the public, as have expressly authorized meetings of certain Party street units (J.A. 498-499, 667). At various periods important meetings of Party Committees have been held secretly in private homes instead of in Party offices (J.A. 701). During periods of strict secrecy all Party meetings generally are held on a secret basis (J.A. 848-850).

Meetings of national, state and regional committees and commissions of Respondent, as well as other trusted Party units, such as the highly concealed professional clubs, have been held on a clandestine basis (J.A. 429-430, 495, 694-695, 768-772, 824-825, 846-847). Members of the Ohio State Committee were criticized in July 1947 by Gus Hall, a high Party official, for having violated rules promulgated by the National Committee pertaining to concealment in attending meetings (J.A. 824-825). A CPUSA leader attended secret Party meetings held in Cleveland, Ohio, during 1948 and 1949. He was notified of the meetings by courier in Toledo, and upon arrival at Party headquarters in Cleveland he received final instructions as to the locations of the meetings (J.A. 846-849). A district committee met in Baltimore in March of 1949 under conditions of extreme concealment (J.A. 739-744). During 1949 and 1950, meetings of Party Commissions were held in places acquired in the names of non-existent groups, in order to conceal and mislead as to the identity of the parties meeting therein (J.A. 1024-1026).

Extraordinary care has been exercised during certain periods to conceal the actual meeting place and to restrict attendance at plenary sessions and executive board meetings of the CPUSA National Committee to only those selected members who had been given proper identification and credentials (J.A. 896-898, 974-975).

Respondent's schools have been conducted under varying degrees of secrecy. During periods of strict secrecy within the Party, including the periods of 1939 to 1941, and from 1948 to 1950, extraordinary precautions were taken to conceal the existence of these schools and the names of the trusted Party members selected to attend them. Students at Party schools have carried out instructions to observe stringent concealment regulations in order to preserve the secrecy shrouding the operation of these schools. As an example, both the Marxist Institute in Los Angeles, California, and the Marxist-Leninist Institute in Oakland, California, were so conducted in the summer of 1950 as to conceal their existence and purpose. Students at the former school attended classes secretly at a changed location after the Korean hostilities had begun. The nature of the curriculum of these schools (see pp. 75-80, supra) clearly shows the illegal purpose behind the extensive measures adopted to conceal their existence (J.A. 685-688, 787-790, 847, 880, 1060-1061, 1063-1064).

Stringent concealment measures have accompanied the holding of conventions by the Respondent during periods of strict secrecy. Only the most trusted members of the Party have been permitted to attend such conventions. At the Massachusetts State Convention of the Communist Political Association held at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1945, and at the National Convention of the CPUSA at New York City in 1948, only those persons were admitted who could present proper credentials and, after elaborate security procedures, could establish their identity (J.A. 756-757, 893-896).

The location of the Ohio State Convention, held in December 1950, was not disclosed to the delegates for concealment reasons until shortly before the convention was held. Extensive precautions were taken to conceal the holding of a local convention in 1948 in Los Angeles. Like efforts surrounded the holding of the West Oakland (California) Section Convention in December 1950. Similar precautions surrounded a State Regional Convention of the CPUSA in California in January 1951. As at the other conventions held in California specified above, delegates to this January 1951 convention arrived at the convention hall in small groups after having been led there by a member who had been entrusted with knowledge of its location. The delegates remained at the hall during the entire session before being allowed to make their departure in small groups at intervals. Prior to departure the delegates were directed not to take a direct route home. On the following day, the second session of the convention was held at a different location under similar circumstances of secrecy (J.A. 1020-1021, 1065-1067, 1099-1104).

Thus, it is clear that throughout its history, Respondent, for purposes of concealment and to promote its objectives, has held secret meetings restricted to trusted members.

9. Reduction of Committee Membership for Security

During the period of the Hitler-Stalin Pact, a period of strict secrecy, Respondent reduced the membership of its National Committee, state committees, and section committees for concealment purposes (J.A. 442-443, 702-704).

In 1948, the National Committee of Respondent issued a directive pursuant to which the size of all committees within the Party was reduced. In announcing this directive, Gus Hall, then Chairman of the Ohio Party, stated that the reduction of the State Committee of Ohio from approximately 50 odd members to about 11 members was being effected for "security" purposes (J.A. 810-811, 847-849). At the same time, the National Committee was reduced in number from about 55 to approximately a dozen members (J.A. 811, 1203-1204). At the National Convention of the CPUSA held in December 1950, the size of the National Committee was fixed at 13 members (Ex. 376, J.A. 1719).

Respondent thus strives to conceal its activities through limiting the number of persons having access to vital information by reducing the size of its leading committees during the periods of strict secrecy.

10. Assignment of Members in Small Groups

During the mid-1930's, when less extensive concealment measures were in force within the Party, its clubs had memberships which generally averaged from 12 to 20 members. A number of these clubs joined together in neighborhood or industry branches, to form units of from 50 to 100 members (J.A. 702-704). After the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact in 1939, Peters and Stachel, the former a Communist International representative and the latter a CPUSA leader, directed that a number of concealment measures be instituted, including the division of large branches of the Party into groups and the readying of the group system for functioning. Peters issued instructions to set up units of not more than five men with one man in charge, in preparation for the Party's going underground, and these instructions were substantially carried out (J.A. 428, 442-443, 702-704, 1155-1160). Units within the Party were enlarged after Hitler's attack on the Soviet Union in June 1941, in accord with the change which occurred on the political scene (J.A. 703).

Begining in 1948, the CPUSA operated under conditions of strict secrecy, dividing the membership in its basic clubs throughout the United States, including those of professional people, into groups of about five members. Greater precautions were taken to conceal the meetings of the professional groups than theretofore. Instructions were issued to all groups that members should not communicate with others outside their own particular group. Names of members in other groups were never to be mentioned at group meetings. Communication between the groups and other CPUSA units were to be made through group captains directly to section leaders (J.A. 738, 771-772, 797, 849, 871-872, 891, 899-920, 1027, 1067-1069, 1095). However, members have met in somewhat larger bodies on a few occasions since the establishment of the group system beginning in 1948, e.g., in connection with conventions within the Party, even though these conventions were themselves held under circumstances of great secrecy as discussed heretofore. A tightening up of the concealment system, including a more efficient operation of the group system, was announced at the West Oakland Section Convention in California during December 1950. The record shows clearly that the group system continued to function after this date in connection with the strict concealment measures which have been employed by Respondent (J.A. 1096-1099; See also: J.A. 1103-1104). Respondent has thus formed members of its organization into smaller groups during periods of intense secrecy to conceal more effectively their identity and activities.

11. Underground Plans and Operation

Respondent has at all times maintained an underground or secret apparatus, even when the Party was operated on a comparatively open basis. The underground apparatus has been kept in readiness to assume leadership and to direct the functions of the Party during the periods when its leaders determine that underground operations are necessary in order to carry out Party activities. Extensive plans have been devised and great quantities of materials have been gathered in preparation for underground operations. Reserve sums of money have been set aside. Hideouts and secret storage space have been acquired. Mimeograph and printing equipment and materials have been assembled in secret hiding places. Reserve officials have been designated to perform, if the situation so demands, as leading functionaries of the Party. As related above, the membership of Respondent at various times has been divided into groups of five or even fewer persons, and confidential mailing addresses, couriers, and other secret devices have been employed in connection with the preparations for underground activities. During periods when Respondent's activities have been conducted with greater secrecy, preparations for underground operations have been intensified correspondingly, along with a like increase in the employment of many of the secret practices described herein (J.A. 425-432, 661-665, 919-930, 1164-1168).

Respondent went underground for several years in the early 1920's maintaining a secret headquarters, holding secret meetings, and otherwise conducting its affairs on a secret basis. As its "legal" expression, it organized and dominated the Workers Party, an "open" organization consisting of both Party and non-Party members. The underground party was referred to as the No. 1 party while the "open" party, which the former controlled and dominated, was known as the No. 2 party. Pursuant to instructions received from the Communist International, the underground party was liquidated as such but the underground apparatus still remained. The "open" party, or Workers Party, was merged with the underground party and thereafter adopted the name Communist Party of the United States of America (J.A. 217-220, 334-335).

During the remainder of the 1920's as well as in the 1930's, various steps were taken to maintain and to extend the underground apparatus, including the establishment of code systems. J. Peters, a Comintern representative, directed the underground apparatus in the United States during much of this period. At a secret CPUSA school in 1932, Peters instructed the underground members on the subject of illegal apparatus and its operation. His lectures were based upon a document in which the author, Lazar Kaganovich,[1] made suggestions based upon the experiences of the Bolsheviks under the Czarist regime in Russia. Peters returned to Hungary in 1949 by agreement with the Federal Immigration Authorities after a prolonged hearing following his arrest on a deportation warrant (J.A. 425-433, 456-458, 648-649, 664-665; see also: J.A. 872, 960-961, 989-991).

When the Party entered a period of strict secrecy after the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact in 1939, which continued until the invasion of the Soviet Union by Germany in June 1941, it undertook to strengthen the underground apparatus in preparation for taking the entire Party underground (J.A. 442-443, 702-704). Eugene Dennis, a high Party official, declared at a meeting of Party functionaries in late 1939 or early 1940, while the Soviet Union was an ally of Germany, that the secret measures then being placed into effect must be completely established and adhered to so that, if the United States joined Great Britain in the war against Hitler, the Party would be prepared to turn such an "imperialist" war into a civil war, as Lenin advocated. These measures were intended to place the Party on a complete war basis when put into effect. Various degrees of secrecy prevailed, some national leaders going partially underground (J.A. 1155-1160). After the attack by Germany on the Soviet Union, many of these measures were relaxed (J.A. 702-704).

[1] Now a Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union.

During the 1930's, the World Travel Agency, of which Jacob Golos was for a period purportedly the head, arranged for visits of CPUSA members to the Soviet Union. Golos procured the tickets and expense money for such trips. In addition, Golos and the World Travel Agency were connected with a Soviet espionage agency during the period of 1936-1943. He acted as the liaison for communication between Respondent's members and the Soviet Secret Police agents operating in this country (J.A. 466-469, 1164-1166).

Extensive preparations for taking the Party underground were commenced in 1948 and are being carried out. Various measures were taken by the Party to strengthen its underground apparatus. By January 1950, Respondent had placed in effect throughout New York State a plan for the integration of about 10 percent, or about 3,000, of its members into a seven-level, vertical underground organization, known in the Party as "a system of threes" and patterned after the three-system of organization in effect in most of the countries in Europe when Communist parties there were underground. Thompson, a high Party official who has been convicted under the Smith Act, stated that this organizational setup was intended to function even if the Party as such should be declared illegal. In addition, portions of the New York State Party budgets for 1948 and 1949 were assigned to underground work (J.A. 898-900, 904-908, 929-932, 936).

Since 1948 and continuing on into early 1952, a large number of Party members have been severed from regular Party units and were either transferred to underground organizations, in order to assist in underground planning and to receive instructions in underground activities, or placed in a reserve leadership status (J.A. 1005-1011, 1015-1016, 1071-1086).

Hence the record shows that throughout Respondent's existence it has undertaken elaborate measures to maintain an underground apparatus which makes and executes plans and assembles materials for underground work as a means of effectuating Respondent's objectives.

12. Infiltration of Other Organizations

Respondent has sent its members into various organizations in the United States for the purpose of gaining control of such organizations and influencing the policies of these organizations to support the CPUSA program. This policy has been employed by Respondent throughout its history. Pursuant to Respondent's directives its members have pursued this infiltration policy with respect to professional organizations, cultural organizations, fraternal organizations and trade and industrial unions.[1] Secret Communist factions were planned or formed in these organizations for the ultimate purpose of obtaining control and making the policies of the organization subservient to those of Respondent. Students at Respondent's schools were taught the importance of infiltrating mass organizations as a means of acquiring mass support for the Party program. Party members designated to carry out infiltration work in mass organizations were instructed to use care not to expose the Party in these organizations. Members in such organizations were instructed to, and did, conceal their Party membership while in these organizations. At a regional party convention held in California in January 1951, speakers emphasized the need for Party members to infiltrate other organizations through which the purposes of the Party could be carried out (J.A. 246; Ex. 51, J.A. 1358; J.A. 351, 392-397, 493-494, 498, 790-791, 815-817, 1021-1022, 1042-1044, 1101-1104).

13. Purpose of Secret Practices

Respondent in its amended answer and through its witnesses acknowledges that it engages in certain clandestine practices, but it contends that such activity is not for the purpose of concealing foreign direction, domination or control. Respondent's witness Gates testified that such practices have "nothing whatsoever to do with concealing the views or the program of the Communist Party" and further that they are the response to repressive measures taken against the Party and its members and are intended merely to "protect the constitutional rights of members of the Communist Party." (Amended Answer, p. 3, 18-20, J.A. 1216-1223).

[1] See pp. 125-132, supra for more detailed discussion of trade union activity.

It is patent that these secret practices are not adopted by Respondent for the purpose which it asserts. This conclusion is inevitable when the secret practices are examined in the light of the whole record and all the surrounding circumstances under which they were and are performed. A short recapitulation of pertinent evidence will demonstrate this.

The underlying philosophy of the Communist movement is contained in the doctrine of Marxism-Leninism, the real nature of which is described in other portions of these findings. Implicit therein are secrecy and concealment to effectuate attainment of its objectives. It is the aim of Respondent to bring about the dictatorship of the proletariat by violent means if necessary and to help the Soviet Union in the event of a war between that country and the United States (See pp. 215-233, infra). Members were taught in Party Schools that "there is no moral law for a Communist Party member except the success of that to which he has dedicated himself, that is to say, the classless society * * *, no oath, no statement in court, no consideration of any kind can come before the question of whether it helps or hurts the Party * * * they were to testify or to make affidavit or whatever it may be in accordance with the needs of the Party at that time and irrespective of the actual truth" (J.A. 701-702). Instances are shown wherein certain of Respondent's members swore falsely in court (J.A. 495-497); false statements were made by CPUSA members in passport applications (J.A. 1200); and a high Communist official, J. Peters, was hidden by members of Respondent from Government authorities who were seeking him in a deportation case (J.A. 963-965). It was basic in the Theses and Statutes of the Third (Communist) International, to which Respondent has adhered, that both open and secret nuclei be formed to carry on the work of propaganda and education under the control and discipline of the Central Committee of the Party; and that members were required to join in unlawful work and unlawful organizations if necessary for the Party's purposes (Ex. 8, J.A. 1318-1332; J.A. 240, 333-334). In addition, the conspiratorial nature of the Party must be considered. Stalin in the pamphlet, Stalin's Speeches on the American Communist Party (May 1929), in discussing the disruptive effect of factionalism states: "as a result of which the whole internal life of our Party is robbed of its conspirative protection in the face of the class enemy," (underlining supplied). (Ex. 109, p. 29, J.A. 1425). There is also evidence that in the 1939 to 1941 period "the whole organization was on a conspiratorial basis" and the schools were conducted "in accordance with the rules of conspiracy" (J.A. 686-687). It was taught by Respondent in 1939 that "the purpose of this secrecy was to prevent the law enforcement agencies" from getting information concerning the CPUSA "because it destroys the conspiratorial nature of the Party movement itself" (J.A. 667-668).

In 1940, in order to conceal its true status registration statements were filed by the Daily Worker under the Foreign Agents Registration Act which falsely made it appear that it did not come within the provisons of that Act (J.A. 1191-1193; C.P. Exs. 70-75).

Secrecy and concealment have been continuous and have not been limited to the period when Respondent felt it was under particular stress. There was, however, a fluctuation in the degree of secret activity. Thus, during the period of the Hitler-Stalin Pact, Eugene Dennis stressed the underground activity of the CPUSA and the necessity for attraining readiness for civil uprisings in the event the United States joined the Allies against Germany (R. 14463-14467). After 1945, there was an intensification of secret practices. In July 1950, members were told that the world situation had created considerable alarm in Respondent and that consequently the Party was adopting stricter "security" measures (J.A. 1095). Shortly afterward, a reorganization took place for that reason; Respondent's clubs were divided into small groups and its members were identified by numbers instead of names (J.A. 1095-1096). The Marxist Institute in Los Angeles, California, and the Marxist-Leninist Institute in Oakland, California, were conducted during late 1949 and part of 1950, with great secrecy (J.A. 1092-1106). A regional convention was held in January 1951 in California, under conditions of extreme secrecy (J.A. 1101-1102). At this convention there were speeches on the so-called peace campaign, on world conditions and on the necessity for stricter security measures (J.A. 219-239, 302-303, 334-335, 493-495, 694-698, 762-763, 790-791, 800-801, 815-817, 828-829, 900-901, 1077-1080, 1087-1088, 1093, 1103-1104, 1155-1156).

Viewed against this background, it is established that such practices as secret memberships, hidden meetings of small groups, the acquisition of easily transported mimeograph machines, cryptically wording constitutions, the use of couriers and the restricted use of the mails and telephone, are not undertaken for the innocent purpose which Respondent seeks to ascribe to them. Nor can the infiltration of organizations, such as labor unions, be regarded as having a bona fide purpose. The evidence shows that the reason for such infiltration is to dominate such organizations for the Respondent's purposes. That this is basic can be seen from a book by Lenin entitled What Is To Be Done, which Respondent's members read and studied (J.A. 1014; Ex. 370, 416-424; see J.A. 1681, 1733, 1734-1736, 1744, 1751). In this book, Lenin declares that Trade Unions are "a very useful auxiliary to the political, agitational and revolutionary organizations" and that they can be controlled by "a small compact core" of agents "connected by all the rules of strict secrecy with the organizations of revolutionists (Ex. 417, pp. 109-112).

We conclude that the secret practices undertaken by Respondent are for the purpose of concealing the true nature of the Pary and promoting its objectives. We cannot accept Respondent's contention that its secret practices are merely devices utilized to protect the rights and liberties of its members.

Upon the basis of the foregoing and on the whole record, we find that Respondent engages in extensive secret practices, within the meaning of the Act, for the purpose of promoting its objectives and thereby to advance those of the world Communist movement; and for concealing its direction, domination and control by the Soviet Union.

H. ALLEGIANCE.

Section 13 (e)(8) of the Act requires that the Board consider:

> "the extent to which its [Respondent's] principal leaders or a substantial number of its members consider the allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their obligations to such foreign government or foreign organization."

The petition alleges:

> "From 1919 to the date of the filing of this petition, the leaders of the Communist Party and a substantial number of its members have considered the allegiance they owe the United States as being subordinate to their loyalty and obligations to the government of the Soviet Union." (p. 16)

The petition further contains six specific allegations [1] which, if true, would show that Respondent's principal leaders and members consider the allegiance they owe the Soviet Union to be paramount to that owed the United States. Since the evidence of record which pertains to allegiance is broader in scope than Petitioner's specific allegations, we will not confine our findings of fact to the form of these specific allegations.

[1] These allegations are to the effect that the Soviet Union is the fatherland of the world Communist movement which all Communists are obligated to support and defend; the Red flag has been and is the flag to which Communists owe allegiance; all American Communists must support and defend the Soviet Union in war with any nation; in event of war between the United States and the Soviet Union, they must work for the defeat of the United States; some of Respondent's present leaders took an oath to Stalin at the Seventh World Congress of the Comintern; and, to leaders and members of Respondent, "patriotism" means solidarity with the Soviet Union.

The evidence shows that a basic aim of Marxism-Leninism is the establishment of dictatorships of the proletariat in all non-Socialist countries of the world, and that Respondent adheres to and works to attain this goal in the United States.[1] The Marxist-Leninist Classics define dictatorship of the proletariat and demonstrate that it must be established by the forceful overthrow of existing non-socialist governments.

Stalin in Problem of Leninism (Ex. 138, pp. 26-27, J. A. 1507-1508) defines the dictatorship of the proletariat according to its fundamentals:

> "Hence there are three fundamental aspects of the dictatorship of the proletariat.
>
> "(1) The utilisation (sic) of the power of the proletariat for the suppression of the exploiters, for the defense of the country, for the consolidation of the ties with the proletarians of other lands, and for the development and the victory of the revolution in all countries.
>
> "(2) The utilisation of the power of the proletariat in order to detach the toiling and exploited masses once and for all from the bourgeoisie, to consolidate the alliance of the proletariat with these masses, to enlist these masses in the work of socialist construction, and to assure the state leadership of these masses by the proletariat.
>
> "(3) The utilisation of the power of the proletariat for the organisation (sic) of socialism, for the abolition of classes, and for the transition to a society without classes, to a society without a state.
>
> "The dictatorship of the proletariat is a combination of all three aspects. None of these three aspects can be advanced as the sole characteristic feature of the dictatorship of the proletariat. On the other hand, it is sufficient for but one of these three characteristic features to be absent, for the dictatorship of the proletariat to cease being a dictatorship in a capitalist environment. * * *"

[1] See Marxism-Leninism, pp. 38-81, supra.

In the following quotation, Stalin, with Lenin's help, reveals that the dictatorship of the proletariat must be installed through use of force by Communist minorities, independently of the will of the majority of the population, and that attempting to utilize peaceful means to do so is not to be considered (J. A. 1504-1505):

> "To think that such a revolution can be carried out peacefully within the frame work of bourgeois democracy, which is adapted to the domination of the bourgeoisie, means one of two things. It means either madness, and the loss of normal human understanding, or else an open and gross repudiation of the proletarian revolution.
>
> "It is necessary to insist on this all the more strongly, all the more categorically, since we are dealing with the proletarian revolution which has for the time being triumphed in only one country, a country surrounded by hostile capitalist countries, a country the bourgeoisie of which cannot fail to receive the support of international capital.
>
> "That is why Lenin states that '. . . the liberation of the oppressed class is impossible not only without a violent revolution, but also without the destruction of the apparatus of state power, which was created by the ruling class. . . . (Collected Works, Vol. XXI, Book II, p. 155. Also State and Revolution, Little Lenin Library, p. 9)
>
> "'First let the majority of the population, while private property is still maintained, that is while the power and oppression of capital are maintained, declare itself for the party of the proletariat. Only then can it, and should it, take power. That is what is said by petty-bourgeois democrats who call themselves "socialists" but are really the henchmen of the bourgeoisie. [My italics.—J. S.]
>
> "'But we say: Let the revolutionary proletariat first overthrow the bourgeoisie, break the yoke of capital, break up the bourgeois state apparatus. Then the victorious proletariat will speedily gain the sympathy and support of the majority of the toiling non-proletarian masses by satisfying their wants at the expense of the exploiters. [My italics.—J. S.] (Collected Work, Vol. XXIV, p. 647, Russian edition.)
> "'In order to win the majority of the population to its side', Lenin continues, 'the proletariat must first of all overthrow the bourgeoisie and seize state power and, secondly, it must introduce Soviet rule, smash to pieces the old state apparatus, and thus at one blow undermine the rule, authority and influence of the bourgeoisie and of the petty-bourgeois compromisers in the ranks of the non-proletarian toiling masses. Thirdly, the proletariat must completely and finally destroy the influence of the bourgeoisie and of the petty-toiling masses by the revolutionary satisfaction of their economic needs at the expense of the exploiters." (ibid, pp. 20-21).

Stalin also emphasizes that it is false for Communists to consider that such a thing as "peaceful evolution" from "bourgeois democracy" into a "proletarian democracy" is possible (J. A. 1432-1433):

"Marx's qualifying phrase about the Continent gave the opportunists and Mensheviks of all countries a protext for proclaiming that Marx had thus conceded the possibility of the peaceful evolution of bourgeois democracy into a proleterian democracy, at least in certain countries outside the European continent (England, America). Marx did in fact concede that possibility, and he had good grounds for conceding it in regard to England and America in the 'seventies of the last century, when monopoly capitalism and imperialism did not yet exist, and when these countries, owing to the special conditions of their development, had as yet no (sic) developed militarism and bureaucracy. That was the situation before the appearance of developed imperialism. But later, after a lapse of thirty or forty years, when the situation in these countries had radically changed, when imperialism had developed and had embraced all capitalist countries without exception, when militarism and bureaucracy had appeared in England and America also, when the special conditions for peaceful development in England and the United States had disappeared—then the qualification in regard to these countries necessarily could no longer hold good." (Foundations of Leninism, Ex. 121, p. 55).

The following quotation is a reaffirmation by Stalin of the necessity of overthrowing "bourgeois" governments by forcible means (J. A. 1434):

"Therefore, Lenin is right in saying:
'The proletarian revolution is impossible without the forcible destruction of the bourgeois state machine and the substitution for it of a new one. . . .'' (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 124)'' (ibid; at p. 56).

The foregoing is but an illustrative portion of the abundant utterances of the Classics relating to the nature and means of effectuation of the dictatorships of the proletariat throughout the world. They have not been taken out of context; they are embedded in the sense of these writings and mean what they say.

Although we have heretofore set forth under the heading "Marxism-Leninism" a review of the evidence and our finding that Respondent's adherence to Marxism-Lenism has implicit in its complete subservience to the fundamental principles thereof—that the Classics are binding upon Respondent in all fundamentals; it is desirable, because of the principles and policies of the Classics concerning allegiance to the Soviet Union, and particularly the necessity for the overthrow of existing "imperialist" governments, including, inter alia, the United States, to summarize here, by way of review, some of the evidence establishing Respondent's present adherence to the Classics.

In 1945, when Respondent reverted to the name Communist Party of the United States of America (maintaining the basic organizational form under which it presently operates), William Z. Foster announced to the membership, in substance, that the Classics assumed an even greater importance, and said that "as never before, we must train our Party in the fundamentals of Marxism-Leninism. (Ex. 372, p. 788). Alexander Trachtenberg in 1949 declared to a group of Respondent's members meeting in Washington, D. C., that Party leaders must know the Classics and be able to apply their principles to any current situation at any time (J. A. 689-691, 748-749). Petitioner's witness Matusow shows that in the Party the Communist Manifesto, though 100 years old, "is just as relevant today as it was in 1848 when it was written (J. A. 1057)." The Classics were in use by the Party, to Matusow's knowledge, in December 1950 (J. A. 1048-1049). Marxism-Leninism, as embodied in the Classics, provided the basis of what Petitioner's witness Lautner taught and was taught at Respondent's National Training School (J. A. 943-947). The Classics were used in the Marxist-Leninist Institute in Los Angeles which Petitioner's witness Evans attended until it was discontinued in June 1950 (J. A. 1104-1106).

It is established that the above Classics have been used in study courses during the years 1945-1950, for use in teaching Respondent's members (Exs. 369, 393, 425, 427; J. A. 748, 1014-1015, 1048-1049).

A recent article by Alexander Bittelman, a CPUSA leader, states:

> "A theoretical contribution of Stalin which, like the Foundations of Leninism and his other theoretical works, ranks with the fundamental theoretical and philosophical works of Marx, Engels and Lenin, is the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The History is a fountainhead of Marxist-Leninist knowledge—theory, ideology, strategy, tactics, principles of organization. It is a guide to Marxist-Leninist action. It embodies the theoretical and programmatic positions of Marxism-Leninism." Political Affairs, December 1949, Ex. 373, p. 8; J. A. 1695) (Underlining supplied)

The same highly placed author, in January 1952, states:

> "Lenin's teachings are triumphing because they are true. The teachings of Lenin, further developed by Stalin, demonstrate their creativeness and cogency in all the great progressive struggles of our day and epoch. Lenin's teachings inspire the actions of the vanguard fighters for peace and democracy. Peoples fighting for equal rights and national independence find their advance fighters and leaders guided by the teachings of Lenin, so brilliantly continued and further developed by Stalin. And the magnificent historic fight of our epoch—the fight for socialism, for Communism—whose grandeur overshadows all of the great previous achievements of mankind, crowning them with the realization of the noblest aspirations and dreams of the human race—this historic fight, we are proud to say, is guided by the teachings of Lenin and of his great continuer Stalin. It is led by parties of Marxism-Leninism, by Communist and Workers Parties." (Political Affairs, Ex. 489, p. 1).

In addition to the documentary evidence, it was established through the testimony of Petitioner's witnesses Gitlow, Kornfeder, Nowell, Crouch, Honig, Johnson, Meyer, Hidalgo, Matusow, and Budenz, among others, that the CPUSA in reality advocates the overthrow of the government of the United States by force and violence. The membership of the above witnesses in the CPUSA spanned the entire existence of the Party until January 1951. Their various positions therein ranged from high offices to rank and file Party membership. All were in a position to know whereof they spoke (J. A. 225-226, 232-233, 241-252, 298-299, 383-384, 387-389, 437-438, 462, 501, 649, 675-677, 729, 730-731, 872, 1054-1056, 1128-1235, 1270-1272, 1311-1312).

Respondent engaged in extensive cross-examination of these witnesses on their testimony concerning force and violence and also examined its own witnesses at some length on this subject, thus joining issue thereon.

In essence, Respondent's witnesses testified that the CPUSA does not seek to overthrow the government of the United States by forcible means but rather it seeks to establish its program by peaceful means within the framework of the United States Constitution; that "force and violence" as referred to by Respondent comes into play only in the event that the duly elected "socialist" government is subject to "counter revolutionary" force by the unseated capitalist monopolists; it then advocates meeting such an attempt by force to maintain their position. Respondent points to language in its 1945 and 1948 Constitutions (Exs. 329 and 374, respectively) which embraces the United States Constitution. On the other hand, Petitioner's witnesses establish that the principles of "scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism", as used in Respondent's Constitution and other writings, have a definite meaning to CPUSA members,[1] i.e., that the basic goal of Respondent, founded on the writings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, namely, the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, can be attained only by the violent shattering of the "bourgeois" state, and this includes the government of the United States.

It is established that such language in these Constitutions of Respondent, and other similar statements embracing the Bill of Rights and the United States Constitution, are irreconcilable with Marxist-Leninist principles, and are devices to clothe a conspiracy against the United States Government in the habiliments of legality. The testimony of Respondent's witnesses, as set forth above, is likewise rejected as being irreconcilable with the great weight of the evidence.

The testimony of Petitioner's witnesses establishes that, pursuant to the preachments of the Classics, the CPUSA seeks to overthrow the existing government in the United States, and its institutions, by forcible means, and to establish a dictatorship of the proletariat in proceeding to establish "socialism" (J. A. 946-948, 975-976, 979).[2]

We are also mindful that the evidence in this proceeding discloses, and we officially notice, that most of Respondent's foremost leaders, despite contentions like those made by Respondent in this proceeding, were recently convicted under the statute known as the Smith Act (Title 18, Secs. 11 and 13, United States Code) of conspiring to teach and advocate the overthrow of the United States government by force and violence; and that the convictions of eleven such leaders which have been reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States have been upheld (341 U. S. 494; Rehearing denied, 342 U. S. 842).

Respondent's adherence to and implementation of a concept requiring the overthrow of the United States Government by any means, including force and violence, is completely incompatible with, and the exact antithesis of, allegiance to the United States. This becomes even more clear when we examine additional international aspects of Marxism-Leninism from which this concept flows.[1]

[2] See Marxism-Leninism, pp. 38-81, supra.

The Classics reveal that the requirement of paramount allegiance to the Soviet Union is but the natural corollary of the Soviet Union's position as leader of the world Communist movement and fatherland of the world proletariat. Consequently, the basic postulates of Marxism-Leninism, (a) protection of the Soviet Union, and (b) destruction of capitalist states and the establishment, ultimately, of world Communism, impinge directly upon allegiance. In the infancy of the Soviet Union, Lenin, as cited by Stalin in Problems of Leninism (Ex. 138, p. 19), evaluated its international position as involving inevitable clashes with imperialist states and proclaims the necessity for the Soviet Union to call forth the world revolution (J. A. 1503-1504):

> " 'The second enormous difficulty was . . . the international question. If we were able to cope so easily with Kerensky's bands, if we so easily established our power, if the decree on the socialisation of the land and on workers' control, was secured without the slightest difficulty—if we obtained all this so easily it was only because for a brief space of time a fortunate combination of circumstances protected us from international imperialism. International imperialism, with all the might of its capital and its highly organized miltary technique, which represents a real force, a real fortress of international capital, could under no circumstances, under no possible conditions, live side by side with the Soviet republic, both because of its objective situation and because of the economic interests of the capitalist class which was incorporated in it, it could not do this because of commercial ties and of international financial relationships. A conflict is inevitable. This is the greatest difficulty of the Russian Revolution, its greatest historical problem: the necessity to solve international problems, the necessity to call forth the world revolution.' (Collected Works, Vol. XXII, pp. 315-317, Russian Edition)".

[1] See Marxism-Leninism, pp. 38-81, supra.

That protection and security of the Soviet Union is fundamental to the world Communist movement is clear from Stalin's statement (J. A. 1509-1510):

> "'The final victory of socialism is a complete guarantee against attempted intervention, and that means against restoration, for any serious attempt at restoration can take place only with support from outside, only with the support of international capital. Hence the support of our revolution by the workers of all countries, and still more the victory of these workers in at least several countries, is a necessary condition for completely guaranteeing the first victorious country against attempts at intervention and restoration, a necessary condition for the final victory of socialism.'" (A quotation of Joseph Stalin cited by him in his Problems of Leninism, supra, at p. 64):

The Classics make it plain that the Soviet Union, fostering its own security, will work toward the destruction of capitalism by developing revolutions in all countries. Stalin quoting Lenin (J. A. 1431):

> "Lenin expressed this thought in a nutshell when he said that the task of the victorious revolution is to do 'the utmost possible in one country for the development, support and awakening of the revolution in all countries.' (Selected Works, Vol. VII, p. 182)" (Foundations of Leninism, Pet. Ex. 121, p. 46).

Stalin elaborates on this international aspect in setting forth the "absolute law" of capitalist development and of world revolution (J. A. 1510):

> "'Uneven economic and political development is an absolute law of capitalism. Hence, the victory of socialism is possible, first in a few or even in one single capitalist country taken separately. The victorious proletariat of that country, having expropriated the capitalists and organized its own socialist production [my italics.—J. S.] would rise against the rest of the capitalist world, attract to itself the oppressed classes of other countries, raise revolts among them against the capitalists, and in the event of necessity, come out even with armed force against the exploiting classes and their states." (Collected Works, Vol. XVIXI, p. 272)" (Problems of Leninism, supra, at p. 69).

Stalin in Foundations of Leninism (Pet. Ex. 121, pp. 90-91) states in capsule form the strategy applicable to the various stages of the revolution, which depicts the Soviet Union as the "base" for the overthrow of "imperialism" (J. A. 1438):

> "Our revolution already passed through 2 stages, and after the October Revolution it has entered a third stage. Our strategy changed accordingly."
>
> * * *
> "Third stage. Commenced after the October Revolution. Objective: to consolidate the dictatorship of the proletariat in one country, using it as a base for the overthrow of imperialism in all countries * * *"

The hegemony exercised by the Soviet Union over the world Communist movement is that of originator and founder (J. A. 1430):

> "Is it surprising, after all this, that a country which has accomplished such a revolution and possesses such a proletariat should have been the birthplace of the theory and tactics of the proletarian revolution?
>
> "Is it surprising that Lenin, the leader of this proletariat, became the creator of this theory and tactics and the leader of the international proletariat?" (Ibid., p. 19)

The leadership of the Soviet Union is openly lauded in the Programme of the Communist International (Ex. 125, p. 27, J. A. 1448-1449):

> "Thus, the system of world imperialism, and with it the partial stabilization of capitalism, is being corroded from various causes: First, the antagonisms and conflicts between the imperialist states: * * * and lastly, the hegemony exercised over the whole world revolutionary movement by the proletarian dictatorship in the U. S. S. R. The international revolution is developing."

(J. A. 1453-1454):

> "In view of the fact that the U. S. S. R. is the only > cipal bulwark of its achievements and the most important factor for its international emancipation, the international proletariat must on its part facilitate the success of the work of Socialist construction in the U. S. S. R. and defend her against the attacks of the capitalist powers by all the means in its power." (Ibid., p. 65).

The Soviet Union being the fatherland or home base of the world revolution, the leaders of the Soviet Union serve also as leaders of the organized world Communist movement. Hence, the Communist International, the Soviet Union, and Stalin were given pledges of allegiance by Respondent's leaders and members as shown by the evidence which we now set forth.

Nowell, a former CPUSA official who testified for the Petitioner in this proceeding, took an oath upon joining the CPUSA (in 1929) to carry out the Party line and to adhere to the principles of the Comintern at all times (J. A. 352).

Earl Browder read a pledge to 2,000 workers who were initiated into the CPUSA in the New York District in 1935. Part of this pledge read as follows (J. A. 1541):

> "I pledge myself to rally the masses to defend the Soviet Union, the land of victorious socialism. I pledge myself to remain at all times a vigilant and firm defender of the Leninist line of the Party, the only line that insures the triumph of Soviet Power in the United States." (Ex. 145, p. 105).

At Madison Square Garden in New York City in 1937, about 3,000 new recruits to the Party pledged, among other things, to uphold and advance the program of the Communist Party, as well as their "complete devotion to the Leninist struggle for socialism—for a Soviet America". (Ex. 382).

At the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International at Moscow in 1935, delegates from the CPUSA, including some of the present leaders of the Party, took an oath of fealty, "To Comrade Stalin, leader, teacher, and friend of the proletariat and oppressed of the whole world'' whom they assured that ''the Communists will always and everywhere be faithful to the end and to the great and invincible banner of Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin'' and that ''under this banner, Communism will triumph throughout the world''. (Ex. 430; J. A. 500, 1115-1116, 1759-1762).

The delegation of Respondent to this Congress approved this oath of fealty to Stalin and two of the delegates, Browder and Foster, were elected at this Congress to the Presidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. Subsequently, the decisions of the Seventh Congress of the Communist International and the work of the CPUSA delegation at that Congress were fully approved by the Central Committee of Respondent (Ex. 185, J. A. 1567-1572).

Of the nine members of the delegation to the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International who took and approved this oath to ''Comrade Stalin'', six, namely, William Z. Foster (National Chairman), John Williamson (Labor Secretary), Gilbert Green, Jack Stachel, William Schneiderman, and Martha Stone, are presently leaders of the CPUSA. At the 15th National Convention of the CPUSA, held between December 28-31, 1950, the Party elected these six members or alternate members of its National Committe.

After this 1935 Congress of the Communist International, all Communist leaders and functionaries had to take a basic pledge or oath of loyalty to Stalin (R. 13956).

Foster, as the principal speaker at the 1948 Ohio State Convention of Respondent, stated that the CPUSA in Ohio should elect as leaders only those individuals upon whom they could depend in the event of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States (J. A. 854).

In 1949, the CPUSA published a message to Stalin in which the Party accused the United States Government of violating the commitments made at Yalta and at Potsdam and referred to the existing government as ''American imperialists''. This message, in effect, consituted a reaffirmation by the CPUSA of its loyalty and a further acknowledgment of stalin's leadership of the world-wide Communist movement [1] (Ex. 375; J. A. 976, 1706-1707).

Twelve of the thirteen members of the National Committee of the CPUSA, who were elected at the 15th National Convention of the Party held December 28-31, 1950, and three of the alternates have been convicted under the Smith Act as heretofore noted (Exs. 376, 493; J. A. 1719, 1782-1783). Four of those convicted, namely, Williamson, Green, Schneiderman, and Stachel, were among those leaders of Respondent who took an oath of fealty to Stalin at the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International at Moscow in 1935. The record does not disclose that any of these CPUSA leaders who have taken oaths of fealty to Stalin have ever repudiated the oaths, or that Respondent has repudiated their action.

That the allegiance owed the Soviet Union by Respondent's leaders and members is paramount to that owed the United States is further borne out by the record. The evidence establishes numerous instances in the past where Respondent and its leaders have urged its members to defend the Soviet Union, even in the event of a war between that country and the United States of America. The slogan "Defend the Soviet Union", has been used in this regard (Exs. 44, 132, 133, 135, 136, 137, 143, 144, 145, 148, 149, 155, 158A, 159, 160, 162, 343, 380A, B and C).

Respondent's students at the Lenin School in Moscow, in the period between 1927 and 1937, were taught that the role of the CPUSA, in the event of war between the Soviet Union and the United States, is to support and defend the former and to labor for the defeat of the latter (J. A. 308-308, 389-391).

Early in its history, the CPUSA regarded as one of its purposes or duties the defense of the Soviet Union as the fatherland of the working classes all over the world (J. A. 225; Exs. 89, 125, 132, 133, 137, 143, 145, 148, 149, 158A, 363, 432). All new members of Respondent were instructed between 1927 and 1939, that the first and only allegiance of a Party member is to the workers' fatherland, namely, the Soviet Union, and not to any capitalist government (J. A. 499-500).

A Red flag, brought from Moscow in 1929 by one of Respondent's members, was displayed at lectures on the Soviet Union. The use of the flag of the Soviet Union at a Communist camp in Michigan during the early 1930's, and up to 1936, was intended to signify the fatherland of the working class, or Communism as practiced in the Soviet Union, as well as to make friends for the Soviet Union, and to draw the American people nearer to Communist ideology and the CPUSA (J. A. 354-358).

Two members of Respondent's Central Committee criticized a Party official for authorizing the flying of the American flag in a Fourth of July parade in 1934 (J. A. 435-436).

In 1935, Dimitri Z. Manuilsky, then head of the Communist International, told Respondent's delegates to the Seventh World Congress of the Communist International in Moscow, at a meeting immediately prior thereto, that the first allegiance of all CPUSA members was to the workers' fatherland, the Soviet Union. Manuilsky demanded that the subject of allegiance again be stressed throughout the lower ranks of Respondent (J. A. 499-500). Students at Respondent's schools in the United States, particularly in 1932 and 1936 to 1941, were taught that the first and only allegiance of a Party member is to the Soviet Union, the fatherland, rather than to the United States (J. A. 436-437, 650-652, 704).

A document in which the defense of the Soviet Union is urged, The Communist Party: A Manual On Organization by J. Peters, was used during the 1940's as reference material by CPUSA officials (Ex 145; J. A. 1533-1543; J. A. 398-399, 454-455, 960-961, 963, 1121).

Students at the Communist Midwest Training School in Chicago were taught in December 1945, that the Communist forces throughout the world owe their allegiance to the Soviet Union (J. A. 852-854). Party members were taught at Respondent's meetings in 1948 that they owe allegiance to the "democratic forces" of the world and that the Soviet Union represents such forces (J. A. 811-812).

Petitioner's witness Lautner, a former high official of Respondent, learned from his varied experience in the Party from November 1929 until January 17, 1950, that the primary duty of a CPUSA member lies in the defense of the Soviet Union (J. A. 974). A CPUSA leader in November 1950 denounced the United States for inciting war against the Soviet Union. He urged Party members to respond to "imperialist slanders and war incitements" by an "ideological and political offensive in the defense of the Soviet Union as the leader of the world camp of peace, democracy and Socialism", as well as "to support and defend the peace policy of the Soviet Union" (Ex. 477).

This evidence takes on clearer meaning when it is viewed against the Marxist-Leninist concept of "imperialism", and its corollary "just and unjust wars".[1]

The Classics are specific on the question of war as is exemplified by the following quotations from the History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (Bolsheviks) (Ex. 330, pp. 167-168; J. A. 1619):

> "It was not to every kind of war that the Bolsheviks were opposed. They were only opposed to wars of conquest, imperialist wars. The Bolsheviks held that there are two kinds of war:
>
> "a) Just wars, wars that are not wars of conquest but wars of liberation, waged to defend the people from foreign attack and from attempts to enslave them, or to liberate the people from capitalist slavery, or, lastly, to liberate colonies and dependent countries from the yoke of imperialism; and
>
> "b) Unjust wars, wars of conquest, waged to conquer and enslave foreign countries and foreign nations.
>
> "Wars of the first kind the Bolsheviks supported. As to wars of the second kind, the Bolsheviks maintained that a resolute struggle must be waged against them to the point of revolution and the overthrow of one's own imperialist government."

---

[1] See Marxism-Leninism, pp. 38-81, supra.

In applying this basic concept, it was taught at the Lenin School in Moscow, and by Respondent at its schools and meetings during its entire existence, that a "just" war is any war in which the Soviet Union has as an adversary an imperialist power, regardless of whether the Soviet Union is the aggressor or the defender; and that any war between a colony and its mother country is a "just" war for the colony. Conversely, any war against the Soviet Union, regardless of which nation might be the aggressor, is an "unjust" war for the Soviet Union's adversary (J. A. 389-390, 1114).

In the event of war between two capitalist countries, the Communist role is to work for the destruction of both, thus leaving to the Soviet Union a clear path for future conquest.[1] In the event of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States, however, CPUSA members are to work for the defeat of the United States (J. A. 731-732, 948-949; Ex. 292; J. A. 1597-1600).

The students at the National Training School of the CPUSA in New York City in about 1932, were taught that in the event of such a war, it was the duty of every Communist to help defeat the United States and to secure the victory of the Soviet Red Army; and that Communist cells in the American armed forces should work for the demoralization of such forces (J. A. 651-653).

Browder stated in 1938, that in the event of a war between the Communist and non-Communist worlds, the task of the Party is to work for the victory of the Soviet Union, and world Communism (J. A. 436).

The CPUSA, adhering to the principles of Marxism-Leninism, has consistently characterized the United States as an "imperialist" and a "capitalist" nation which by definition can participate only in "unjust" wars. Any war among capitalist countries or by a capitalist nation against a "socialist" country, such as the Soviet Union, is considered by Respondent to be an "unjust" war. However, the Soviet Union or any other "socialist" countries are upheld as "anti-imperialist" nations which cannot possibly start an "unjust" war; any war participated in by "socialist" nations is considered by Respondent to be a "just" war from the standpoint of such nations. In fact, in 1949, Foster and Dennis, leaders of Respondent, wrote in the Party publication, Daily Worker, that Respondent would oppose a "Wall Street" war as "unjust, aggressive, and imperialist". Thus, the war in Korea is considered by Respondent to be a "Wall Street" war. In this connection, the United States has been portrayed by Respondent as the leader of all the imperialist nations bent on world conquest, while the Soviet Union is pictured as the peace-loving leader of the anti-imperialist nations (Exs. 323, 331; J. A. 389-391).

[1] It is interesting to advert here to the history of the Nazi-Soviet Pact as related in our findings herein under Non-deviation, pp. 151-153, supra.

In 1940, Eugene Dennis discussed with witness Budenz the steps to be taken by Respondent to turn the "imperialist" war into a civil war in this country, should the United States join with Great Britain against the Hitler-Stalin combine (J. A. 1178-1180).

Students were taught in CPUSA schools in 1941 and 1947, that imperialism is world-wide and that a world-wide organization is necessary to bring about its downfall; further, that the world Communist movement is such an organization (J. A. 946-948).

In December 1948, Henry Winston, National Organizational Secretary and a member of Respondent's National Committee, stated that the question of industrial concentration and placing of members of the CPUSA youth movement in the basic industries was particularly important at that time because, in the event of an "imperialist" war, their presence would be necessary in order to mobilize workers against this war, to slow down production, and to do whatever possible to make certain that such an "unjust" was is not successful. Winston is one of those convicted of a violation of the Smith Act, referred to earlier (Ex. 418; J. A. 1039-1042, 17-40-1743).

The position the CPUSA stressed in 1949 [1] was that there were two camps in the world: one, the "imperialist" camp led by the United States, and the other camp of the "forces for peace and democracy" led by the Soviet Union; and, that everything must be done to support the latter as against the former. In order to accomplish this objective, Respondent took the position that it should build and expand its Marxist-Leninist ideology (Ex. 214, p. 10; J. A. 977-978).

[1] See also Imperialism re this position of Respondent, pp. 90-91, supra.

At a secret meeting of Respondent in Baltimore in 1949, it was agreed that its members would not bear arms for the United States in the event of any conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union (J. A. 744-745; Exs. 331 to 344, incl.).

Students at the Marxist-Leninist Institute in Los Angeles from April 1949 to June 1950, were taught that the Soviet Union could at no time start an "unjust" war while the United States could start an "unjust" war but never a "just" one; further, that a good Communist must support a nation engaging in a "just" war and oppose an "unjust" war (J. A. 1111-1112).

The position of the CPUSA at the present time is that the Korean War is an "unjust" war which the United States and her allies are waging as aggressors against the North Korean and Chinese peoples [1] (J. A. 1112-1113).

From the evidence contained in this record, we find that Respondent exists in this country fundamentally for the purpose, which it constantly seeks to accomplish, of overthrowing the Government of the United States by force and violence, in order to install "socialism" under the dictatorship of the proletariat, after the manner of the Soviet Union; this is the very antithesis of allegiance to the United States.

We find upon the whole record that the evidence preponderantly establishes that Respondent's leaders and its members consider the allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their loyalty and obligations to the Soviet Union.

II. LEGAL DISCUSSION.

Respondent attacks the Recommended Decision asserting it does not fulfill its functions, and that it cannot be relied upon by the Board because it allegedly misstates the record, fails to present relevant matters, and confuses the record and issues. Respondent sets forth specific instances which it contends are illustrative of the above alleged errors.

We have heretofore reviewed these matters, along with Respondent's overall exception to the Recommended Decision (No. 310), in disposing of its motion of November 24, 1952, to strike the Decision. As indicated in our Memorandum Opinion and Order of February 24, 1953, denying Respondent's motion, we have completely analyzed and evaluated anew all the evidence in this proceeding, considering all exceptions and contentions of the Parties. Our findings in this report contain only that substance from the Recommended Decision, which we, after an independent evaluation of the record, have confirmed as being supported by a preponderance of the evidence.

Respondent next contends that the Panel admitted both oral and documentary evidence of Petitioner without a proper foundation of competency. It cites examples which it claims are egregious. Respondent argues that while allowing boundless latitude to Petitioner, the Panel erroneously curtailed its cross-examination of all of Petitioner's witnesses, as well as the submission of its proof. It asserts that the Panel erred in refusing to require production of reports and memoranda turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation by Petitioner's witnesses, in restricting its cross-examination designed to show that Petitioner's witnesses were not credible, in excluding "various" exhibits offered by Respondent, and in its rulings regarding the evidence relating to the non-deviation criterion of the Act.[1] We have considered each of these specific allegations and we find no substantive error regarding the matters alleged by Respondent. Nor can we find any reasonable justification for Respondent's assertion that the Panel restricted its proof and its cross-examination of witnesses. It is noteworthy that Respondent cross-examined Petitioner's witnesses exhaustively and at great length. It was afforded every opportunity to present all material and relevant evidence, to the fullest. Any shortcomings in this respect must lie with Respondent.

[1] We have disposed of this latter contention in our discussion concerning Non-deviation, pp. 147-151, supra.

Respondent further contends that the Recommended Decision does not rest on evidence of its activities subsequent to the effective date of the Act, but rather that it rests on certain "props" which assertedly are contrary to the evidence and the law. Respondent defines these "props" as the Panel's suggestion that the dissolution of the Comintern in 1943 was not real and that there is some relationship between Respondent and the Cominform; the Panel's conception (a) of Marxism-Leninism, (b) of the Comintern, (c) that Respondent's disaffiliation therefrom in 1940 was not real, and (d) that the formation of the Communist Political Association and the re-constitution of the CPUSA were on orders from Moscow.

Specifically with respect to the Panel's concept of Marxism-Leninism and its reliance thereon, Respondent argues that the decision in Schneiderman v. United States, 320 U. S. 118, "held that the principles of Marxism-Leninism, as expressed in classical Marxist-Leninist literature, could reasonably be understood so as to be consistent with being 'attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same.'" Further, it contends that it is a violation of the First Amendment and the holding in Dennis v. United States, 339 U. S. 162, to consider as evidence of "guilt" under the Act the belief in, or discussion of, Marxist-Leninist principles and literature (p. 57). After due study and deliberation of the foregoing decisions we conclude that they are in no sense res judicata of, or applicable to, the issues in this proceeding, nor do they in any way preclude the findings and disposition we have made herein. After consideration of these decisions we made detailed findings regarding Marxism-Leninism, which have been set forth above; they are based upon a preponderance of the evidence of record and we deem it unnecessary to discuss them further. Respondent's position with respect to the so-called "props" of the Recommended Decision is untenable. We have, however, considered these propositions and to the extent, and in the form, they appear in our findings in this report they are not subject to the infirmities alleged.

Respondent has repeatedly urged that the issue of whether it is a Communist-action organization must be resolved by evidence of its activities and status during the period between the effective date of the Act (September 23, 1950), and the date of the petition (November 23, 1950). Proceeding on this basis, it has continually attacked the reception and use of evidence pertaining to its activities and status prior to the Act. Initially, it raised the question concerning pre-Act evidence in its motion to dismiss the petition. In disposing of this contention we ruled in our Memorandum Opinion and Order of January 24, 1951, denying the motion, that evidence of conduct or activities which occurred prior to the passage of the Act may be of probative value to establish issues coming into existence after the effective date of the Act and, if so, could be received. Respondent now argues that the Panel, in its Recommended Decision, while giving "lip service" to the Board's ruling, completely "negatives" it by relying on a legal presumption of continuation of a condition. Respondent further argues that no such legal presumption exists when, as here, there has been a change of law (enactment of the Act) which attaches sanction to previously innocent conduct. It stresses that, if such a presumption existed, it was nevertheless "illegitimate" for the Panel to rely thereon in the face of the uncontradicted testimony of its witnesses. It further argues in this connection that the use of pre-Act evidence by the Panel amounted to an unconstitutional "ex post facto" application of the Act and was contrary to its provisions.

As is apparent, evidence relating to periods throughout Respondent's entire history has been received and properly so under our aforementioned ruling on this point. In order to resolve the issues presented here, it is advisable, if not necessary, to consider Respondent's entire existence.

In reaching our conclusion herein we have considered and weighed commensurately, therefore, such pre-Act evidence as reasonably tends to establish or illuminate to the present nature, activities, character and status of Respondent in connection with the issues presented for decision. We believe that in so doing there has been no violation of the Act itself or any ex post facto or other unconstitutional application thereof. As the Supreme Court of the United States has stated, "present events have roots in the past." This is particularly true in this proceeding where consideration thereof brought to light facts, and raised presumptions and inferences tending to show Respondent's true current purpose, as well as the nature of its present conduct. We have been able to trace Respondent's operations over more than thirty years into the present and have found that at no time during this period has Respondent changed its fundamental objectives, or its nature and purpose. There are no protestations of repentance and reform; and, though Respondent continually points to its "disaffiliation" from the Communist International, for example, as a severance of its relationship with international Communism, a study of its pre-Act existence properly enabled us to adjudge that this was, at most, only a superficial act designed in the interest of domestic political expediency to circumvent adverse legislation (Voorhis Act).

It would have been unwarranted by law to compel Petitioner to restrict its proof to fragmentary evidence confined to a relatively minute portion of Respondent's existence, i. e., the two-month period between the passage of the Act and the filing of the petition. Our determination on this question is supported by the authorities. United States v. Schneiderman, et al., 106 Fed. Supp. 892, 898-900; United States v. Dennis, et al., 183 F. 2d 201, 231-32; F. T. C. v. Cement Institute, et al., 333 U. S. 683, 704-706; N. L. R. B. v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 91 F. 2d 458, 459.

The law assumes in the absence of proof to the contrary, which Respondent did not establish to our satisfaction, that a condition or set of facts shown not too remotely in the past (all circumstances considered) to have existed, still continues. In the circumstances here presented we do not consider that the passage of the Act, in and of itself, affects this presumption respecting Respondent. In addition thereto, the record contains ample post-Act evidence which, when illuminated, supports our finding.

It should be noted in the latter connection that Respondent further contends that there is insufficient post-Act evidence in the record to support the Panel's finding against it. As this contention is really part and parcel of the foregoing, we shall not consider it further.

Suffice to say, our finding herein, that Respondent is a Communist-action organization, is clearly supported by a preponderance of the probative evidence of record.

Respondent also takes the position that Petitioner is required to prove the existence of a world Communist movement having the characteristics described in Section 2 of the Act, and that it has failed to do so. It asserts that the finding made by the Panel concerning the objective of the world Communist movement is irrelevant and unsupported by the evidence. In view of the fact that we have heretofore found on this record that a world Communist movement exists, substantially as described in Section 2 of the Act, it is unnecessary to discuss whether such a finding is required. The evidence stated in our findings on the world Communist movement[1] as well as the other findings in this report plainly establish the existence of an international Communist movement organized and directed by the Soviet Union, which conforms substantially to that described by the Congress in Section 2 of the Act. Respondent does not contend that there is more than one world Communist movement in existence and it is incorrect to state that the movement found herein is not sufficiently identified with that described in Section 2.

[1] Pp. 8 to 17, supra.

Throughout this proceeding Respondent has attached the constitutionality of the Act and has contended that it was being administered in an unconstitutional manner. As we have previously ruled, the constitutionality of the Act is not properly an issue before us; and we presume that the Act is constitutional. We shall, therefore, address Respondent, during the hearing, in its briefs, exceptions and supporting memorandum has persistently charged violations of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution. It contends that it violates the First Amendment to use as evidence, to base findings on, or to draw conclusions from its conduct and various statements relating to what it teaches in its schools, materials used in connection therewith such as books, study outlines and reading lists, statements by it or its leaders as contained in various publications including the Daily Worker, Political Affairs, and For a Lasting Peace, for a People's Democracy and the Marxist-Leninist Classics, and other important documents. On this basis it takes exception to statements in the Recommended Decision which, among others, are quotations from its various publications or Marxist-Leninist Classics, and to findings concerning the source, nature and content of Marxism-Leninism, the world Communist movement, its leader and its objective, as well as the finding that it is a Communist-action organization.

Respondent further contends that the various findings of the Recommended Decision together with the recommendation that the Board enter an order requiring it to register as a Communist-action organization violate the Fifth Amendment. As best we can ascertain, this contention, that due process of law has not been accorded it, has a dual aspect. The first is a corollary to Respondent's assertion that much of the evidence in this proceeding violates the First Amendment, and the other, that irrespective of this it is none the less violative of the Fifth Amendment to find against Respondent on this record. Moreover, Respondent argues that the testimony of Petitioner's witnesses who were "planted in the CPUS as FBI informers, should have been (sic) excluded under the First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendments."

Although it is extremely difficult in many instances to determine from Respondent's general allegations exactly the specific bases of its contention, we have reviewed these contentions with great care and have examined their many aspects as they apply to our report herein. We find that no violation of Respondent's constitutional rights has been committed in this proceeding. To adopt Respondent's theory of what comprises constitutionally protected conduct and expression would result in closing to Petitioner legal avenues of proof.

In conjunction with its contentions respecting violations of the Fifth Amendment we have also examined Respondent's general assertion, often repeated, that a fair and impartial hearing has not been accorded it. From our analysis of the record, we find that Respondent has been accorded a fair and impartial hearing, and a full measure of due process of law.

CONCLUSION.

The evidence in this proceeding discloses the history and activities of the Communist Party of the United States (Respondent herein) over the period of its entire existence. From its inception in 1919, it has been a subsidiary and puppet of the Soviet Union.

Since the late 1930's, when it was faced with adverse legislation, Respondent has become increasingly diligent and resourceful in its efforts to appear as a domestic political party while continuing its subservience to the Soviet Union. Many of its practices were contrived to conceal its revolutionary objectives. Thus, it continues as an avowed Marxist-Leninist organization but, except to initiates, disclaims so much of Marxism-Leninism as would endanger its continued legal existence to espouse. As in the present proceeding, this frequently entails disavowing the core of Marxism-Leninism.

Consequently, Respondent is met with the dilemma of appearing to reject but yet maintain its reason for being. As our findings in this report reveal, this dual role is so fundamentally incongruous as to be incapable of fulfillment under scrutiny. It is so innate in Respondent's nature that it seeks and accept Soviet Union direction and control that, in actuality, it does not function as the purely domestic political party whose role it would, de jure, assume. Rather, nurtured by the Soviet Union, it labors unstintingly to advance the world Communist movement.

With consummate patience, the Party strives for the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat in the United States; a goal which would rob the American people of the freedoms they have forged. While using the cloak of the United States Constitution, it struggles unremittingly to synthesize from the complexities of our time a condition in this country which would enable it to shackle our institutions and preside over a Soviet America, under the hegemony of the Soviet Union.

Upon the overwhelming weight of the evidence in this proceeding, we find that Respondent is substantially directed, dominated and controlled by the Soviet Union, which controls the world Communist movement referred to in Section 2 of the Act; and that Respondent operates primarily to advance the objectives of such world Communist movement.

Accordingly, we find that the Communist Party of the United States is a Communist-action organization and required to register as such with the Attorney General of the United States under Section 7 of the Act.

An appropriate order will be entered.

CODDAIRE, Member, (Concurring):

On the basis of the testimony, the documentary material, and the Recommended Decision, all of which I have carefully read and studied, I am fully in accord with and concur in the findings and in the determination that the Respondent herein, the Communist Party of the United States of America, is a Communist-action organization under subsection (3) of Section 3 of the Act and required to register as such under Section 7. Since the Respondent has attempted by its briefs and arguments to eviscerate the Act and this proceeding, and since issues of far-reaching importance have been raised, I deem it desirable to set forth my understanding as to the nature and scope of the Board's Order issued herein. Proper understanding of the nature and scope of the Board's Report and Order does much to eliminate Respondent's contentions against the Act and the application of the Act to the Respondent.

The Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 marks the beginning of a new stage in the development of public policy against un-American and subversive activities. The Board has been launched as a quasi-judicial agency for the carrying-out of the fact-finding and resultant adjudicatory aspects of a statutory scheme for, inter alia, identification of foreign dominated and foreign controlled organizations which operate in the United States primarily to carry out the evils found by Congress to be present in the world Communist movement.

Of particular importance are the facts that, in my opinion at least, registration proceedings before the Board are not criminal proceedings and reasonable registration in the public interest is not punishment. The result of the Board's order is not to outlaw the Communist Party nor is it punitive for past conduct. This proceeding is concerned solely with what amounts to the determination of a status. The order has, in effect, a forward-looking function aimed at registration or identification, as do many regulatory measures.

Respondent's main legal objections involve what it calls an improper use of pre-Act evidence, and a "built-in verdict" whereby under the Act the Board has no discretion other than to find as it has. These contentions, particularly when viewed against the nature and scope of the Board's Order as set forth above, are devoid of merit. The Board's Report treats with the question of pre-Act evidence and further elaboration is not necessary other than to emphasize that it is clearly proper, in my opinion, to base the determination of a status, or of characteristics, upon past and current facts whose weight we have strictly weighed.

Regarding the many arguments advanced by the Respondent in connection with its "built-in verdict" contention, the short answer is that the facts which have been ascertained in our Report, as established upon the formal record made in this proceeding, clearly and unequivocally show the Respondent to be a Communist-action organization as defined in the Act. Although there is no need for the Board to express an opinion on the constitutional questions raised by the Respondent, and I do not presume to do so, I can see nothing illegal per se in that the proofs in this proceeding establish the Respondent to be characteristically just the type of organization which the registration provision of the Act cover.

IN UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

No. 11,850

COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Petitioner

v.

SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES CONTROL BOARD, Respondent

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO ADDUCE ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE—Filed August 11, 1954

The Petitioner, by its attorneys, moves for leave to adduce additional evidence in the administrative proceeding before the Respondent. In support of this motion, Petitioner shows the following:

1. This motion is made pursuant to section 14(a) of the Internal Security Act of 1950, 50 U.S.C. 793, which contains the following provisions, among others, concerning proceedings on judicial review of registration orders issued by the Respondent, the Subversive Activities Control Board:

> "If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Board and to be adduced upon the proceeding in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Board may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by the preponderance of the evidence shall be conclusive, and its recommendations, if any, with respect to action in the matter under consideration."

2. The Petitioner possesses additional evidence material to this case. All of this evidence arose subsequent to the administrative proceeding and most of it subsequent to the submission of this case to the Court. This evidence, particularly when considered in the light of the entire record, [fol. 2054], will establish that the testimony of three of the witnesses for the Attorney General, on which the Respondent relied extensively and heavily in making findings which are of key importance to the order now under review, was false. The additional evidence which Petitioner desires to adduce is described in detail in the affidavit of John J. Abt, one of Petitioner's counsel, annexed to this motion as Exhibit A. In summary, this evidence will establish that Crouch, Johnson and Matusow, all professional informers heretofore employed by the Department of Justice as witnesses in numerous proceedings, have committed perjury, are completely untrustworthy and should be accorded no credence; that at least two of them are now being investigated for perjury by the Department of Justice, and that because their character as professional perjurors has now been conclusively and publicly demonstrated, the Attorney General has ceased to employ any of them as witnesses.

3. If this motion is granted, the Petitioner will introduce oral and documentary evidence to establish the facts set forth in the attached affidavit, including the testimony of Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, Harvey Matusow, a representative or representatives of the Department of Justice, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam, attorneys Russell Morton Brown and Robert J. Norvell, Cameron County, Texas, Judge Oscar D. Dancy, employees, past or present, of the Miami Herald and the Miami Daily News, Howard Rushmore of the New York Journal-American, Joseph Alsop, Stewart Alsop, a member or members of the International Organizations' Employees Loyalty Board, and others.

Since the evidence Petitioner seeks to adduce is clearly material to this proceeding, the Court should order, pursuant to section 14(a) of the Internal Security Act of 1950, that Petitioner be allowed to adduce such evidence and any related evidence before the Respondent, and that the Respondent thereafter file with the Court the record of the evidence so taken, its modified or new findings, if any, and [fol. 2055] its recommendations, if any.

Respectfully submitted,

Vito Marcantonio, John J. Abt, Joseph Forer, Attorneys for Petitioner.

[Certificate of Service omitted in printing]

[fol. 2056] EXHIBIT A TO MOTION

AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR LEAVE TO ADDUCE ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE

State of New York,
New York County, ss.

John J. Abt, being first duly sworn, deposes as follows:

1. I am one of the attorneys for the Petitioner and make this affidavit in support of its motion for leave to adduce additional evidence in this proceeding.

2. Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson and Harvey Matusow were three of the principal witnesses who testified on behalf of the Attorney General in this proceeding. Crouch testified on direct examination for almost five days, and his direct testimony occupies 387 pages of the typewritten transcript. Johnson testified on direct examination for two days, and his direct testimony occupies 163 pages of the typewritten transcript. Matusow testified on direct examination for one day, and his direct testimony occupies 118 pages of the typewritten transcript.

3. The Respondent relied extensively and heavily upon the direct testimony of these three witnesses to support its findings of fact. The annotated version of the Report of the Board, filed with the Court by the Respondent, reveals that Respondent supported its findings of fact with thirty-six separate references to the testimony of Crouch, twenty-five separate references to the testimony of Johnson and twenty-four separate references to the testimony of Matusow. An appendix attached to this affidavit contains an analysis of the annotated Report, indicating the pages on which these references to the testimony of Crouch, Johnson and Matusow appear, the pages of the Joint Appendix to which the references are made, and the subject matter of the testimony referred to.

4. As the attached appendix reveals, the Respondent relied on the direct testimony of these three witnesses to support material and, in many instances, key findings of [fol. 2057] fact. The following examples are merely illustrative of the importance which the Respondent attached to their testimony: The Respondent's key finding that Petitioner's 1940 disaffiliation from the Communist International did not alter Petitioner's relationship to that organization was based on the testimony of Crouch. (Annotated Report, 27, 12, 287; Petitioner's brief, 193-95.) The Respondent relied heavily on the testimony of Johnson for its findings that the authority of alleged representatives of the Communist International superseded that of Petitioner's elected leadership, that individuals could not hold positions of leadership in Petitioner without the approval of the Soviet Union, that the first and only allegiance of Communists is to the Soviet Union, and that in the event of war between the United States and the Soviet Union it would be the duty of every Communist to help defeat the United States. (Annotated Report, 110, 173, 229, 231.) Matusow was one of five out of the twenty-two witnesses called by the Attorney General who had been a member of the Communist Party subsequent to the date of the Act. The Respondent relied exclusively upon his opinion testimony to support its finding that Petitioner advocated the violent overthrow of the government in the post-Act period. (Annotated Report, 221; Respondent's brief, 119.) It also relied exclusively on his testimony for its finding that Petitioner received financial aid from the Soviet Union in 1949. (Annotated Report, 163.)

5. Crouch, Johnson and Matusow had all been members of the Communist Party. Crouch and Johnson are professional anti-Communist informers in the sense that they derive (or until recently derived) all of their income from anti-Communist testimony and activity. Matusow has derived substantial income from such testimony and activity. Prior to and at the time he testified in this proceeding and thereafter until May, 1954, Crouch was under contract with the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice as a witness in deportation cases. In addi-[fol. 2058] tion, he testified as a paid government witness in numerous Federal prosecutions of Communists and alleged Communists and appeared frequently as a witness before Congressional Committees investigating Communism. (Petitioner's Brief, 10, n. 14, 15. Subsequent to his appearance in this proceeding, Crouch continued his career as a professional informer and testified in a number of proceedings including the Smith Act trials in Baltimore, Hawaii, Philadelphia and St. Louis.) On information and belief, Crouch was paid by the Department of Justice for these services at the rate of $25.00 per day plus expenses. According to a statement made by him to a reporter for the Washington Daily News, he received more than $8000 from this source in 1953.

6. Johnson was employed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service as a so-called "analyst-consultant" at a salary of $20.00 per day at the time he appeared as a witness in this proceeding. He continued to be employed in that capacity until June or July, 1954, when as hereinafter stated on information and belief, his employment was terminated. His duties as an "analyst-consultant" consisted in testifying on behalf of the government in numerous cases, including deportation proceedings, loyalty matters and the prosecutions of Communists and alleged Communists. He also appeared as a witness before various Congressional Committees.

7. Matusow became a paid informer for the F.B.I. while still a member of the Petitioner. (Petitioner's brief, 10, n. 13; R. 13122.) After his expulsion from the Petitioner in 1951, he was employed as an investigator for the Committee on Un-American Activities of the Ohio Legislature and appeared as a witness before several Congressional Committees. (R. 13111-12, 13171-73.) He made his debut as a witness for the Department of Justice in this proceeding where he was paid the standard rate of $25.00 per day and expenses for his services. (R. 13140.) Subsequent to his appearance before the Board, he testified as a government witness in cases involving the prosecution of Communists and alleged Communists. He has also appeared as [fol. 2059] a frequent witness before Congressional Committees.

8. Cross examination by Petitioner of each of these professional informers developed a pattern of false statements both in their direct testimony in this proceeding and, in the case of Crouch and Johnson, in prior proceedings. Thus, Johnson admitted from the stand in this proceeding that he had testified falsely in previous cases in order to keep what he conceived to be a commitment to the F.B.I., and stated that he would not hesitate to do so again for the same purpose. (Petitioner's brief, 214; J.A. 669-74.) Again, Crouch testified that while he was a member of the California district bureau of Petitioner in the spring of 1941, he and the other bureau members planned, directed and prolonged a strike at the North American Aviation Company's Inglewood plant for the purpose of paralyzing the production of war planes for Britain and the United States. He further testified that immediately after the German invasion of the Soviet Union on June 22, 1941, the bureau gave orders to end the strike immediately so that production could be resumed at once, and that pursuant to this order the strike was terminated a week or ten days after June 22. (J.A. 444-46.) This story was shown to be false on cross examination when it was established from a news account in the New York Times that the strike had in fact been terminated and work resumed ten days prior to the German invasion. (R. 5967-71; C.P. Ex. 20.) In addition to these examples, the record is replete with instances in which the testimony of Johnson and Crouch in this proceeding was shown to be directly contradictory to their testimony in prior proceedings. It is further replete with instances in which it was shown that Crouch, Johnson and Matusow either embellished stories recounted by them in prior testimony or testified to incidents which they had never previously mentioned in their numerous prior appearances as witnesses. Finally, the attention of the Board was called to the fact that in Bridges v. United States, 199 F. 2d 811, 841, the Court of Appeals had rejected the testimony of both Crouch and Johnson that [fol. 2060] Bridges had been seen by them in attendance at a Communist Party convention in New York, inasmuch as unimpeachable documentary evidence established Bridges' presence in California at the time of his supposed attendance at the convention.

9. Despite the proven falsity of some of the testimony of these witnesses and the manifest untrustworthiness of all of it, the Respondent accepted their testimony on direct examination implicitly and uncritically (Petitioner's brief, 191-93, 212-13) and as previously shown drew upon it heavily for the findings of fact.

10. Developments subsequent to the proceeding before the Board, the most important of which occurred after the submission of this case to the Court, have established beyond doubt the untrustworthiness of these witnesses and the perjurious character of their testimony, and have compelled the Attorney General to abandon the use of Johnson and Crouch and, as affiant believes, of Matusow as witnesses. These developments, as to each of the three witnesses, are set forth on information and belief in the paragraphs that follow, with annotation showing the source of the information.

11. Crouch.

A. In April, 1954, Crouch testified as a witness for the government in the case of United States v. Kuzma, et al., a prosecution in Philadelphia for conspiracy to violate the Smith Act. One David Davis is a defendant in that case. Crouch, in his testimony, identified Davis as a Communist and testified with great particularity about his activities. Crouch testified that from 1928 through the mid-thirties he had seen Davis at Communist Party meetings, heard him make reports, watched him take notes, and joined with him in planning the infiltration of the armed forces. On cross examination, defense counsel produced the transcript of Crouch's 1949 testimony on behalf of the government in the case of United States v. Bridges, et al. (referred to above), a prosecution for alleged false statements that Harry Bridges was not a member of the Communist Party. On cross examination in that case, [fol. 2061] Crouch was repeatedly questioned about Davis and repeatedly stated that he had no knowledge of him, and that while he knew of other Davises in the Communist Party, he had never heard of David Davis. ("Matter of Fact," by Joseph and Stewart Alsop, New York Herald Tribune, May 19, 1954.)

B. In 1950, Crouch testified before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the California Legislature that, in 1941, he had attended a closed meeting of the Communist Party at the home of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer in Berkley, and that among those in attendance were Dr. Oppenheimer and Joseph W. Weinberg, a nuclear physicist. In September, 1952, Weinberg was indicted for perjury in the District of Columbia. One of the counts in that indictment, based on the Crouch testimony, was that Weinberg had falsely denied attendance at Communist Party meetings in testimony before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Investigations made by the defendant and Dr. Oppenheimer produced documentary evidence that established that neither of them was in or near Berkley at or about the time of the alleged meeting testified to by Crouch. When these facts were brought to the attention of the Assistant United States Attorney in charge of the matter, the count in question was dismissed. United States District Judge Holtzoff who presided at the Weinberg trial (in which the defendant was acquitted on the remaining counts) said of Crouch: "I am amazed that the Immigration and Naturalization Service should employ him as a member of its staff." ("Matter of Fact," by Joseph and Stewart Alsop, Washington Post and Times-Herald, April 16, 1954.)

C. In a brief filed with the Board of Immigration Appeals in December, 1953 and argued on June 24, 1954, in In the Matter of Jacob Burck, A.R. No. 4,587,587, counsel for Burck submitted the results of their investigation of a number of sworn statements made by Crouch as follows:

(1) Crouch testified (in In re Blichfeld, before the Immigration and Naturalization Service) that in 1946 he had discussed Communism with an F.B.I. agent in Brownsville, [fol. 2062] Texas, in the presence of County Judge Oscar C. Dancy who, according to Crouch, was his personal friend. However an affidavit by Judge Dancy denies this testimony in its entirety and states that he has never in his life met Crouch.

(2) Crouch testified in the Burck case that in 1946 he was employed in Florida as the state publicity director of the CIO and editor of the Union Record which he stated was the official organ of the CIO in Florida. However, affidavits of the leading officials of the Florida CIO state that there has never been such a post as CIO publicity director for the state and that the Union Record was never an official organ of the CIO.

(3) Crouch testified in the Burck case that in 1947 he became the editor of the Dade County, Florida, News. However, affidavits of the Dade County tax collector, the clerk of the circuit court, the postmaster and the editor of a local paper all state that there is no record that such a paper was ever in existence in the county.

(4) Crouch testified in the Burck case that in 1948, he was employed as an editor of the Miami Herald. However, affidavits from four responsible officers and employees of the Miami Herald state that Crouch was employed by it for five months in the teletype department—a mechanical department—and was at no time engaged in editorial or reportorial work.

(5) Crouch testified in the Burck case that his last employment before becoming a professional witness was with the Miami Daily News where he was employed in a supervisory capacity in connection with copy production and, in addition, wrote feature articles from time to time. However, affidavits from five responsible officers and employees of the Miami Daily News state that Crouch was employed by it for nine months exclusively as a tape-cutter in the teletype punching room, that he was never employed in a supervisory capacity, had nothing to do with copy production, and did no writing for the paper whatsoever. (Brief and affidavits In re Burck, referred to above.)

[fol. 2063] E. In May, 1934, Joseph and Stewart Alsop, syndicated newspaper columnists who had written a number of articles exposing the dubious role of Crouch and other professional informers employed by the Department of Justice, wrote a widely publicized column describing Crouch's false testimony in the Kuzma case and requested the Attorney General to investigate Crouch's credibility. Thereupon, the Attorney General announced that the Department of Justice was undertaking such an investigation. On June 24, 1954, immediately after the oral argument in the Burck case, the Attorney General further announced that the evidence of Crouch's alleged perjurious testimony presented to the Board of Immigration Appeals in that case would be added to the study of Crouch which was then under way in the Department. ("Matter of Fact", New York Herald Tribune, May 19, 1954; Washington Post and Times-Herald, June 25, 1954.)

F. On May 28, 1954, as a result of the charges made against Crouch and the pending investigation of his testimony by the Department of Justice, the Department cancelled his scheduled appearance as a witness before the Board in the pending proceeding against the Veterans of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade. Since that date, Crouch has not received any pay from or appeared as a witness for the Department. In retaliation for the discontinuance of his services and pay, Crouch, on June 30, 1954, wrote a letter to the Director of the F. B. I. requesting an investigation of the members of the Attorney General's staff responsible for this action. Thereafter, he requested the Senate Committee on Government Operations and the Senate Judiciary Committee to investigate Attorney General Brownell and Assistant Attorney General Rogers, charging that the pending investigation of his credibility has given aid and comfort to enemies of the United States and might require the reopening of some sixty hearings and trials in which he had been a principal witness, including this proceeding. (Washington Daily News, July 1, 1954; New York Times, July 9, 1954.)

12. Johnson.

A. On May 25, 1954, the International Organizations [fol. 2064] Employees Loyalty Board conducted a hearing with respect to the loyalty of Dr. Ralph J. Bunche. Johnson was one of the two persons responsible for the charges against Dr. Bunche and testified at the hearing. Johnson testified that Bunche had been a member of the Communist Party in the 1930's and that in 1934 he and Bunche had attended a closed strategy meeting of leading Negro Communists in Washington, D. C. This testimony was flatly denied by Dr. Bunche and by a witness who had been present at the meeting in question. The Loyalty Board rejected Johnson's testimony and announced that it had completely cleared Dr. Bunche of all the charges against him. Thereafter, the chairman of the Loyalty Board transmitted the transcript of the hearing to the Department of Justice with the request that Johnson's testimony be investigated for possible perjury. The requested investigation is now under way in the Department. ("Matter of Fact," by Joseph and Stewart Alsop, New York Herald Tribune, July 2, 1954; id., Washington Post and Times-Herald, July 11, 1954.)

B. On July 1, 1954, the Department of Justice terminated Johnson's employment, and the Department has discontinued the use of his services as a witness. (New York Journal-American, July 6, 1954; Daily Worker, July 8, 1954.)

13. Matusow.

A. In June, 1954, the press reported that Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam had stated in speeches made in Westminister, Maryland and Evanston, Illinois that Matusow had recently told him that he, Matusow, had undergone a religious experience, that he had "lied, and lied for the committees" and "wanted to undo all the lies I have told." (Washington Post and Times-Herald, July 13, 1954.) Subsequently, in an interview with the press on July 13, 1954, Bishop Oxnam stated (id., July 14, 1954):

> "The truth is that Mr. Matusow told he had had a religious experience and was seeking each person about whom he had falsified in order to apologize and get right with the people he had harmed. He told me he had [fol. 2065] lied concerning numerous individuals."

B. On July 30, 1954, the Commission on Public Relations and Methodist Information of the Methodist Church released to the press the text of a letter from J. Howard McGrath, the former United States Attorney General, to Charles C. Parlin, attorney for Bishop Oxnam, stating the following facts: Late in April, 1954, Matusow was interviewed by Russell Brown and Robert Norvell, law associates of McGrath. Matusow stated to them that he had lied about many people concerning their connection with Communism and that he was writing a book to be entitled "Blacklisting (or Blackmailing) Was My Business" which would expose and detail his false statements connecting various persons with Communism. In a memorandum dictated after the interview, Brown stated:

> "He (Matusow) said in so many words, 'You should know that I am not to be trusted under any circumstances. I have betrayed everybody who ever befriended me. If I give you some information which is helpful, you check it 100% because I don't even trust myself.' "

(Copy of press release referred to above.)

C. As a result of the foregoing incidents, affiant believes that the Department of Justice will discontinue the use of Matusow as a witness.

14. The compelling reasons for granting Petitioner's motion were cogently stated in a New York Times editorial entitled "The Informers", published on July 8, 1954, which reads in part as follows:

"The real problem of the informer arises . . . when questions of a man's personal life, his thoughts, opinions or political activities are under scrutiny. Here is where employment of the informer may become dangerous to individual rights and liberties. The informer smacks of the police state; and we think that most [fol. 2066] Americans instinctively shrink from his use. It is reasonable to suppose that the professional, paid informers, such as those on the rolls of the Justice Department who can be said to make their living at this game, feel the necessity of continuing to 'produce' if they are not to give up their lucrative occupation.

". . . Some informers have been caught in direct contradictions of testimony that smell strongly of perjury. If the Justice Department feels it essential to use informers in the conduct of its anti-Communist prosecutions under the law, it has the unmistakable duty to follow up relentlessly any indication that they may not be telling the truth. As the law-enforcement agency of our government, the Justice Department has a primary obligation to maintain its own integrity and that of its agents."

IN UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

[Title omitted]

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR LEAVE TO ADDUCE ADDITIONAL EVIDENCE—Filed August 20, 1954

STATEMENT

Pursuant to section 14(a) of the Internal Security Act of 1950, the Communist Party of the United States of America, petitioner herein, has moved the Court to order that the petitioner be allowed to adduce additional evidence before the Subversive Activities Control Board and that the Board thereafter file with the Court the record of the evidence so taken, its modified or new findings, if any, and its recommendations, if any.

In support of its motion, the petitioner alleges that it is in possession of additional evidence which will establish that the testimony of three of the witnesses called by the Attorney General was false. It further states that all of this evidence arose subsequent to the administrative proceeding and that most of it arose subsequent to the sub-[fol. 2070] mission of this case to the Court. The additional evidence which is the subject matter of the instant motion is set forth in paragraphs 11, 12, and 13 of an affidavit attached to the motion. It is readily apparent that the additional evidence is confined entirely to collateral matters which, at most, bear on credibility. None of the additional evidence touches the substance of the testimony before the Board of the witnesses in question. None of the additional evidence is concerned with issues of fact determined by the Board.

I. The Hearing Should Not Be Reopened for the Receipt of Evidence Merely Going to the Issue of Credibility and Not to Any Fact at Issue.

An application for leave to adduce additional evidence before an administrative tribunal is addressed to sound judicial discretion. Southport Petroleum Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 315 U.S. 100 (1942). Stated generally, the tests to be applied in determining the merits of such an application are the materiality of the evidence sought to be adduced and the sufficiency of the grounds for failure to produce such evidence at the hearing. Strauss v. Berkshire, 8 Cir., 1943, 132 F. 2d 530.

It is submitted that where the additional, or after-discovered, evidence merely goes to the issue of credibility and not to any fact at issue, the hearing should not be reopened for its reception. In National Labor Relations Board v. J. S. Popper, Inc., 3 Cir., 1940, 113 F. 2d 602, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit so ruled, holding that the National Labor Relations Board had correctly refused to reopen a hearing to receive impeaching evidence, going solely to the issue of credibility and not to any fact at issue. The Court in its reasoning pointed out that there was an analogy to United States v. Parker, 3 [fol. 2071] Cir., 1938, 103 F. 2d 857, 863, a criminal case which ruled that after-discovered evidence merely affecting credibility would not justify a new trial.

While the petitioner's motion to reopen the hearing for the taking of additional evidence is not, strictly speaking, a motion for a new trial based upon newly discovered evidence, it strongly partakes of the nature of the latter. Especially is this true since the testimony has been closed more than twenty-five months, the Board has made its determination, and the matter has been briefed and argued before this Court. Certainly the rationale for the determination of either motion is the same, namely, the requirement of a full and fair hearing consistent with the avoidance of unwarranted and unnecessary delay in the judicial process. The criteria for the awarding of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence would appear to be pertinent to the disposition of a motion to reopen an administrative hearing for the taking of additional evidence.

This Court has set forth those criteria succinctly in United States v. Thompson, D. C., 1951, 188 F. 2d 652, as follows:

> (1) The evidence must have been discovered since the trial;

(2) the party seeking the new trial must show diligence in the attempt to procure the newly discovered evidence;

(3) the evidence relied on must not be merely cumulative or impeaching;

(4) the evidence must be material to the issues involved;

(5) the evidence must be of such a nature that in a new trial it would probably change the result.

[fol. 2072] In the Thompson case, the newly discovered evidence tended to discredit the only prosecution witness. Yet this Court affirmed the denial of the motion by the lower court. Subsequently, in Murphy v. United States, D. C., 1952, 198 F. 2d 87, this Court followed the Thompson case in a similar circumstance, saying in a per curiam opinion:

> "As this court has said in Thompson v. United States, 1951, 88 U.S. App. D.C. 235, 188 F. 2d 652, to obtain a new trial because of newly discovered evidence, the evidence relied on must not be merely cumulative or impeaching."

It is abundantly clear from the moving papers of the petitioner that it seeks to have the hearing reopened solely for the reception of material bearing on the credibility of three of the twenty-two witnesses called by the Attorney General. In each instance, the additional evidence which the petitioner asks leave to adduce pertains to collateral matters not at issue in the proceedings before the Board. No additional evidence is alleged which controverts the affirmative testimony upon which the Board based any of its findings. This is a fact despite the bold claim in the petitioner's motion that the additional evidence will establish that the testimony of three witnesses was false. A reopening of the hearing would result in further delay in the final determination of an already lengthy matter for the sole purpose of trying collateral matters unconnected with the issues involved.

II. The Three Witnesses in Question Were Subjected to Lengthy and Searching Cross-Examination at the Time of the Hearing on the Issue of Credibility.

The witnesses Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, and Harvey Matusow were each cross-examined at length at the time of the hearing. As an examination of the record will disclose, wide latitude was permitted petitioner's counsel [fol. 2073] in their cross-examination. The affidavit accompanying the motion of the petitioner points out that the direct testimony of Paul Crouch occupies 387 pages of typewritten transcript. It is also true that his cross-examination occupies 810 pages. As the petitioner points out, the direct testimony of Manning Johnson occupies 163 pages of typewritten transcript; however, his cross-examination covers 194 pages. Finally, while the direct testimony of Harvey Matusow occupies 118 pages, according to the petitioner, his cross-examination occupies 102 pages.

Most of the cross-examination of these witnesses was on collateral matters and was obviously designed to shake their credibility. Further evidence of a collateral nature and further cross-examination on collateral matters would be cumulative and would accomplish nothing. Certainly a reopening of the hearing for such a purpose would be unwarranted, and would accord neither with the dictates of common sense nor the requirements of law.

III. The Findings of the Board Are Supported by Ample Evidence of Testimonial and Documentary Character Apart from the Testimony of the Three Witnesses Sought to Be Discredited.

Contrary to the impression which the petitioner seeks to convey by its moving papers, the testimony of Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, and Harvey Matusow was not of decisive importance at the hearing. Their testimony can be ignored in toto and the ultimate determination of the Board will remain amply supported by evidence both testimonial and documentary in character. The case presented by the Attorney General is supported by the testimony of twenty witnesses and by more than four hundred and sixty documents. It is apparent from the record and from the Annotated Report of the Board that the result reached would be the same without the testimony of Crouch, Johnson, and Matusow.

[fol. 2074] In paragraph 4 of the affidavit accompanying its motion, the petitioner asserts that the Board relied on the testimony of Crouch, Johnson, and Matusow to support material and key findings of fact. The petitioner has attached an appendix setting forth the instances in which testimony of these witnesses were cited in support of Board findings; and it has described, in paragraph 4 of the affidavit, what it calls "merely illustrative" examples of the importance which the Board attached to their testimony. As will be demonstrated herein, even these "illustrative" examples, which it is reasonable to assume constitute the petitioner's principal showing, are amply supported by other credible evidence of record in all but one instance. Such other evidence would substantiate the Board's findings in these particulars even were the testimony of the questioned witnesses ignored.

A. The Illustrative Examples

1. Paul Crouch

The petitioner asserts that the Board's finding that the petitioner's 1940 disaffiliation from the Communist International did not alter its relationship to that organization is based upon the testimony of Paul Crouch. The direct evidence upon which the finding is based is found on pages 26 and 27 of the Annotated Report. As is plainly demonstrated on those pages, the witnesses John Lautner and Frank Meyes, as well as Crouch, testified to the effect that the organizational disaffiliation of the petitioner was one of expediency, that it did not change fundamentally the petitioner's relationship with the Soviet Union, and that it in no way affected the petitioner's attitude on the question of proletarian internationalism. This matter was raised by the petitioner at pages 193-195 of its brief filed with this Court, and it is fully discussed in the brief of the respondent, pages 123-125.

It is apparent that the testimony of Paul Crouch is corroborated in substance by that of two other witnesses who formerly held important positions with the petitioner. [fol. 2075] Although the testimony of Crouch is credible and entitled to weight, it is not indispensable to the finding.

2. Manning Johnson

a. It is stated in the affidavit that the Board relied heavily on the testimony of Manning Johnson for its finding that the authority of representatives of the Communist International superseded that of the petitioner's elected leadership. This statement in substance is found at page 110 of the Annotated Report. The Report itself points out that Johnson's statement is but one example. Another, immediately following in the Report, reads: "Similarly, Petitioner's witness Lautner shows that when a Comintern representative spoke at Party meetings, no one questioned his decisions and they were accepted as the Party line." An actual instance of a Comintern representative, Gerhart Eisler, exercising authority over the leadership of the petitioner is taken from the testimony of Joseph Kornfeder and set forth on pages 111 and 112 of the Annotated Report. At the risk of belaboring the point, attention is invited to the striking testimony of Benjamin Gitlow to the effect that a factional struggle in the petitioner was resolved in Moscow, and representatives of the Comintern with power to nullify any decision of any committee of the petitioner and to expel any member were sent to implement the solution (Annotated Report, pp. 25, 104).

It is obvious from a perusal of the Annotated Report that the findings concerning the existence, activity, and authority of Comintern representatives in the United States are based upon a multitude of evidence from many sources. (e.g., Annotated Report, pp. 22-25, 104, 109-112). These findings are not dependent upon the testimony of Johnson to any material degree.

b. According to the petitioner, the Board relied heavily on the testimony of Johnson in finding that individuals could not hold positions of leadership in the petitioner [fol. 2076] without the approval of the Soviet Union. On page 173 of the Annotated Report, the Board, in treating the subject of reporting to the Soviet Union, stated, "As positions of leadership in Respondent could not be held without approval of the Soviet Union, advancement in the Party depended in part upon the reflection of a member's work in these reports." Testimony of Johnson is cited as a pilot citation to a finding which is based upon a considerable quantity of other evidence of record set forth in other sections of the Annotated Report. For example, Stalin's settlement of the above-mentioned factional dispute of 1929 whereby the leadership of the minority faction was placed in control of the petitioner is strong support for the statement (Annotated Report, pp. 25, 26, 187). Further support will be found at pages 188 and 189 of the Annotated Report.

The pilot reference to Johnson's testimony at page 173 of the Board's Annotated Report is a minor portion of the evidence upon which the Board found that leadership in the petitioner required the approval of the Soviet Union.

e. The petitioner further claims that the Board relied heavily on the testimony of Johnson for findings that the first and only allegiance of Communists is to the Soviet Union, and that in the event of war between the United States and the Soviet Union, it would be the duty of every Communist to help defeat the United States.

In its Annotated Report, the Board devoted eighteen pages to the subject of allegiance, culminating in the finding that the leaders and members of the Communist Party "consider the allegiance they owe to the United States as subordinate to their loyalty and obligations to the Soviet Union." (Annotated Report, pp. 215-233). This finding and the subsidiary findings pointed to by the petitioner are based upon extensive and varied testimonial and documentary evidence, as the briefest glance at the cited pages of the Annotated Report will show. That the contribution of Johnson's testimony is merely cumulative [fol. 2077] and corroborative and in no sense necessary to the findings cannot reasonably be disputed. It was not heavily relied on.

3. Harvey Matusow

a. In paragraph 4 of the affidavit accompanying the petitioner's motion, it is alleged that the Board relied exclusively upon the opinion testimony of Harvey Matusow to support its finding that the petitioner advocated the violent overthrow of the Government in the post-Act period. Once again, the petitioner has overstated the facts. In finding that the petitioner advocates forceful overthrow, the Board relied to a great extent on the contents of the so-called classics of Marxism-Leninism and on their continued use in the post-Act period, in addition to the testimony of witnesses whose membership spanned the entire existence of the Party (Annotated Report, pp. 216-222). There can be little doubt that the Board would have made the same finding with complete justification had there been no testimony by Matusow before it.

b. The affidavit further states that the Board relied exclusively on Matusow's testimony for its finding that the petitioner received financial aid from the Soviet Union in 1949. This is true. However, as the Board pointed out on page 137 of its brief filed with this Court, the finding on financial aid is a comparatively unimportant one in relation to the whole record. Surely it cannot be reasonably argued that the presence or absence of the Matusow testimony would affect the result reached by the Board.

B. The Analytical Appendix

In an appendix attached to the affidavit as a part of the petitioner's moving papers, there is listed in tabular form references to the testimony of Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, and Harvey Matusow as found in the Annotated Report. The affidavit contains the information that these references total thirty-six in the case of Crouch, twenty-[fol. 2078] five in the case of Johnson, and twenty-four in the case of Matusow. It is highly likely that were identical tabulations made in the case of each of the seventeen other witnesses providing the bulk of the testimony presented by the Attorney General a similar result would be forthcoming. It would not be unreasonable to expect that certain of the others would tabulate significantly higher in number of references. There is no doubt that documentary evidence would tabulate much higher. There are literally hundreds and perhaps thousands of citations in the Annotated Report. The futility of engaging in the awesome task of making such tabulations, which when completed prove nothing of real aid to the determination of the petitioner's motion, would militate against it even if time permitted.

Investigation of the individual references in the appendix demonstrates that in most instances they are accompanied by citations to the testimony of other witnesses and to documentary evidence in substantiation of the same point. In most instances, the citations to Crouch, Johnson, or Matusow could be stricken and ample authority would remain. This Court can easily satisfy itself that the above is true by checking a few of the references at random. Beyond showing that the testimony of the three witnesses in question was used by the Board in its Report, the tabulation proves nothing.

It should be borne in mind that the conclusion of the Board that the petitioner is a Communist-action organization, as defined in section 3 of the Internal Security Act of 1950, is arrived at on the basis of a number of subsidiary findings which comport with the criteria set forth in section 13(e) of the Act. These subsidiary findings in turn depend upon a vast number of individual findings of fact. Were the testimony of Paul Crouch, Manning Johnson, and Harvey Matusow entirely absent from the record, a relative few of the myriad individual findings might be disturbed. [fol. 2079] The effect could be no greater. It is nonsense to maintain that the result would be in any way changed. The petitioner would still be found a Communist-action organization by overwhelming evidence. A hearing should not be reopened for the reception of evidence which could not change the result. National Labor Relations Board v. J. S. Popper, supra; cf., United States v. Thompson, supra.

Conclusion

An administrative hearing should not be reopened for the taking of additional evidence which goes solely to issue of credibility in collateral matters, which does not controvert a single fact at issue in the administrative proceeding, and which could not change the result. For these reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the motion of the petitioners should be denied.

Respectfully submitted, (S.) George R. Gallagher, to General Counsel, Subversive Activities Control Board; (S.) Carl H. Imlay, Attorney, Department of Justice; William F. Tompkins, Assistant Attorney General, Internal Security Division; Harold D. Koffsky, B. Franklin Taylor, Jr., Attorneys, Department of Justice.

Before PRETTYMAN, BAZELON and DANAHER, Circuit Judges.

PRETTYMAN, Circuit Judge: This is a petition to review an order of the Subversive Activities Control Board, which holds that petitioner is a Communist-action organization within the meaning of the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950 [1] (Section 3)[2] and as such must register pursuant to the provisions of that Act.[3] The proceeding before the Board was initiated by a petition filed by the Attorney General. Testimony was received by a panel of the Board, the Attorney General presenting twenty-two witnesses and the Party-respondent three witnesses. Documentary evidence was introduced, briefs, proposed findings, and reply briefs were filed, and oral argument was heard. The panel issued a recommended decision, and exceptions to it were filed. Oral argument was had before the full Board, and the Board issued a report and the order here under review.

Petitioner's attack is in three parts, one on the Act itself, one on the order of the Board, and the third on "other reversible errors". In Part One of petitioner's brief the Act is asserted to be invalid upon four grounds. These are: The Act is an outlawry statute, designed to outlaw the Communist Party by legislative fiat; the Act violates the due process clause and is also a bill of attainder; the Act violates the constitutional prohibition against compulsory self-incrimination; and the Act violates the First Amendment. In Part Two of the brief the order of the Board is said to be invalid upon three grounds. The first ground is that the Board so applied the provisions of Section 13(e)[4] of the Act as to magnify their irrationality. The second ground is that the Board violated the First Amendment. The third ground is that the Board members were subjected to extra-legal pressures and were biased. Part Three of the brief presents six additional assertedly reversible errors. They are: (1) The order is based upon conduct prior to the Act; (2) the Board's findings as to petitioner's pre-Act conduct are based upon incompetent and discredited evidence; (3) the findings with reference to the world Communist movement are not supported by evidence; (4) the findings with reference to the facts are not supported by a preponderance of the evidence; (5) the order must be set aside if it is invalid upon any ground; and (6) the appointments to the Board were made in violation of the Constitution.

We shall not follow petitioner's arrangement of its contentions, but in the course of our consideration we will deal with them all. Because this is a case of first impression, involving a new statute of importance, and because the points of both law and fact are many and vigorously pressed, our discussion will be at some length.

We look first at the statute. It opens with findings of the existence and the nature of "a world Communist movement" in a long recitation of fifteen paragraphs dealing with the nature of the movement abroad and in the United States. The Act defines a Communist-action organization. It declares certain actions to be unlawful. These actions are three in number: (1) for any person to agree with another person to contribute to the establishment in this country of a totalitarian dictatorship controlled by a foreign organization (except by constitutional amendment); (2) for an officer or employee of the United States to communicate to any agent of a foreign government or of any Communist organization any information classified as affecting the security of this country; and (3) for any foreign or Communist agent to receive such information. The next two sections of the Act contain certain prohibitions directed to members of organizations registered under the Act. Then the Act requires the registration of Communist-action and Communist-front organizations, annual reports from such organizations, and registration of members of Communist-action organizations. It provides that the Attorney General keep public registers of Communist organizations. The Act prohibits certain privileges to registered organizations. It establishes the Board and provides for proceedings before it. It delineates a series of considerations which must be made by the Board. It provides for judicial review. Penalties for violation of the Act are provided. A series of amendments to other statutes, such as the Nationality Act of 1940 and the Alien Registration Act of 1940, are made. The last section of the Act is a separability provision.

I

We reject the Government's contention that we must consider the statute as a registration measure only. The argument is that: The several statutory provisions are separable; the Board's power is to require registration and no more; its order does no more than that; therefore the statute and the order must be treated by us as involving registration and no more. It is true that the provisions of this statute are separable. The Act contains a separability section [5] reading:

> "SEC. 32. If any provision of this title, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remaining provisions of this title, or the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

[5] Sec. 32, 64 STAT. 1019.

And so, if one provision of this Act is invalid, its fall would not necessarily drag down the remainder of the Act; all other provisions would remain unaffected. But that is not the point of the Government's contention. The Government contends that each provision,[6] even if all are valid, must be treated separately from the others, as though each were an independent enactment unrelated to the others. The question whether one section of a statute can stand when other sections are invalid, and the question whether one valid section of a statute can be treated separately and independently of all other valid sections, are two different questions. The former would raise a separability question. The latter is governed by the elementary rule that a statute must be considered as a whole, in its entirety, all parts together.[7] The Government's argument is, in effect, that this statute is not an integrated unit but is a collection of separate measures. But we think this is not that sort of statute. The mandatory provisions, called "sanctions" in this litigation, in Sections 5, 6, 10 and 11,[8] are attached directly to registration. For example, if an organization is registered, or ordered to register, its mail must be marked and its broadcasts identified. We cannot strip the registration of its attachments. We cannot consider the registration requirement as though it were [6] The Government agrees that the disclosure of information required by Section 7(d) may well be considered with the registration requirement.

[7] CRAWFORD, STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION § 165 (1940); cases collected and cited at 50 AM. JUR., Statutes § 352.

[8] "Sanctions" were also imposed by Sections 22 and 25 upon alien members of a registered organization, but those sections have been superseded by the Immigration and Nationality Act of June 27, 1952, 66 STAT. 163, 8 U.S.C.A. §§ 1182, 1251, 1424, 1451.

bare, when it is not bare either in the statute or in factual consequences.

The Government relies upon Electric Bond Co. v. Comm'n.[9] That case involved the validity of those sections of the Utility Holding Company Act which required registration. It was urged that those sections and various other control provisions were an integrated whole and had to be considered together, as though interdependent one upon the other. The Supreme Court held that both the structure of the Act and the intent of Congress were clear that each provision had a purpose and effect of its own, that the provisions constituted groups of regulations, and that as a practical matter they could be sustained and enforced separately. It held that the statute was not an integrated unit. We think the statute now before us is an integrated unit, although invalid sections may be excised. We must treat the registration requirement as though it involves the sanctions in Sections 5, 6, 10 and 11.[10]

We later point out that Section 8, providing for registration by individual members of an organization, is not attached to organization registration but on the contrary applies when the organization does not register. We think it a separate measure from organization registration.

In the disposition of the problems presented to us we will follow the course indicated by the foregoing. We will consider the so-called "sanction" and other provisions which depend upon or flow from registration of the organization. In so far as such sections are valid we will treat them as integrated with the registration requirement and thus involved in the order before us. In so far as any of such provisions are invalid they may be excised, being severable, and the valid remainder will constitute the integrated unit. We will lay aside consideration of provisions which do not depend upon organization registration but are in lieu of or take effect in the absence of such registration. Factual bases for consideration of such sections are not before us.

We also quickly dispose of contentions by petitioner that the statutory procedures, as procedures, are inadequate or otherwise invalid. Full administrative hearing (Section 13), full findings (Section 13), and full judicial review (Section 14) are provided. There is no insufficiency in this respect so far as the statute is concerned.

II

The basic provision of the statute, as it concerns the present litigation, is that a Communist-action organization must register with the Attorney General. Such an organization is defined by the statute [11] as follows:

> "(3) The term 'Communist-action organization' means—
>
> "(a) any organization in the United States (other than a diplomatic representative or mission of a foreign government accredited as such by the Department of State) which (i) is substantially directed, dominated, or controlled by the foreign government or foreign organization controlling the world Communist movement referred to in section 2 of this title, and (ii) operates primarily to advance the objectives of such world Communist movement as referred to in section 2 of this title; and
>
> "(b) any section, branch, fraction, or cell of any organization defined in subparagraph (a) of this paragraph which has not complied with the registration requirements of this title."

[11] Sec. 3, 64 STAT. 989, 50 U.S.C.A. § 782.

Congress defined "the world Communist movement" in several paragraphs in Section 2. of the statute. It is enough for our purposes to quote paragraph (1):

> "(1) There exists a world Communist movement which, in its origins, its development, and its present practice, is a world-wide revolutionary movement whose purpose it is, by treachery, deceit, infiltration into other groups (governmental and otherwise), espionage, sabotage, terrorism, and any other means deemed necessary, to establish a Communist totalitarian dictatorship in the countries throughout the world through the medium of a world-wide Communist organization."

For the purpose of testing the validity of the statute itself, as a statute, we must assume that the conditions with which it purports to deal actually exist. The question upon validity is: If the conditions recited in the statute as necessary requisites for action under the statute do actually exist, is the statutory plan for dealing with them valid? The question whether a certain organization is subject to the statute is a different and separate question.

We turn first to the general power of government in the premises. Antipathy to domination or control by a foreign government, or even to interference on the part of a foreign government, is a basic policy in this nation. It was one of the compelling reasons for the making of the Constitution in replacement of the Confederation. Frequent references were made to it in the Constitutional Convention. Mr. Madison went all the way back to the intrigues practiced among the Amphictionic Confederates by the kings of Persia as a citation of the danger of foreign interference.[12] It was the premise of the action of the Government, through President Washington, in respect to Citizen Genet. It ran through the War of 1812 and the Monroe Doctrine, the fight over the League of Nations, and down to such qualms as there are concerning the United Nations. This country has always unequivocally repudiated any action which has seemed to contain the element of foreign control over our governmental affairs. To declare unconstitutional a statute which would require the registration of an organization, substantially directed, dominated or controlled by a foreign government or by an organization such as the world Communist movement defined in this statute, would be to deny one of the purposes and one of the best-established policies of the government which was created by the Constitution. This is true whether or not the foreign government is coupled with a particular movement.

Self-preservation is a high prerogative of any sovereignty. "Security against foreign danger is one of the primitive objects of civil society," wrote James Madison in the Fortieth Federalist paper. And he continued, "It is an avowed and essential object of the American Union." It seems to us that, however high in priority the right of self-preservation is among the prerogatives of sovereign powers in general, it is peculiarly so in respect to the Federal Government presently established in this country. As we conceive the matter, the government established by our Constitution is an instrument for service, particularly for the protection of the security of the people whose servant it is; it is a working tool the value of which lies in its usefulness. It was established by the people themselves; it did not arise of its own accord; it was not imposed from without. Since it was created by the people for the security of the people, especially against foreign encroachment, it has supreme duties both to protect its own existence and to insure that unidentified efforts on behalf of foreign agencies devoted to its disestablishment do not occur. It seems clear beyond question that, if the conditions described in this statute do actually exist, the presently existing Federal Government has power to prohibit within its borders activity of the sort described; a fortiori it has power to require identification of such activities and to impose conditions short of proscription. If there is a world movement for the destruction of all presently existing national governments and for the establishment of a world dictatorship under Communist auspices, and if a given organization in this country is actually under the control of the leaders of that movement and is acting to achieve its objectives, we perceive no reason why the presently existing government in this country should not prohibit the unidentified activity of such an organization or withdraw from its members protections and privileges otherwise afforded by that government. We perceive no basic reason why that government must stand helpless before activities such as those described in this statute.

III

We come next to the place of the First Amendment in our problem. The initial inquiry is a general question whether the subject matter of the statute is such that impingement upon First Amendment rights may be imposed. If the answer to that query be affirmative, the next inquiry is a specific question whether the restrictions imposed by the statute are reasonably calculated to effectuate the remedial purposes being sought and so are valid although impingements upon the protected rights. We discuss this latter question later in this opinion.

We make the same assumption here that we made in Barsky v. United States.[13] We assume, without deciding, that this statute will interfere with freedoms of speech and assembly. It does not interfere in terms, but we think a realistic view must be taken of restrictions on First Amendment freedoms, and realistically the registration and sanction provisions will erect restrictions upon what otherwise might be a wider latitude of expression. The problem is whether the restrictions imposed are valid in this situation.

In the Party's argument an effort is made to cast the entire controversy over Communism into the form of an ideological or philosophical difference of opinion. It is true that there are such differences of opinion in respect to Communism, and controversy does rage in ideological and philosophical circles. But the problem before us deals with government, and government has intensely practical as well as theoretical aspects. Its aspects may be freely discussed in philosophical dissertations, but in the field of action a government must be realistic and factual. The right to free expression ceases at the point where it leads to harm to the Government. The epigram which has become classic as a designation of that point is "clear and present danger". When danger to government is clear and present, the right of unrestricted speech gives way as do the other basic rights of liberty and life. The "clear" in that epigram is not limited to a threat indubitably etched in every microscopic detail. It includes that which is not speculative but real, not imagined but actual. The "present" in the epigram is not restricted to the climactically imminent. It includes that which exists as contrasted with that which does not yet exist and that which has ceased to exist.

The activities of a world Communist movement such as that described in this statute and of organizations in this country devoted to its objectives constitute a clear and present danger within the meaning of any definition of the point at which freedom of speech gives way to the requirements of government security. The basic theory of Communism that all presently existing nationalist governments be superseded by a stateless world organization under a proletarian dictatorship, the domination of one world power with all its assets by the Communists, the succession of national capitulations to the forces of that group, and the declared intentions of its leaders in respect to the remainder of the world, are reflected in the recitations in this statute and, moreover, are historic facts which cannot be disputed. We cannot at the present time treat the program and policies of the world Communist movement as a dialectic debate.

A few references will support the proposition. In the Dennis case [14] the Supreme Court considered the statute (known as the Smith Act) in which Congress made it unlawful for any person knowingly or wilfully to advocate, etc., the desirability, etc., of overthrowing any government in the United States by force or violence or to organize any society of persons who teach such overthrow. Holding that the power of Congress to protect the Government is beyond question, the Court said: "The question with which we are concerned here is not whether Congress has such power, but whether the means which it has employed conflict with the First and Fifth Amendments to the Constitution." [15] It held that the Government need not wait "until the putsch is about to be executed"; [16] that, if the Government is aware that a group aiming at its overthrow is attempting to indoctrinate its members and to commit them to a course whereby they will strike when the leaders feel the circumstances permit, action by the Government is required.

[16] Id. at 509.

An attempt to overthrow the Government by force, the Court held, even though doomed from the outset, is a sufficient evil for Congress to prevent, and a conspiracy to advocate, as distinguished from the advocacy itself, can be constitutionally restrained, because the existence of the conspiracy creates the danger.

Moreover, the right to unimpeded expression of views does not apply to unimpeded conduct. That the protection which surrounds speech does not encompass action is well established. Thomas v. Collins [17] is a sufficient citation. Thomas had been committed for contempt for violating an order of a Texas court. Texas by statute required labor union organizers to secure organizers' cards before soliciting members. A mass meeting had been arranged in a campaign to organize employees at a plant near Houston. Thomas was to address the meeting. He was served with an order of the court, which mentioned the prospective speech and enjoined him from soliciting memberships without an organizer's card. The Supreme Court held that "a requirement that one must register before he undertakes to make a public speech to enlist support for a lawful movement is quite incompatible with the requirements of the First Amendment." [18] But the Court went on to say:

> "Once the speaker goes further, however, and engages in conduct which amounts to more than the right of free discussion comprehends, as when he undertakes the collection of funds or securing subscriptions, he enters a realm where a reasonable registration or identification requirement may be imposed." [19]

If the mere solicitation of funds for a lawful cause is sufficient conduct to validate the restrictive police power of a state, operation to achieve the objectives of a movement such as this statute describes is conduct sufficient to invoke federal regulatory power.

Clearly the aim of the statute before us is at action and conduct rather than at mere speech and assembly. A purpose to establish a totalitarian dictatorship, posited in paragraph (1) of Section 2 of the Act,[20] is itself a program of action rather than of mere discussion. Surely no one can be naive enough to believe that such a cataclysmic change in the system of government in this country could be accomplished without action as distinguished from words. And the terms used in paragraph (1) of Section 2 to describe the means adopted by the world Communist movement—infiltration into other groups, espionage, sabotage, terrorism—are terms of action. It is a program of action; it involves the Government. It can be met with action by the Government.

The opinions in American Communications Ass'n v. Douds [21] are pertinent. That case concerned paragraph 9(h) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended,[22] which denied the privileges of the National Labor Relations Board to labor organizations unless each officer filed an affidavit that he was not a member of the Communist Party. Sustaining the constitutionality of the provision, the Supreme Court held, inter alia, that Congress has power to protect interstate commerce; that Congress had before it a mass of material which tended to show that Communists had infiltrated union organizations to make them a device by which commerce might be disrupted; that the remedy provided bore a reasonable relation to the evil which the statute was designed to reach; that Congress might reasonably find that Communists, unlike members of other political parties, represent a continuing danger of disruptive political strikes; that Congress, not the courts, is primarily charged with the determination of the need for regulation of activities affecting interstate commerce; that the legislative judgment that interstate commerce must be protected from a continuing threat of unlawful strikes is a permissible one; that the Act does not suppress belief nor prohibit those who hold beliefs from engaging in any above-board activity; and that the answer to the implication that if the statute were upheld the power of government over beliefs would be as unlimited as its power over conduct, is that that result does not follow "while this Court sits". The concurring opinions throw much light upon the problem.

It seems clear to us that, if Congress, in order to protect interstate commerce, can validly deny the privileges of union office to members of the Communist Party because of the program of that Party, it can, in order to protect the Government itself, impose restrictions upon adherents of a world Communist movement such as that described in this statute.

So we are of opinion that the field in which this statute lies is one in which Congress can impose restrictions upon First Amendment rights, and that the specific evil at which the statute is aimed is one which justifies remedial steps even though such steps are restrictions upon those rights. There remains the question whether the statutory restrictions go beyond the bounds permitted to remedies for the evil here under attack. We postpone that discussion for the moment. See VI hereinafter.

IV

Our next consideration is the protection of the Fifth Amendment. Two clauses are involved in the argument—the protections against being compelled to be a witness against oneself and against being deprived of liberty or property without due process of law.

It is said that the revelation of the membership list, required upon registration, would tend to incriminate the members under the Smith Act,[23] and that the revelation would therefore be in violation of the privilege against self-incrimination. But the membership records of an organization are not protected by the privilege. If a grand jury subpoenaed the membership roll of the Party, the custodian of the list, whether or not he was an officer or member, would be compelled to produce. This is made amply clear by United States v. White.[24] In that case a grand jury had subpoenaed an official of a labor union to produce certain union records. He declined upon the ground that they might tend to incriminate the union or himself as an officer or individually. He based his claim upon a statute which made it a crime to induce any person employed in certain work to "kickback" part of his compensation. The Supreme Court held that the privilege did not apply. It held, first, that the privilege is essentially a personal one, applying to natural individuals only. It then held that the papers which the privilege protects must be the private property of the person claiming the privilege, or at least in his possession in a purely personal capacity, and that individuals acting as representatives of a collective group are not exercising personal rights. The Court said it was unnecessary to determine whether the official was or was not a member of the union, because in any event he could not invoke the privilege. The decision and the opinion apply to the present case. If labor union records are not subject to the privilege in order to protect union members from criminal prosecution, the records of a Communist-action organization, as that term is defined in Section 3 of this statute, are not within the protection. The records of a political party are more "impersonal" than are the records of a labor union.

That the records of the Communist Party are covered by the ruling in the White case is established by Rogers v. United States.[25]

The Party argues that the registration provisions of the statute before us do not call for the production of books or records but require the preparation and submission of a registration statement. That statement must contain (Section 7(d)) the name and address of the organization, the names and last-known addresses of the officers and members, an accounting of moneys received and expended, and, in the cases of officers and members who are known by more than one name, such other names. The Party says that such a statement is protected by the privilege even though books and records are not. But membership lists and accountings for money furnished by an organization are reproductions of or extracts from organization records. And if the records can be compelled oral testimony "auxiliary to the production" can be compelled.[26] Whether such records are kept formally or informally is immaterial. No additional explanatory testimony is required by this statute.

Moreover Congress could require Communist-action organizations to keep membership lists and accounting records. The opinion in Bryant v. Zimmerman[27] establishes that proposition. The provisions of this statute in effect make such a requirement. The Government requires many organizations to keep records. For example, it required all business houses to keep price records when prices were under Government control. To say that a Communist-action organization, as that term is defined in this statute, could not be required to keep records of its membership and its moneys is wholly untenable in our view. If these are matters of which organization records could be required, they fall squarely within the rule in the White case, supra.[28] As to a registration statement we think the White case applies.

Under the White case no privilege exists as to organization records—even for the individual who produces and signs them. But, even if the White case did not apply, the privilege would protect only the person called upon to sign or swear to the statement, and would protect him only in so far as his own name was involved. The privilege would not protect all members against one person's swearing that they are members, or protect one person against swearing that persons other than himself are members.[29]

[29] It might be urged that even if a person has no privilege against revealing his own membership he has a privilege against revealing the names of other members, since the

We assume for a moment, arguendo, that the White case does not apply here. We have, then, the problem of the individual who is required to sign the organization registration statement as an executive official of the Party. See Section 7(h) of the statute. By that act alone, even if he were to omit his own name from the list, he would be admitting that he is a member and an officer of the Party. We must make definite the question here posed. It is whether an order directing an organization to register is invalid because the officer who would be required to sign the registration statement would thereby be admitting a membership which might be a basis for a prosecution against him.

The statute provides (Section 4(f)) that the fact of a registration cannot be admitted in evidence in any criminal proceeding and that mere membership in a registered organization is not a violation of any criminal statute. No person called upon to sign is in danger of a prosecution which depends upon the bare fact of registration. So the protection here discussed is against the fringe effects (e.g., a lead to evidence of some offense not premised upon mere membership) of signing the statement.

Several considerations are pertinent. In the first place the privilege against self-incrimination is a privilege which must be explicitly claimed. This rule has been firmly established.[30] We are urged to create an exception of law for the present case, but we see no justification for doing so. Then, since the privilege must be claimed in order to bring it into play, it is by no means inevitable that a conflict would ensue between this order for registration and the privilege clause. We do not know as of now that the executive officers of the Party would claim the privilege; they might not. The only incriminatory results flowing from the act of signing would be corollaries to the fact of membership in the Party. This record shows that the Chairman and the Executive Secretary of the Party have never attempted to conceal their membership or their places of leadership. On the contrary they have proclaimed it often and publicly, both in writing and in speaking. We have no basis for assuming that they would claim protection against a mere revelation of their membership.

It is suggested to us that a statute or administrative order which places an individual in a position where he must claim his privilege in order to avoid incriminating himself is invalid. It is said claiming the privilege is incriminatory and so to force a person to claim the privilege is to force him to incriminate himself. We think the suggestion is not sound. One does not admit guilt by claiming the privilege; he merely says that an answer would tend to incriminate him, which means that it might involve him in a criminal proceeding.[31] Moreover, if the suggestion were good law, many avenues of legitimate inquiry would be shut off. For example, the statutes imposing punishment for refusal to answer questions would be invalid, because they compel people to claim the privilege.

In the second place it is by no means certain that all the executive officers of our petitioner Party have any privilege in respect to the fact of their membership in the Party. The precise provision of the Constitution is that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in a criminal proceeding.[32] Practical considerations, obvious on the face of things, caused the courts to extend that language from its literal content to cover any compulsion to speak where the result would tend to incriminate. But an essential element in the latter doctrine is that the spoken matter would reveal or disclose something, or supply a needed confirmation of something suspected or only partly known. This is a note clearly struck in the cases dealing with the subject.[33] The Supreme Court said in the Rogers case:[34] "Since the privilege against self-incrimination presupposes a real danger of legal detriment arising from the disclosure, petitioner cannot invoke the privilege where response to the specific question in issue here would not further incriminate her."

The constitutional provision is not an empty legalism. It is a realistic barrier between the obligation of a citizen to give evidence and the injustice of inquisition by force. It was designed to achieve a precious protection. But, when it has no factual purpose under given circumstances, no reason exists for its application. If a required word does not in fact tend to incriminate the compelled witness, to interpose the barrier to the otherwise proper process of the law would be to make a mockery of a valued instrument. We turn to the facts before us. Some of these executive officials have been convicted and have served their sentences under the Smith Act, because they organized the Party.[35] Some of them, as we have said, have many times in public print and places asserted membership in the Party. Two members of the National Committee of the Party came forward voluntarily and testified in the proceeding at bar, stating that they are members. In no event could one of these persons be compelled to take the stand as a witness against himself in a criminal case; but in a non-criminal proceeding could he be required to state something which would not in actual fact be a valuable link in a prosecution against him? We do not decide the point, but we note in connection with the suggestion now under discussion that another revelation of the membership in the Party of some of its executive officials may not constitute any real danger of legal detriment to them or tend further to incriminate them. Those officials of the Party may not now have a privilege in respect to their Party membership.

In the next place we do not know and cannot assume what the Attorney General might do under the new Immunity Statute[36] if an executive officer of an organization called upon to sign an organization registration statement had a valid right to the privilege and claimed it. Under that statute the courts have broad powers to grant immunity, upon application of the Attorney General, in proceedings before them involving violations of the statute here involved. We do not decide the validity or meaning of the Immunity Statute, but we note the possibility that under this new act a person under compulsion to sign a statement which would tend to incriminate him might be granted immunity from prosecution.

In the next place, even if the suggestion under discussion were true, i.e., even if one or all executive officials of an organization validly invoked the privilege, so that no one could be compelled to sign the registration, the utmost result would be that the statute and order would be unenforceable. We think they could not be held to be invalid merely because they might conceivably be unenforceable in a given case. The problem of the practicality of enforcement arises when enforcement efforts are made.

The foregoing considerations lead us to a clear conclusion upon the point. We have before us an order addressed to an organization as such; it is not addressed to any individual. We conclude that neither the statute nor the order requiring an organization to register can be held invalid because of the possibility that the person or persons required to sign on behalf of the organization might be called upon to claim a privilege against self-incrimination, or that such a claim if made would be sustained, or that an application for immunity would not be made or would not be validly granted, or that the statute or order might not be enforceable.

Boyd v. United States[37] is urged upon us as contrary to the foregoing views. But we do not so read that case. In the first place it dealt with personal, private papers, and the Court made that fact a key to the decision. The production of private papers and the production of organization papers "differ toto coelo", the Court said. In later cases the Court has emphasized that feature of the Boyd case.[38] In the second place the statute in that case authorized the compulsory production directly for use in a forfeiture case under a criminal statute. In the case before us, as we have sufficiently noted, the revealed membership is not per se a violation of any criminal statute, and the fact of the registration cannot be shown in evidence in any criminal case. We think the Boyd case is not in point here.

The information required on a registration statement as to members with more than one name poses a slightly different problem. In so far as the other names appear on organization records, they are covered by the foregoing. In so far as they are names of persons other than the person signing the statement, they have no privilege in his hands. Whether an individual known by several names, and called upon to sign or swear to a registration statement, is privileged to refuse to reveal his own other names is not before us; decision upon it must await the happening and a claim of the privilege.

United States v. Daisart Sportswear,[39] relied on by the Party, does not apply to the problem before us. It concerned the one individual who testified under compulsion and who claimed immunity.

The Party says the requirement of Section 8 of the statute that an individual member register himself as a member violates the protection against self-incrimination and so invalidates the statute. This section provides that an individual member must register himself as a member if an organization finally ordered to register fails to do so, or if upon registering and filing its membership list the organization fails to include the member's name. The section operates when an organization does not register or fails to register accurately. It is an alternate, rather than an attachment, to the registration of the organization. As such it poses a separate and independent problem from that posed by the requirement for organization registration. To reach the problem posed under Section 8 we would have to assume that the Party will not register if it is finally ordered to do so, or that if it registers its membership list will be incomplete. But we cannot make such assumptions. An opinion based upon them would be merely an advisory opinion, which we have no power to render. We have before us only an order requiring the organization to register. Section 8 is separable; if it were held to be invalid its fall would not affect organization registration; it is not before us; its validity is not involved in the order here under review. We do not consider any problems which might be posed by it.

V

The due process of law clause is the basis for two contentions by the Party. The first is that the application of the sanctions to members of a registered organization deprives those members of rights and privileges solely because of their membership in an organization, and that this violates due process. The second contention is that the statute violates procedural due process.

We come first to the sanctions imposed upon members respecting Government and defense facility employment (Section 5(a)(1)) and applications for passports (Section 6). One must note that the condition upon which these sanctions apply is membership; it is not a mere listing as a member in a registration statement. One of the two provisions refers to "any member of such organization, with knowledge or notice that such organization is so registered or that such order has become final"; the other section contains similar language. Membership in an organization is of course a fact, and if one is actually a member he knows it. The statute before us requires that before these sanctions apply a member must have "knowledge or notice" that the organization has registered or been finally ordered to register. If the organization has registered as a Communist-action organization without an order to do so, it has voluntarily agreed that it is such an organization. If a final order has been entered against it, its nature as such an organization has been determined by full administrative proceedings, fully reviewed by the courts. So notice or knowledge of registration carries knowledge or notice of the nature of the organization; its nature has been either admitted or established. The statute provides for notice to every listed member of a registered organization, and it is to that notice that the statute here refers. If a member has either notice of the registration or knowledge of it through some other means, the sanctions apply to him. Thus there are three requisites for application of the sanctions to members: (1) The person must be a member; (2) the organization must be registered or finally ordered to register; and (3) the person must have knowledge or notice of the registration or order.

There is no novelty in the application of civil prohibitions to members of organizations. For example, an officer, director or employee of a stock investment house cannot be an officer, director or employee of any Federal reserve bank;[40] and a member of one political party cannot become a member of the Federal Communications [40] 48 STAT. 194 (1933), as amended, 12 U.S.C.A. § 78.

Commission if a majority of that Commission are already members of that party.[41]

That a sanction may be imposed upon members of an organization which advocates the overthrow of the Government by force is established by Adler v. Board of Education[42] and Wieman v. Updegraff.[43] In the Adler case the Supreme Court held:

> "Membership in a listed organization found to be within the statute and known by the member to be within the statute is a legislative finding that the member by his membership supports the thing the organization stands for, namely, the overthrow of government by unlawful means. We cannot say that such a finding is contrary to fact or that 'generality of experience' points to a different conclusion. Disqualification follows therefore as a reasonable presumption from such membership and support." [44]

In the Wieman case an Oklahoma statute required state employees to take an oath that the affiant was not affiliated with any agency, etc., officially determined by the United States Attorney General to be a subversive organization. The Supreme Court held the statute invalid. The Court distinguished Garner v. Los Angeles Board,[45] the Adler case, and Gerende v. Election Board,[46] on the grounds that in each of those cases knowledge on the part of the employee was implicitly or explicitly required. In Wieman the Court found that the oath would exclude persons solely on the basis of organizational membership regardless of their knowledge concerning the organization. It said: "Indiscriminate classification of innocent with knowing activity must fall as an assertion of arbitrary power." [47]

In Bryant v. Zimmerman, supra, the Supreme Court upheld the validity of a requirement that certain organizations report their membership lists against an attack based upon the due process clause. The discussion is apt here.

We think the requirement in this statute that a member have knowledge or notice of the registration of the organization, which means that he has knowledge or notice of the nature of the organization, before these sanctions apply to him, satisfies the due process clause so that sanctions could be premised upon membership under the doctrine of the Adler and similar cases.

A special argument is made by the Party in respect to the denial of passports by Government officers under Section 6(b). That section provides that officials shall not issue a passport to an individual if they know the individual is a member of a registered Communist-action organization or if they have reason to believe the individual is a member of such an organization. The latter clause gives rise to the problem. Under it an official may deny the passport if he merely "ha[s] reason to believe". If that provision is valid, knowledge on the part of the individual as to the nature of the organization to which he is supposed to belong would not be a requisite for denial of the passport. We do not pass upon the point, because such a situation is not before us; it does not depend upon registration but upon considerations not necessarily even factual. The provision is severable.

[47] Supra, 344 U.S. at 191.

In this part of its argument the Party groups with the sanctions just discussed the penalty provided by Section 15(a)(2) for individuals who fail to comply with an individual's obligation to register. But such a penalty does not flow from organization registration; it is an alternate provision, not before us. We do not consider it.

We postpone to Part VI of this opinion consideration of the provisions relating to aliens and denaturalization.

We have next the question of procedural due process of law. This general question involves several specific questions. Is procedural due process of law afforded: (1) An organization from which registration is demanded? (2) An organization faced with sanctions to be imposed upon it because it is registered? (3) An individual listed, or proposed to be listed, as a member of a registered organization? (4) An individual threatened with sanctions because of membership in a registered organization? (5) An individual threatened with criminal prosecution by reason of membership in a Communist-action organization?

We have already noted that the provision for the registration of an organization, which involves a determination of its nature, complies with procedural due process. In so far as sanctions—identification of mail and broadcasts and denial of tax benefits—imposed upon an organization, registered or ordered to register, are concerned, the due process afforded by the procedure required for compulsory registration constitutes due process as to the results inherent in the registration and applicable to the registering organization as an organization. In so far as the listing of a name of an individual is concerned, the statute contains detailed provisions whereby one who has been listed erroneously or who leaves the organization can secure the removal of his name from the list before the list is made public. It provides for an individual notice of a listing (Section 7(g)), an application to the Attorney General (Section 13(b)), an appeal to the Subversive Activities Control Board (Section 7(g) and Section 13(b)), and review by the courts (Section 14). In so far as the rights of a person who denies the fact of membership are concerned, not only the foregoing procedure in respect to the listing but all other procedures ordinarily open to a person asserting such a denial are left open in this statute.[48] This statute does not negate any procedural rights otherwise available to a person entering upon a factual controversy. We do not attempt to determine here the validity of the administrative procedures ordinarily open to Government employees and to applicants for passports. This statute leaves all such procedures available for the determination of a disputed claim that a person is a member of a registered organization. Neither the Lloyd-LaFollette Act,[49] which protects Government employees, nor the Secretary of State's procedural passport regulations[50] are repealed or amended by this Act. This statute itself imposes no restriction upon procedural due process. Whether some other statute or regulation does so is not now before us. Moreover the courts are open

[48] The Act as originally passed provided (Sections 5(c) and 6(c)) that a person who is listed on a membership list in a registration statement and who inaugurates a contest against such listing should not be deemed to be a member of an organization for purposes of the sanctions during the period of the contest and until he has lost and his name has been published as a member. Those provisions were repealed by Section 7(c) of the Communist Control Act of 1954, 68 STAT. 775, 778, and so one who is a member is subject to the sanctions without the interval of immunity. But the presence of such an immunity period is not a due process requirement. Due process is afforded if a person has full opportunity to get off a list and full opportunity to prove he is not a member if he is asserted to be one and thus liable to sanctions or penalties.

for an ousted Government employee,[51] and would be open to a person denied a passport under the requirement of this statute. The reviewability of the State Department's denial of a passport in ordinary cases is a disputed question[52] because of the official discretion involved. The statute before us neither adds to nor detracts from that general reviewability. But, certainly, so far as a denial might be premised upon a mandatory requirement of this statute, e.g., Section 6, the courts would be open for review of the action under the statute. In so far as due process is required preliminary to any damage or inconvenience caused by the publication of a listing of a person's name as a member, the statute protects him from publicity until he has exhausted the process, already described, available to test the presence of his name on the list. In so far as criminal prosecutions are concerned, the statute (Section 4(f)) provides: "Neither the holding of office nor membership in any Communist organization by any person shall constitute per se a violation of * * * any * * * criminal statute. The fact of the registration of any person * * * as an officer or member of any Communist organization shall not be received in evidence against such person in any prosecution * * * for any alleged violation of any * * * criminal statute."

Thus it seems to us that procedural due process is afforded in each of the several situations presented to us for consideration in this respect.

VI

We come now to examine severally, in respects not already discussed, the restrictions (or so-called "sanctions") imposed by the statute upon registered organizations and their members. This includes the question whether each sanction is reasonably related to the substantive evil at which Congress was aiming, a pertinent inquiry under the First Amendment. See III hereinabove.

When a Communist-action organization is registered the following consequences ensue: (1) No member with knowledge or notice of the registration can have nonelective Government employment or employment in a defense facility (Section 5); (2) no member can obtain a passport (Section 6); (3) organization mail and broadcasts must be identified as originating with a Communist organization (Section 10); (4) alien members are excludable, deportable, and ineligible for naturalization (Sections 22 and 25);[53] (5) tax deductions and exemptions are withdrawn (Section 11); and (6) certain members are subject to denaturalization (Section 25).[54]

Preliminarily we note that the requirement for registration in and of itself presents no difficulty. It is no more than we customarily require of many organizations, such as lobbyists[55] and foreign agents,[56] and even of doctors, lawyers, restaurants and barbers, who are required to register and obtain licenses. The requirement for an accounting of moneys received and expended is no more than is required of any political party,[57] and since petitioner claims to be a political party we see no invalidity in the application to it of such a requirement. The requirement that a political organization list its members is similar to the customary requirement in the states that persons participating in the activities of a political party, such as primaries, conventions, etc., register publicly as members.

The provisions respecting employment by the Government are in Section 5 of the statute. Congress has forbidden political activity to Government employees, and the Supreme Court has sustained the enactment.[58] The power in this respect as it concerns members of Communist organizations was specifically sustained in Adler v. Board of Education, supra, as to the public schools. The general power over executive employees was discussed at length in Bailey v. Richardson.[59]

The restrictions upon Government employment are directly related to the substantive evil at which Congress was aiming in this statute. Infiltration of government by world Communist adherents is one of the specified evils recited by the Congress, and certainly a prohibition of Government employment to such adherents is a direct attack upon that evil. Indeed we can think of no more direct relationship than that which would exist between the objectives of the world Communist movement, as it is described in this statute, and the occupation of Government positions by members of a Communist-action organization.

We think the considerations which validate power to forbid Government employment likewise support the power to forbid defense facility employment. The latter employment is sensitive business, and it would be sheer folly to say that the Government cannot close the gates of such facilities against those who are knowingly members of organizations under the dominion of a foreign government.

The provision respecting passports is in Section 6 of the statute. A passport is addressed to foreign governments and requests for the holder "permission to come and go as well as lawful aid and protection."[60] An American passport, says Hackworth,[61] "indicates that it is the right of the bearer to receive the protection and good offices of American diplomatic and consular officers abroad and requests on the part of the Government of the United States that the officials of foreign governments permit the bearer to travel or sojourn in their territories and in case of need to give him all lawful aid and protection." Only rudimentary reasoning is necessary to a conclusion that the Government may validly decline to confer its diplomatic protection upon, and to request foreign governments to give aid and protection to, a member of an organization operating primarily to achieve the objectives of a world movement such as the Communist movement is defined to be in the statute. Surely a government owes no duty of protection to those who, dominated by a foreign organization, seek its overthrow. Congress can narrow the scope of the passport privilege, so long as the limitation is reasonable.

Under current rules a person must have a passport in order to leave the United States to go outside this hemisphere.[62] It is urged that that is a restriction upon liberty and is without due process because unrelated to the congressional purpose. But we need not, and do not, enter upon consideration of that question, because, whatever else a passport may validly do, it serves the purposes enumerated by Hackworth, supra, and that feature is enough to support denial. We think this provision is directly related to the congressional purpose in this statute and is otherwise valid.

The provision respecting the identification of mail and broadcasts (Section 10) applies to a registered organization, not to the individual members as such. It requires the mail of such an organization to bear the label "Disseminated by ————, a Communist organization". It requires similar identification of broadcasts. No censorship of content is imposed. Congress has frequently imposed limitations upon the use of the mails[63] and on broadcasting.[64] All paid broadcasting must be identified by the name of the person paying for it.[65] So far as our present petitioner is concerned, there seems little to choose between identification as "The Communist Party", as it would be identified without the statute here involved, and
